All is not peace in the tents of the war tariffites. In Massachusetts so long a protection stronghold, petitions are being numerously signed, asking congress "to place upon the free list the largest possible number of commodities used as raw materials by the manufacturing industries of the country" and the Boston Advertiser is moved to threaten that the manufacturers of scoalled raw materials will thrust the knife as deeply into New England industries as New England shall thrust it into theirs." This says as plainly as words can, that the protected are a mutual association for the purpose of plundering the consumer, and that if any member of the association kicks the concern shall be broken up. Tariff reformers will welcome the prospect of such a warfare. "When rogues fall out," etc.—Detroit Free Press.

We are able this week to present to our readers one of the most able articles on the tariff question that we have ever seen. It was written by Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier Journal, and was published first in Harper's Magazine for January. In this article, which is tection. The farmers of Michigan can sell their wool at twenty cents a pound, and then buy it back at fifty cents a pound, thanks to protection, is like the Octopus of fable—it gently fans its sleeping victim while it sucks its life blood away.—T. S. Hasselt in Grand Rapids Leader.

The Farmer and Prices.

The burden of the song of the protectionists to the farmer is that there has been a decline in the price of wool since the reduction of the tariff in 1883; that the number of sheep in the country has declined, and that a restriction of the wool tariff of 1887 is necessary to revive the wool industry. In the appeals it is assumed that the reduction in price has been consequent upon the reduction of the tariff, although the importations of wool of descriptions which come into competition with American wool have not been exceptionally large since the reduction of the tariff—and were larger in some previous years when the tariff of 1867 was in full operation—and although the reduction in the tariff was equivalent on an average to less than three cents per pound on clothing and combing wools.

There are other products besides wool which have declined in price since the reduction of the wool tariff in 1883, and the farmer will soon find it very profitable, in drawing a contrast between his situation now and what it was in 1883, to take note of these.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, the American farmer sold for export 166,385,828 bushels of wheat. The value of this stand of the pyrex whence it was shipped to foreign countries was $119,875,341. During the year ending June 30, 1887, the quantity of wheat exported from the United States was 103,971,045 bushels, the value of which was $89,716,481, or $29,000,000 less than the value of the wheat exported in the year ending June 30, 1883. There was a reduction of barely one twenty-fifth in quantity, but a shrinkage of almost exactly one-fourth in price.

During the year ended June 30, 1883, 9,205,614 barrels of flour were exported, valued at $54,824,459, and while the quantity of flour exported for the year ending June 30, 1887, was one fourth larger, or 11,516,413 barrels, the export value of the larger quantity was less by nearly $8,000,000 or $23,291,982.

Reducing the flour to wheat at the rate of one to five, the farmers of the United states sent abroad during the year ending June 30, 1883, 152,060,000 bushels of wheat, worth at the point of export $175,000,000. During the year ended June 30, 1887, they sent 129,000,000 bushels, worth $145,000,000. That is, they had to sell more of their wheat abroad, but for a good deal less money, the difference being the pretty sum of $32,000,000.

During the year ended June 30, 1883, the American farmer sent to foreign markets 40,598,825 bushels of Indian corn. During the year ending June 30, 1887, they sent almost precisely the same quantity, or 40,307,202, but the export value of the former was $27,756,082, of the latter only $19,347,361—a shrinkage of $8,400,000.

Of the three items of breadstuffs above enumerated there was no shrinkage in the quantity reported, but there was a shrinkage in the value of over $40,000,000.

Of bacon and hams the United states sent abroad for sale during the year ending June 30, 1883, a total of 340,238,670 pounds. The quantity sent abroad during the year ending June 30, 1887 was 419,922,955 pounds, or twenty-three per cent more. The export value of the former quantity was $38,155,952; of the latter, $33,314,570, nearly $5,000,000 less. Of pork the figures for 1883 are: Quantity, 62,116,392 pounds, value, $6,192,268. For 1887 they are: Quantity, 86,893,297 pounds; value, $8,641,357. Much more pork; fewer shillings. In lard the comparison is as follows: 1883, 224,718,474 pounds; valued at $26,618,048; 188", 221,533,746 pounds valued at $22,703,921. Nearly one hundred million pounds more lard, nearly $4,000,000 less money for the larger quantity. Of beef about 122,000,000, were sent abroad during the year ended June 30, 1883; value over $12,000,000. In 1887 the quantity was 120,000,000 pounds; value, $9,200,000. We sent abroad during 1883, 38,8 0,098 pounds of tallow, valued at $3,248,749. In 1887 a larger quantity by 24,000,000 pounds was worth $400,000 less.

It will be seen that much larger quantities of provisions were sent abroad during the year ended June 30, 1887, than during the year ended June 30, 1883, but they brought the farmer less by $14,000,000 or $15,000,000.

A large proportion of the produce of the American farmer must find a market abroad. It is brought into competition with the product of the cheapest kind of labor. The farmer sees the price of his produce steadily fall, and his income diminishing. The fixed charges upon his farm suffer no diminution, and he has less with which to meet them, to provide the necessary implements and tools for his use, and to supply his family with clothing, furniture, and the necessaries of life. He is advised by the protectionists, however, not to take any steps to bring down the price of the things he has to buy, but to depend on the "great American system of protection" to do that for him. He is told that it is to his profit to have a tariff tax of $17 per ton on steel rails, as, by costing the railroads more to lay their tracks, it will cheapen transportation for him. He is asked to maintain a heavy and excessive duty, one out of all proportion to the difference in the labor cost, on sources of articles that are essential to him. He must sell his products at bottom prices in competition with the whole world, but he is told that it is not to his interest to buy on anything like even terms with his competitors.—Free Press.

More About That Load of Hay

Something will have to be done, for the grand old party's load of hay has tipped over, and the grand old party itself is under the hay.—Chicago News.

The g. o. p. has crawled out, righted the load again and is taking it right along to a good home market. —Grand Traverse Herald.

Just so. Mr. Herald, your g. o. p. had on, in 1884 a load of 7,475. In 1886 your load got into a mire and lost 5,000. Now, in the cold winter of 1888, on St. Valentine's day, you tipped over and lost 2,000 more. You were too weak to right the load, but you righted the old broken wagon and drove off with a little jag. Yes, sir, you have lost seventeen-eighteenths, or 7,003 of your load of hay, and now you can carry what is left of it on a wheelbarrow; and further more, the strong democratic jag-wagon has got your lost hay carefully loaded and will soon relieve you of your wheelbarrow jag.—Traverse Eagle.

The Pansy.

The Pansy for March has come. For once let us tell what is in it. Pansy's story on the Golden texts for the month. Pansy's other story, Up Garret. Margaret Sidney's story The old Brimmer Place. Mrs. Archibald's story of a disappointed girl. A cat story. Mrs. Livingston's pansy society story. A sea story. Several missionary sketches. Life in Indian School at Carlisle. Baby's corner. Pictures and music for two. A lot of letters to Pansy from boys and girls. And a Queer Story.

The "Barn Stormers" of Old.

There was another grade below even the present books—the barn stormers, not that class known by the same name today, but men and women who tramped from town to town, carrying their properties and scenery and costumes on their backs. These companies would erect a stage on beer barrels or boxes in an old barn or shed—anything that effected an inclosure with a door at which decisions could be taken. Thespians included some actors of very marked talent, who later obtained recognition. The late Charles Pinnkett, one of the oldest of the English managers, was authority for the statement that even Gustavus Von Brooke traveled on foot, bearing a load of costumes, etc., that would weigh down an ordinary shipping porter now. All alike played in the legitimate and blood and thunder. The latter really had its origin in such old plays as the "Floating Beacon," "George Barnwell," and "The Murder of Maria Martin."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mrs. Cleveland's Voice.

A Washington correspondent, who recently attended Dr. Sunderland's church, and sat in a pew directly in front of the president, says: "I sat near Mrs. Cleveland, and during the singing I could hear her pure, fresh voice joining in every hymn that was sung. She has a trained soprano, which she uses without affectation, and apparently with real enjoyment, uttering each word distinctly, so that the song becomes a recital."—New York World.

The Mustiness Disappearing

The Atlantic Boston, of Boston, says that the mustiness are rapidly disappearing, and that undoubtedly mustiness is rare in the southern cities and scarce in the country. One reason is that the real people are beginning to show that they do not respect the mustiness of mulatto children, and that they are depriving them of social privileges.—Exchange.

Erroneous.

"Is that you, Charley?"

It was a beautiful night and the soft rays of the moon fell about the fair form of the speaker like a benediction.

The young man had come quietly from the gate and the slight noise he made in ascending the steps attracted the girl's attention.

"Great heaven!" he muttered to himself, "how I love that maiden."

"Is that you, Charley?" she repeated, in a low, sweet tone. "Pa is gone and you can. Draw a chair from' the parlor; it is lovely here in the moonlight."

But, alas! it wasn't Charley, it was George, and the cold wind whistled through his whiskers.—Life.

Returning Letters Was All Nonsense.

A Somerset business man not long since had occasion to write to a gentleman who evidently had few correspondents. The envelope had the usual "return in ten days, —, Somerset, Ky.," on it. In about ten days the letter came back to him, seemingly by a swarming note, the writer saying that he had returned the letter according to the request on the envelope, though he "didn't see why he was so all fired particular about having it sent back."—Somerset (Ky.) Republican.

A Long Felt Want.

American on European—I understand you are willing to sell your Wild West show.

Buffalo Bill—I am willing enough, but the Indians object.

"Why so?"

"I don't know; superstition, I suppose. They say they will never be bought."

"Okay, Bill, take those Indians back to New York and we'll elect them aldermen."—Omaha World.

Too True, Too True!

The ardent love of the Republican party for the Union soldier is strictly confined to veterans of the Republican party; for the same rule that southerners who turn Republicans are eligible for anything, however personally unfit, while those who remain Democrats are available for no appointment, however well qualified they may be.—New York Star.

Too True, Too True.

Among the Breen voters was Indian Chief Pouy, over one hundred years old, who walked four miles across the ice from Garden island to St. James to cast his vote. Many of the voters had to walk from ten to fifteen miles through drifts with the thermometer fifteen degrees below zero to cast votes.—Traverse Eagle.

David Ward's shrewdness has often been narrated, and he is said to be one of the old dogs who is full of new tricks. It is claimed that when he saw a butter dish factory erected at Manistee, Mich., he calculated upon the amount of timber that industry would require, and quietly bought all the adjacent timber he could get, and the owners of the factory will be compelled to buy from him at a good price.

THE RAILROAD.

Encouraging Prospects for its Early Completion.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Detroit, Charlevoix & Escanaba railroad company was held yesterday at the general office in Charlevoix, more than three-fourths of the entire stock being represented.

The old board of directors were re-elected by the stockholders, with the exception that F. W. Mayne was elected to take the place of Wm. Pipp, who could no longer act in that capacity. The board of directors is composed of the following named gentlemen: R. M. Cherrie and E. A. Lewis, of Ironton; John Nicholls, F. J. Meech, J. Milo Eaton, A. D. Cruickshank, J. R. Dixon, and F. W. Mayne, of Charlevoix; Roswell Leavitt of Bellaire; and A. A. Bleazby and A. G. Drake, of Kalkaska.

The reports of the several officers were received with entire satisfaction. President Cherrie's report of the work already accomplished, and the early pushing forward of the work to the completion of the road, fully confirms what we have already published in relation to the same. Survey maps and profile of the entire route between Kalkaska and Mackinaw City have been made, and approved by the commissioner of railroads, including the crossings at Kalkaska and Petoskey. Also that grading and gravelling will be commenced at an early date and pushed to completion as soon as possible.

After the adjournment of the meeting of the stockholders, the directors re-elected the officers as follows:

President—R. M. Cherrie.
Vice President—A. A. Bleazby.
Secretary—J. Milo Eaton.
Treasurer—F. J. Meech.
Attorney—A. D. Cruickshank.
Executive Committee—John Nicholls, A. D. Cruickshank, and A. G. Drake.

President Cherrie will go to New York again this week to further the interests of the road.

Considering the magnitude of this enterprise, we have reason to congratulate ourselves for the rapid progress that has already been made, and that we now have so promising an outlook for a railroad.

Secretary Eaton has received many letters from outside parties in relation to the building and the finance of the road, which shows that others than those in this vicinity are interested in this enterprise, and are ready to assist in carrying it forward.

Seymour Bros.' New Passenger Boat.

Advices direct from Seymour Bros., of Manistee, fully confirm the rumor that they intend putting a new passenger steamer on the route between Chicago and northern Michigan. The contract calls for the boat to be ready to sail April 1. The machinery is now being placed, and her cabin is being finished. The route will be between Chicago and Harbor Springs, two round trips a week, stopping at Ludington, Manistee, Frankfort, Leland, Traverse City, Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, and Petoskey. Seymour Brothers write that the new boat will be here just as soon as the ice will permit. This boat making two trips per week, in addition to our other boats, will give Charlevoix excellent accommodations.

Burgess, Mar. 5.—Mrs. Hale was visiting her friends in Hayes part of last week.

At the special meeting of school district No. 4, they voted to bond the district for $200, to build a new school house.

Mr. Samuel Solter has a brother visiting him. He came from the south part of the state near Grand Rapids.

Thos. Murray and wife, who have been visiting in the south part of the state returned home one day last week.

Mrs. Geo. Scott returned from the south part of the state where she was called by the last illness and death of her mother.

Wilson.

March 6.—M. P. quarterly meeting on Saturday and Sunday last.

Thermometer went down 15° on Sunday and 10° on Monday morning.

Elder Tracy, wife and child stayed in this vicinity on Saturday night.

Mr. Jason Lewis and family of Advance are visiting in this vicinity.

Mrs. Cyrene Burley was taken seriously ill while attending church last Sunday.

Lou Ayliff spent Sunday at South Arm.

J. R. Vance made a business trip to Echo on Monday night.

The Only Line That Gets There.

It has been well said by a distinguished writer that "the Michigan Central is the only Niagara Falls route in the country." It is the only railroad that runs directly by the falls and stops its trains at a point from which all parts of the falls and the rapids are in full view. From this point, called Falls View, the scene from the Michigan Central train, whether in its summer setting of emerald or its winter setting of crystal is one of unexampled grandeur and suplimity. As it is on the direct route to New York, Boston, and New England, no east-bound traveler should fail to take advantage of it.

Citizen's Caucus.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

President Cleveland Indorses the Convention in His Letter of Transmittal.

Abandonment of Canada's Construction of the Warning of Three-Mile Limit.

If the States Will Remove Certain Duties Her Fishermen May Buy Bait.

(Washington special.)

The Senate has seen fit to ratify the fisheries treaty, with the President's letter of transmittal. The President, in his letter transmitting the document to the Senate says:

"Especially satisfactory do I believe the provisions contained will be found by those of our citizens engaged in the open sea fisheries of Alaska and the Northern Pacific according to these parts and adjacent inland waters" "provisions and the rule of international law."

The proposed delimitation of the lines of jurisdiction in Behring's sea, which for years has been a cause of controversy between citizens of their legitimate field; the familiar theory of boundaries is abandoned by Great Britain, and the specification in the treaty of certain points has necessarily rendered difficult adjustment by the commissioners of the lines which shall be established between the United States and Canada.

"Under the circumstances I have felt that I could not be accomplished under safeguards which have been thrown around the work of delimitation, the deliberate consideration of the tribunal in advance of trial, delays and inconvenience and unnecessary expense.

"The history of the events of the last two years shows that my fears have been well founded, consultation was more harassing and minutely critical than the occasion called for, and seemed to make formal entry and exhaustive every occasion of temporarily seeking shelter in Canadian ports and harbors. Such inconvenience is provided against in the proposed treaty, and I have no doubt it will be found that comparatively a trifling expense.

"The articles permitting our fishermen to obtain provisions and the ordinary supplies and trading vessels on their homeward voyages, and the right to transship cargoes in Canadian ports are of the highest importance to all concerned. The ordinary supplies are entirely created to trading vessels, are of great importance and value, for reasons, which are to be appreciated at a glance and on application, in order to enable the vessels to pursue their voyages, and to be remunerative and profitable. Equally of the least authorities to identify the prospects and present close, and for the reason that I seek to those who intend to see them fairly. The large fleet employed in the fishing industry and of the United States, without the privilege of the exchange of participations of the kind, have not enjoyed the privilege of the treaty. The delimitation as soon as possible thereafter in case of death, or in the event capacity of any commissioner, or in the event of any commissioner being unable or neglecting to act as such, the President of the United States or the Queen of Her Majesty, respectively, shall forthwith name another person to act as commissioner or umpire instead of the commissioner originally appointed.

"Art. 4. The delimitation referred to in article 1 of this treaty shall be marked upon Britain's dominions and the United States and shall be duly described. The charts so marked shall, on the termination of the work of the commission, be signed by the commissioners, and be deposited in duplicate, one whereof shall be delivered to the Secretary of State of the United States and three copies to Her Majesty's Government. The delimitation shall be made in the follow ing manner: on the ground wherever it may be found convenient and practicable, and in the following manner: Beginning at the point where the 141st degree of west longitude from Greenwich intersects the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British possessions in North America, the boundary line shall be made to follow the 141st degree of west longitude from Greenwich to the point where it will be at once published to the world, the zone of such settlement it appears to be adjacent that, by publication here, early and full knowledge of the treaty may reach all. Copies shall be affixed to the principal post offices and other public places in the Pacific coast, and the information contained in the treaty and to authorize the public interests touching the same, as well as the commissioners, and the rights of the citizens of both nations involved, and the rights of the contract terms of the proposed adjustment in place of the exaggerated and inaccurate statements which will otherwise reach the ear.

"I therefore beg leave respectfully to submit the text of the treaty, with such correspondence, that seem and documents relative to the same as may be deemed important to accompany the treaty, be at once made public, and in the order of your honorable body.

"GROVER CLEVELAND."

TEXT OF THE TREATY.

Provisions of the Document as Agreed To by the Commissioners.

The following is the text of the treaty:

"WHEREAS, Differences have arisen concerning the interpretation of the treaty of the convention of 1818, between the United States and Great Britain, her Majesty, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland being mutually desirous of removing all cause of misunderstanding in relation to the matters to which the said treaty has given rise and good neighborly feeling between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, have agreed to enter into a treaty to that end, and have named their plenipotentiaries, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, upon the following articles, form, have agreed upon the following articles:

"Article 1. The high contracting parties agree to appoint a mixed commission to delimit, in the manner provided in the treaty, the fishing waters, bays, creeks, and harbors of the coasts of Canada and of the Newfoundland, of the United States, of territory of the coasts of the United States and the United States and Great Britain, respectively, forever any right to take, dry, or cure fish.

"Art. 2. The commission shall consist of two commissioners to be named by her Britannic Majesty and of two commissioners to be named by the President of the United States, without the necessity of the exchange of participations of the treaty. The commission shall meet and complete the delimitation as soon as possible thereafter in case of death, or in the event capacity of any commissioner, or in the event of any commissioner being unable or neglecting to act as such, the President of the United States or the Queen of Her Majesty, respectively, shall forthwith name another person to act as commissioner instead of the commissioner originally named.

"Art. 3. The delimitation referred to in article 1 of this treaty shall be marked upon British admiralty charts of a scale to be agreed upon by the commissioners and duly described. The charts so marked shall, on the termination of the work of the commission, be signed by the commissioners, and be deposited in duplicate, one whereof shall be delivered to the Secretary of State of the United States and three copies to Her Majesty's Government. The delimitation shall be made in the follow ing manner: on the ground wherever it may be found convenient and practicable, and in the following manner: Beginning at the point where the 141st degree of west longitude from Greenwich intersects the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British possessions in North America, the boundary line shall be made to follow the 141st degree of west longitude from Greenwich to the point where it will be at once published to the world, the zone of such settlement it appears to be adjacent that, by publication here, early and full knowledge of the treaty may reach all. FARM AND GARDEN.

A CHEAP AND EASY PLAN OF WARMING WATER FOR STOCK.

Double Purpose Ladder—Protection Against Insects—Sweet Pickle for Hams. How to Cure Hams—Porcherons a Distinct Breed—The Honey Union.

Farmers who live at remote distances from railway stations often use valuable animals because they lack knowledge and time for a thorough treatment, but, in cases calling for such applications, Dr. Bull's Cattle Purgative Balls. When hot poultices are in order it is very necessary that they should be adjusted so as to retain the heat and prevent an evaporation of the medicinal which is likely to follow when the poultice is not closely held in place. It is with any application, only a lot of trouble to arrange a bandage that the animal will suffer no inconvenience from it.

FIG. 1—THROAT BANDAGE.

The first figure here presented, illustrates a bandage for the throat, which was described recently in Ohio Farmer. This bandage is very well for outside application to the throat. It is positive in book, as it is easy of application, and can be adjusted to first subject the bandage, then place the poultice in a cloth folded so as to retain the heat and keep the bandage and the throat. After it has been on about an hour, it will be cooler. A liniment can be applied in the same way.

FIG. 2—CHEST BANDAGE.

In the second cut is shown a properly adjusted bandage for the chest. This will be found especially useful for coughs, bronchitis and like affections in cases of long fever, etc., or for holding in place a poultice on the chest.

Insectivorous Figures in Fly Protection.

A French authority gives the following as the average weight of eggs from different—Light Brahmas and Dorkings, Cochins, 2 oz. to the pound; they lay, one for to treasonet and keepers, from 90 to 100 per annum, oftentimes more. Black and Dark Brahmas, 2 to the pound, and about 70 per annum. Black, white and buff Cochins, 2 to the pound, 100 is a large yield per annum. Plymouth Rocks, 2 to the pound, 100 per annum. Houdans, 2 to the pound, 100 per annum. Hamburgs, 2 to the pound, 100 per annum. Polish, 2 to the pound, 100 per annum. Bantams, 16 to the pound, 60 per annum. Turkeys' eggs, 5 to the pound, lay from 20 to 60 per annum. Duckes' eggs vary greatly with different species, but from 5 to 6 to the pound, and from 150 to 25 per annum, according to age and keeping. Geese, 4 to the pound, lay 20 per annum. Guinea fowls, 11 to the pound, lay 60 per annum. Large eggs have generally a thicker shell than smaller ones.

A Convenient Ladder.

The present is an opportune time for preparing conveniences that may be made in the work shop for future use. A farmer can hardly comprehend the number of appliances—too many ladders, short ladders, long ladders and step ladders—being all required at one time or other.

The accompanying cut shows a wonderfully convenient ladder, which, while by means new, is very desirable. It plays an excellent, in addition, the double use of step ladder and an ordinary straight ladder.

A STEP AND STRAIGHT LADDER IN ONE.

The idea is conveyed in the cut, in which the two parts are shown ready to be put together. The upper round of the step ladder should be run through slots in the narrow one. The slots are a little more than wide enough and just as wide, as the diameter of the round. The notches in the end of the inside ladder should rest firmly upon the second round of the outside one, and the notches in the end of that one on the projecting ends of the round of the other. The uprights are made of 2 by 3 inch pieces, and when spliced for a long ladder, and a hook is provided on the slots beside the rounds, it is nearly as firm as though made of one piece. It takes but a moment to pull it apart enough to slant it up to the desired angle for a spliced ladder.

Manufacturing Bone Dust.

The method of manufacturing bone dust at home and how given is varied by an a New England farmer who has tried it: From 150 pounds of steamed ground bones separate fifty pounds of the fluid. Put into a cotton 100 pounds into a steamer or kettle with sufficient weight of water, and boil about an hour. Then dip over and boil about an hour. Then dip out the contents into a hopper and let it drain, and gradually pour into it 6 while hot, and gradually pour into it about fifty pounds of the oil of vitriol, stirring the mixture. When effervescence has ceased, add the remaining fifty pounds of dry, fine bones and mix thoroughly. Bones which have had the grease and glue removed from them are much easier dissolved than raw ones.

The Percheron a Distinct Breed.

For a long time war has been waged among the breeders of French draught horses as to the claims made by Percheron breeders that theirs are a distinct breed and constitute a separate class. The contention seems to emphasize that all the draught horses of France are substantially of the same breed. To settle this matter a committee was appointed by the Illinois state board of agriculture last spring to investigate the subject and report thereon. This committee sent representatives to best authorities in France. These authorities unanimously decided that the Percheron is a distinct breed and is the leading draught horse breed in France. On the report of this committee the Illinois state board voted to put the Percheron in a distinct class.

Sweet Pickle for Hams.

The principal point is to get the hams well cured, and to keep sweet, and not to be to injure the flavor and cause the meat to become tainted.

A real nicely cured ham from a young hog is one of the luxuries of the table. Make a brine fast strong enough to float an egg, stir in sugar or N. O. molasses enough to give it a slight sweetness, taste. With two ounces of saltpetre dissolved in a gallon of the pickle, add a small piece of allspice, bits before boiling, and keep it boiling while skimming it off. Let it cool. When pickle is cool put the hams in the brine, weighing down so that not exposed to the air. Keep in a cool place, or, if warm weather, in a temperature, more time will be required; and small and large hams should be packed separately, otherwise the small ones will be too salt. Smoke with hickory wood or cobs.

Silage Without a Silo.

Minnesota Farmer tells about silage without a silo. About the end of October, or earlier, take a barrel, cut out one end and feed cutter, fine, half an inch and less and place into a box tight without pressure or weight or sackcloth of air, beginning at the bottom and tramed by a single own weight. The rates limited, and often a whole day for two feet depth of three or four inches molded a little. This food has been fed to milk. We have fed it to stock, and with no other rations than a little ground cake. The animals are remarkably healthy, and seem to pull it apart enough to shut it up to the desired angle for a spoiled ladder.

Warming Water for Stock.

The practice of warming water for stock, especially milch cows and animals being fattened, is growing every year in section where the winters are long and cold. An iron stove for warming water for stock despites a plan which he has found both cheap and effective. The boiler used by the Iowa advocate, and said to do the work perfectly, at the minimum cost of construction and running. It is made of galvanized iron. A is a cylinder twelve inches in diameter and eight inches high, provided with a four inch smoke pipe, the lower one as shown in the cut C, made long enough to carry off the smoke and gases. B, B, eight inches in diameter, and high enough to reach from the edge of the water tank, in which it is to be set. This must be anchored to prevent floating. The water may be put in any tinner at a cost of from $2 to $2.50. A cover may be made to fit over B to be but supplied with a small hole, for ship draft.

Next take a kerosene or other strong cask of equal size, and saw off one end, making a tub ten inches deep, inside measure. Set this tub in your water tank, put the heater in the tub and secure the latter by a movable cross piece, which must cross firmly on the tub's edge and be held in place by projections on the inner side of the tub. Now fill the tank, tub and all, full of water, the heater being totally submerged, which must always be kept in this shape when a fire is it. Put some live coals in the heater, a man be lighting, and then some short, hard bits of wood or soft coal, after the fire gets well started put the cover on pipe, B, and the fire will burn slowly, but will burn very rapidly, for the reason that not a particle of heat is radiated except through the water.

FOLLOWING THE HOUNDS.

What About Fox Hunting in England. What Its Defenders Say.

In first week in November is the best hunting period, and, as a rule, all through the winter until March without stop, check, impediment or interruption, save by one inevitable enemy. That enemy is a gentleman popularly known as Jack Frost. No weather is so bad, frost, hail, sleet or rain, will hinder hunting. Indeed a wet day is not objectionable, the ground is softer and and a cloudy sky keepeak a hunting morning "sings the sad song, and no man or woman who hunts would dream of staying away from a meet, for fear it should be "black like a hat." It is a curious thing that following the hounds should offer such inducements to get a wetting without minding it. At other times the average English lady or gentleman of hunting proclivities is as much against going out in the rain as they are in favor of it, or rather indifferent to it. Exactly when hunting is on the tapis they certainly "know enough to go in when it rains." Generally a wet day is a day to spend in the library, by the fire, peering out of the windows, wondering if morning light in the sky is make a safer a pair of trousers, wandering absolutely from room to room, asking gossamer questions, and generally knocking the balls about at pool or pyramids in the billiard room, or lolling out an end of crochet and crewel work done, and work off a vast stock of long arrears of letters, notes and unanswered letters. Foreigners are wont to think that the Englishman carries his hobby so very dear. Englishman carries rolled tightly up in his breast, and he does not put down your that may come up unawares. There are no people in the world so afraid of being laughed at; but if rain doesn't put a stopper on hunting, frost does.

There is no hunting, there can be no hunting, when there is frost. And for two reasons. First, the ground would be too hard for the horses' hoofs, and jumping would be dangerous; second, there is no scent, and without scent the hounds wouldn't know where the fox had gone. The long spell of frost is therefore a disastrous condition of things for fox hunters. Days and weeks go by, sometimes, waiting for a thaw, or in hopes that "this bloody weather will break up, and be done with." Last winter was a particularly hard one, in more than one respect, for hunting. Continued hard frost for six weeks or more, and you should have seen the Duchess of Beaufort and stamp. The horses did nothing but stand in their stalls and lose house eating their heads off

POST TO KEEP HIS SEAT.

A Decision by the House Elections Committee that Worthington Was Defeated.

A Washington dispatch says: The House Committee on Elections unanimously confirmed the decision of the sub-committee in favor of Gen. Post's title to the seat as Representative of the Tenth District of Illinois. Before beginning the tedious examination of the ninety pages of printed record it was agreed by the sub-committee that under precedents disputed points of law should be the statutes of Illinois, as construed by the Supreme Court of the State. The points of law were taken up one by one, and it was found that irregular and illegal votes had been cast for both parties to the contest, but after giving Mr. Worthington the benefit of all doubts the net result of the sifting was about fifty-nine majority for Gen. Post.

NO HOPE FOR UNSER FRITZ.

The Worst Fears Confirmed by Prof. Waldenstrom's Microscopical Examination.

The imperial family has ceased to hope for the recovery of the Crown Prince, says a Berlin despatch. The first results of the microscopical examination by Prof. Waldenstrom, communicated to the Emperor, are unfavorable, disclosing traces of cancer in the pus arising from necrosis of the cartilage of the larynx. Apart from the results of the examination, court dispatches confine the progress of symptoms tending toward a fatal issue. The occasional appearance of improvement is followed by a renewal of the gravest indications.

Internal Revenue Reduction.

The internal revenue reductions have been agreed on by the Democrats of the Ways and Means Committee, and will be considered with the tariff bill, says a Washington telegram. They effect a total reduction of about $24,000,000 or $25,000,000. The tobacco tax, except on cigars and cigarettes, is repealed, reducing the revenue about $14,000,000. Licenses abolished will make a further reduction of between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. There is no reduction on spirits of any kind. The manufacturers of fruit brandies are allowed to place their product in bonded warehouses and take warehouse receipts for the same time as the whisky distillers now have. Some extreme penalties have been lessened.

The Burlington Strike.

"The Burlington strike, from appearances, is as far as ever from settlement," says a Chicago telegram of Monday. "Eight hundred engineers and firemen are now working for the road. Passenger traffic is running regularly, and a few freight trains have been moved. Reports from Brookfield, Mo., are at hand to the effect that a striker has been shot by a guard. The strikers are hopeful. The brotherhoods are contemplating a general strike, involving many lines."

Trouble on the Texas Border.

An Austin (Tex.) dispatch says: The Governor has received information from Eagle Pass, Tex., that two Mexican Lieutenants and two soldiers crossed into Texas to arrest a deserter. When the Sheriff ordered them to release the man they returned and fired upon the Sheriff and his deputy. The fire was returned, and one Mexican soldier was killed and one soldier wounded. The wounded man and his two companions succeeded in getting back into Mexico. Reinforcements are expected.

Interstate Telegraphy.

The Postoffice Committee of the Senate has decided to report favorably what is known as the Spooner bill to regulate interstate telegraphy. There were some amendments made to the bill as introduced by Senator Spooner, but they are chiefly of an explanatory nature, and do not materially change the provisions of the bill.

The Hatfield-McCoy War.

Kentucky already has jurisdiction of the Hatfield outlaws arrested by West Virginia. Such is the decision of Judge Lurton, of the United States District Court, at Louisville. If Kentucky will now proceed to hang the entire gang there will be reason to rejoice at the decision.

The Snell Murder.

William R. Tascott, the Chicago murderer, has been seen at Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Chicago detectives are on his trail.

KNOCKING OUT GOULD.

The Pacific Railway Telegraph Bill Passes with a Rush.

With extraordinary unanimity the House of Representatives, on the 21st inst., voted to attack the Western Union Telegraph Company at its most vulnerable point. The bill, which passed by 204 on the Pacific Railroad Telegraph bill three years ago yea and 1 nay. The effect of this bill is to justify the existing contracts between the Pacific Railroads and the Western Union, by which the latter pays the transportation of the wires along the railroads of the Pacific coast. It is claimed that these contracts are in violation of the law of Congress authorizing and aiding the Pacific road and in the construction of the Pacific railroads, and are fraudulent as well as void, because they are obtained by railroad tracks, and had no power to either sell or lease the telegraph part of the plant.

THE EASTERN STATES.

The Grand Jury at New York failed to indict Gould and Sage for the alleged larceny of $3,000,000 worth of Denver & Rio Grande Railroad bonds. This ends all proceedings against the two Wall street magnates.

A loss of three-quarters of a million dollars was entailed by the burning of the Union Square Theater and Morton House, at Quincy, in New York. Several firemen were badly hurt by falling walls.

John R. Buckalew appeared before the New York Senate Trust-investigating Committee, and testified that he was the President of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, and a member of the Standard Oil trust. He produced the agreement, saying that its contents be kept from the press, as it contained private matters. Mr. Buckalew said the trust was started with $70,000,000 capital, which had been increased by stock dividends to $90,000,000. He believed all the companies entering into the agreement were corporations. No companies were taken afterward except for reasonable value of their refineries. No efforts had been made to force their stocks on the market, and then drop the trust. The witness said that the output of the country is about 27,000,000 barrels annually. Three-quarters of this is controlled by the trust. The trust certificates are worth $105, par value $100. They have been higher. In 1887 the shareholders received 20 per cent more stock, and in addition a dividend of 10 per cent. Dividends have been declared every three months, the average being 7½ per cent. annually.

THE WESTERN STATES.

The Coroner's jury at Chicago, after deliberating over three weeks on the murder of Anna J. Snell, has contented its labors, and found that the deceased came to his death from a pistol-shot fired by William R. Tascott. The Grand Jury had already indicted Tascott for the murder. The young criminal is still at large, but the Chicago police express confidence that will be ultimate capture. Some think he has fled out of the country, others that he is dead, others express the belief that he has fled to the Bluffs, Nebraska, and others are held to the theory that he is hiding in Chicago.

During 1887 railroads in Michigan earned $81,949,959, an increase over 1886 of $9,938,102.

A Chicago telegram gives the following particulars of a horrible murder in that city:

A smoking tragedy took place in the dingy two-story frame building at No. 1419 State street. When pretty Josephine Maggie Gaughey wanted work early in the morning she went to the door of her father's room and took a young man named Jacob Hebner by the throat as she ran to the place at the time. There was no one else in the place at the time. The brute seized the opportunity, and dragging her to the rear of the building attempted to outrage her. She fought desperately, and he dragged her into a little closet under the stairway. And choking her to the floor in the corner, completed his infernal work. She still struggled, and the fiend seized a small hatchet and chopped her about the face and head, gripping one hand around her throat, the other still wielding the hatchet. Then he fled. After crashing her skull the murderer went on with his butchery. He slashed away at the cheeks, he tried to cut out the staring eyes. The features were not recognizable when the police arrived. Hebner had fled, but he turned toward the dead form into the furthest corner of the closet and piled sack after sack of heater feedings upon it. The closet door was closed and his crime hidden for a while. It was evidently his intention to wait till night and then devise some means for carrying the body out of the place. But at 7 o'clock the black fiend disappeared, but his flight this morning was arrested at Forreston, Ill., sixty miles south of Chicago. He confessed to his awful crime. Some holes after he had fled the place of his crime, he had returned to view the dead. His parents were almost frantic with grief when apprised of the terrible fate that had befallen their child.

On the application for a writ of error and motion for a new trial in the Coy-Burnham election conspiracy cases Justice Harlan, at Indianapolis, on Tuesday, delivered an opinion affirming the judgment of the District Court in every particular.

A Fremont telegram says "the Manistee Salt and Lumber Company has made an assignment to E. Golden Fiber for the benefit of creditors. The assets are $1,880,000 and the liabilities $864,000. The liabilities are composed mostly of banking institutions in Chicago. The company is a very large concern, with a valuable plant, consisting of pine lands, lumber, railroads, saw-mills, and salt blocks, with very complete paraphernalia. There does not seem to be any danger of loss to any of the creditors, but if the concern is pushed into immediate liquidation and a forced sale, it will involve large sacrifice to the stockholders, and over six hundred workmen will be deprived of employment.

Texas dispatches give brief particulars of a horrible crime at a settlement known as Spanish Camp, about sixty miles west of Houston.

Spanish Camp is composed of Mexicans, negroes and desperate whites, and is remote from railroads and telegraph lines. A fandango was set on fire and the occupants living in the place, to the number of about 100, fled from the burning house. Five were killed outright, one severally wounded, and two were crippled in the stampede. Jealousy was the main motive, but about the dead body of a negro was found a paper pinned to his breast, which was taken to be the outcome of a feud over the time of the dance where the negroes live, and had been killed by the band of Mexicans.

Train robbers did a quick, clean job on the St. Louis, Kansas and Texas Railway, twenty miles south of Pine Bluff, Ark., the following account of which is sent by telegraph from the latter place:

About a mile north of Kingsland the engineer and fireman, who were leaning against the cab road, heard a noise in the rear, and, turning, saw a masked man with a Winchester, covering a traveler at the engineer. The engineer sold off the throttle and ordered the fireman to shovel coal. Conductor Browning, who was back in the sleeper, was ordered to the front by the masked man, leaving out on the platform of the sleeper, and ordered to "hold up his hands and be quick about it." He swung into Kingsland and produces loaded out of the cab, and, taking deliberate aim at the station agent, the gun was scattered into a hundred fragments. The robbers then ordered the engineer to uncouple the baggage and express car from the sleeper, then order the engineer to step down and open the express car door. The express car was cleaned out, and the robbers without killing his friends. He had not secured any money from the sleeper, which was a Pullman palace sleeper, while not a traveler, who had been measuring up and down outside the train, attempting passenger, was robbed, and all three men began firing a volley of shots at the train, which was moving slowly south among the Kingsland cotton fields, and had not awakened before the firing begin. The mask fastened to the fireman's face was followed. Valuables were hidden among the coal heaps. Strange to say, no one knew that the robbers informed the passengers that they had taken all the money they had in the proceedings for award for every one would be searched. The passengers were robbed, the engineer and fireman and kept inside the cab. Finding no more plunder, the robbers ordered the train to move on, and, when it had gone a little closer toward the Kingsland station, the train stopped, the engineer and fireman were ordered to step down and open the express car door, and, when the door was opened, a small hatchet was chopped for about the face and head, gripping one hand around her throat, the other still wielding the hatchet. Five were killed outright, one severally wounded, and two were crippled in the stampede. Jealousy was the main motive, but about the dead body of a negro was found a paper pinned to his breast, which was taken to be the outcome of a feud over the time of the dance where the negroes live, and had been killed by the band of Mexicans.

Train robbers did a quick, clean job on the St. Louis, Kansas and Texas Railway, twenty miles south of Pine Bluff, Ark., the following account of which is sent by telegraph from the latter place:

About a mile north of Kingsland the engineer and fireman, who were leaning against the cab road, heard a noise in the rear, and, turning, saw a masked man with a Winchester, covering a traveler at the engineer. The engineer sold off the throttle and ordered the fireman to shovel coal. Conductor Browning, who was back in the sleeper, was ordered to the front by the masked man, leaving out on the platform of the sleeper, and ordered to "hold up his hands and be quick about it." He swung into Kingsland and produces loaded out of the cab, and, taking deliberate aim at the station agent, the gun was scattered into a hundred fragments. The robbers then ordered the engineer to uncouple the baggage and express car from the sleeper, then order the engineer to step down and open the express car door. The express car was cleaned out, and the robbers without killing his friends. He had not secured any money from the sleeper, which was a Pullman palace sleeper, while not a traveler, who had been measuring up and down outside the train, attempting passenger, was robbed, and all three men began firing a volley of shots at the train, which was moving slowly south among the Kingsland cotton fields, and had not awakened before the firing begin. The mask fastened to the fireman's face was followed. Valuables were hidden among the coal heaps. Strange to say, no one knew that the robbers informed the passengers that they had taken all the money they had in the proceedings for award for every one would be searched. The passengers were robbed, the engineer and fireman and kept inside the cab. Finding no more plunder, the robbers ordered the train to move on, and, when it had gone a little closer toward the Kingsland station, the train stopped, the engineer and fireman were ordered to step down and open the express car door, and, when the door was opened, a small hatchet was chopped for about the face and head, gripping one hand around her throat, the other still wielding the hatchet. Then he fled. After crashing her skull the murderer went on with his butchery. He slashed away at the cheeks, he tried to cut out the staring eyes. The features were not recognizable when the police arrived. Hebner had fled, but he turned toward the dead form into the furthest corner of the closet and piled sack after sack of heater feedings upon it. The closet door was closed and his crime hidden for a while. It was evidently his intention to wait till night and then devise some means for carrying the body out of the place. But at 7 o'clock the black fiend disappeared, but his flight this morning was arrested at Forreston, Ill., sixty miles south of Chicago. He confessed to his awful crime. Some holes after he had fled the place of his crime, he had returned to view the dead. His parents were almost frantic with grief when apprised of the terrible fate that had befallen their child.

On the application for a writ of error and motion for a new trial in the Coy-Burnham election conspiracy cases Justice Harlan, at Indianapolis, on Tuesday, delivered an opinion affirming the judgment of the District Court in every particular.

A Fremont telegram says "the Manistee Salt and Lumber Company has made an assignment to E. Golden Fiber for the benefit of creditors. The assets are $1,880,000 and the liabilities $864,000. The liabilities are composed mostly of banking institutions in Chicago. The company is a very large concern, with a valuable plant, consisting of pine lands, lumber, railroads, saw-mills, and salt blocks, with very complete paraphernalia. There does not seem to be any danger of loss to any of the creditors, but if the concern is pushed into immediate liquidation and a forced sale, it will involve large sacrifice to the stockholders, and over six hundred workmen will be deprived of employment.

In the United States Court at Chicago, on Thursday, Judge Gresham denied the application of Coy and Burnham, of Indianapolis, for a release on a writ of habeas corpus. This compels them to remain in confinement pending a hearing by the United States Supreme Court.

A Texarkana (Texas) dispatch says: "The wife of James McElmore, living at this place, has given birth to triplets, two boys and a girl. The couple have been married only three years, and this is the third set of triplets that have been born during that time, and all live."

Six years after the crime, and after having been sentenced to death six times, Oscar F. Dockwith has finally been hanged at Hudson, New York, for the murder of Simon Vedder, in 1881.

The paper stock of Barnes Brothers, Detroit, was destroyed by fire. Loss $150,000.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

The President has nominated John E. Carland, of Dakota, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Dakota; M. J. Cubbage, of Louisiana, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Montana; R. R. Nash, of Washington Territory, Associate Judge of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory; and Mary F. Ballantine, Postmaster at Syracuse, Neb.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands has substantially, though not formally, agreed upon a public land bill to repeal the timber culture and pre-emption laws, amend the Homestead law, etc., similar in general features to the Senate bill of last session.

The Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, on the 1st inst., submitted to the full committee the tariff bill upon which the Democratic members have been at work for several months. The free-list section is to take effect July 1, 1888. A Washington dispatch says the Republicans and Randallites are dissatisfied with the bill, and that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee will frame another one.

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

What Is Being Done by the National Legislature.

Tuesday.

The bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua passed the senate on the 27th ult., by a vote of 36 to 11. All the Senators voting in the negative had from the beginning been opposed to the measure, and at length too bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and to the dependents of deceased soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion, was taken up. Senator Mahone, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a substitute for the bill, providing that the pension laws be so construed as to include the widows of Revolutionary soldiers, and that the Commissioner of Pensions, and the Committees on Pensions, whenever any pension claims have been rejected through the failure of the claimant to furnish the proofs required, should be notified of the fact, and instructing the Committee to report forthwith the Senate's action upon such claims. The substitute was vigorously opposed by Senators Cockrell and Morgan, who contended that it would be a fruitful source of fraud, and would open the door to the employment of agents and attorneys to hunt up claims. The substitute was finally passed, and the bill was then passed. The House bill for the relief of the widows of deceased soldiers and sailors, and the Senate bill for a portal entry and exit to the Capitol, were considered, but both C. M. Conger of Michigan were delivered by Messrs. Hiscock, Cullom, Sherman, Dawes, Whiting, Cannon, Hayes, Allen, Wade, Ingalls, Sawyer, Chandler, Palmer, and Stockbridge, relating to the disposition of the remains of the deceased were adopted upon motion of Mr. Sherman, and a further conference was asked by the House adjourned.

The remains reported from the Foreign Affairs Committee requesting the President to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China for the protection of the Chinese in the United States, and for the exclusion of Chinese laborers from the senate on the 1st inst. The Senate resumed the consideration of the Nicaragua Canal bill, the pending question being on Mr. Wilson's amendment to the bill, which was adopted by the House. Mr. Beck delivered a set speech against the bill, and Mr. Morgan follow

CHARLEVOIX, — MICHIGAN

EMPEROR WILLIAM left 300,000,000 marks, or $72,000,000 in cash.

An eastern paper says: "The woods are full of good republican candidates." They are taking to the woods early.

NUMEROUS reasons have been given for Mr. Blaine's withdrawal from the presidential race, but the real one probably is that Mr. Cleveland's conduct of public affairs makes Mr. Blaine too tired to run.

THE Chicago Herald suggests that some kind of humane society should be organized at once for the prevention of cruelty to statesmen. Not a day goes by but that a dozen or two are proposed for the republican nomination.

A PROTECTION organ indignantly resents the charge that protection encourages trusts. Trusts are formed, to be sure, outside the protected industries, but the dime museum impresario would give a good deal to secure so rare a curiosity as a member of a trust who is not a protectionist.

THUS far in every county of Pennsylvania where the Democrats have had occasion to make a public expression of opinion, they have indorsed President Cleveland and the tariff message he sent to congress. The students of the drift of the political current should make a note of this fact.—Philadelphia Record.

A New York paper is still agitating the question of Phil Sheridan's birthplace. But what difference does it make anyway? The question as to where any republican candidate was born will have no bearing on the presidency this year. The republican candidate that can beat Cleveland has not yet been born at all.—Chicago Herald.

As absent-minded protection paper which forgets the protection claim that the tariff does not encourage trusts says: "An effective blow can be aimed at the sugar trust by wiping out the duty on all raw and refined sugars." If wiping out this duty would deal and effective blow at the sugar trust, why would not wiping out other duties have the same effect on other trusts?

It is said that the Chatsworth disaster has already cost the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad more than $300,000 in damages, and there is another $100,000 yet to pay. A new culvert, by which the accident would have been avoided, would have cost $400. The difference between that sum and the total amount of damages paid and to be paid represents the company's investment in experience.

EMPEROR WILLIAM, of Germany, died, March 8, at Berlin, in his 91st year. He was appointed regent in 1858 and became king of Prussia in 1861 and emperor of Germany in 1871. He was at once a great warrior and statesman—he created the German empire and made it the leading power in Europe. The mourning for the dead Kaiser is evidently genuine. His people loved the man, as well as the emperor.

THE demand for paper is national currency grows largely out of the drift of a certain class of business toward large cities, where trade is to be carried through the mails. Of this class of barter in general, it may be said that the consumer usually pays a large price and buys of a stranger, something which has not been seen by the purchaser. To facilitate this line of trade a re-issue of the war "shinplasters" is asked.

Loss and loud were the Republican cries in Minneapolis that a Democratic victory in the municipal election would be accepted by the country as an indication of Minnesota's position toward President Cleveland and his tariff message. Minneapolis heard the cries, took them at their full value and elected the entire Democratic ticket by good majorities. Carry the news to Manley—Joe Manley of Maine!—Buffalo Courier.

THE plan of strangling "trust" monopolies by state taxation need not interfere in the least with other practical remedies. Congress can easily dispose of the "trusts" that have grown up under the tariff by simply withdrawing the "protective" duties. American consumers would thus keep the taxes in their pockets while managers of the "trust" might whistle for their millions of prospective booty. This would be cutting off the tail of the dog right behind the ears.—Philadelphia Record.

HON. J. M. WEEVOC of this state, chairman of the democratic state central committee, has been chosen president of the democratic association of the northwest, an organization, embracing the states of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, and Kansas. The headquarters of the association will be in Chicago, and its purpose is to thoroughly organize the party in these states for next fall's campaign. This is a worthy complement paid to Mr. Weston, and is an endorsement of his able and conscientious political work in the past.

FALLS VIEW was unknown until created by the Michigan Central Railroad, which stops its trains at this point to enable its passengers to enjoy the grandest and most comprehensive view of the falls that is to be anywhere obtained. Before that time people came in carriages from the American side to "Inspiration Point," the view from which Howells said was "unequalled for sublimity," but Falls View, being more elevated, the scene from it is much finer. No other road runs to, or near this point and through passengers by the Michigan Central, "The Niagara Falls Route," have this great advantage without detention or additional expense.

In 1867, when the high wool tariff went into operation, there were here in the state of Iowa valued at $1,483,245, and sheep valued at 2,084,476. After twenty years experience with protected wool growing, in 1887 the assessed value of sheep in Iowa was 277,489, and of hogs 2,852,530. So far, the wool grower. In 1870 there were 85 woolen factories in Iowa, and in 1880 there were 24. Thus protection failed to protect the farmer, and also failed to protect the manufacturer. The bill agreed upon in the committee on ways and means is a step toward reunning woolen manufacture in this country. Matters now stand wool sells at low prices and woolens cannot be made at a profit.—Philadelphia Record.

The Question of Wages.

There is no subject on which high protectionists more persistently and dishonestly mislead the public than that of wages. They continual cry is that protection increases wages. Yet, when it is pointed out that wages in continental Europe are much lower than in England, they assert that wages were made high by protection in England, and by its original force in that country have, since 1848, maintained their then high standard.

That such a monstrously absurd proposition as this should receive credance is almost inconceivable. Yet it is blatantly advanced by our local high protection organ, in face of facts which incontestably prove it to possess not even the credibility of a myth.

The facts relative to European wages in Europe are as follow, and are taken from Mulhall's Hisory of Prices," 1885. Wages have risen in all countries for the last thirty years, while prices have fallen 10 per cent. The wages of a day laborer have risen in England from 32 cents in 1855 to 56 cents in 1884; in France same time, from 30 to 50 cents; in Russia, from 12 to 24 cents; in Belgium and Holland (free-trade countries) from 19 to 40 cents; in Italy, from 10 to 24 cents; in Austria, from 20 to 40 cents.

Artisans' wages have risen in England from a little over 52 cents a day in 1840 to $1.26 in 1884, and in France from 50 cents in 1850 to 70 cents in 1880.

According to the United States census report, the average earnings of operatives have risen from 80 cents a day in 1850 and 96 cents a day in 1860 to $1.14 a day in 1880.

The rise in wages in all Europe since 1850 has been 40 or 50 per cent, and in the United States 44 per cent, indicating that the wages of operatives have risen in the same degree both in Europe and America. The reasons given for this rise are the gold discoveries in California and Australia, the spread of public instruction, the greater efficiency of industry, and demand for labor.

There is, however, a phase of this question which protectionists wholly ignore, yet on it hinges the entire question of wages remuneration as between the British and continental European laborer. It is this: The British operatives have to pay only 45 per cent of their earnings for food, while the continental pay 55 per cent.

There is another important circumstance, also which our protectionists wholly ignore, and which tells largely in favor of the British free-trade laborer. It is this: In France, Germany, and the United States the profits of the capitalist are larger than in England, where the competition of capital outweights that of labor. Thus, British operatives as a rule, earn in wages from 30 to 33 per cent of the value of the manufactures they produce, while in the United States the workman gets only 18 per cent. And still another point. In 1850, under comparative free trade,

PRESIDENTIAL SOUR GRAPES.

Sheridan—Me, too, Jim.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

St. Louis Will Come First and Victory Will Follow After.

The National Democratic convention of 1888 will be held at St. Louis, and it will begin its proceedings upon the 4th day of the month of June. This latter fact presents a new departure. Usually, since the war, it has been the custom of the Democratic party to wait until the Republicans had put forth their candidates and their platform before taking similar action itself. This time it seems to be possessed with the courage of its convictions. It practically says to its great opponent: "Nominate whom you please. Say what you please. We shall beat you any way. We will take the field first, regardless of what you may do."

The correspondents say that this is an administration victory. We look upon it differently. We look upon it as a Democratic victory. It is an out and out announcement that the Democratic party is not afraid of itself; that it is prepared to fight for its cause; that it believes that it has come into national power to stay.

This is the proper attitude for the party to take before the country. Let them take good care that their action at St. Louis sustains it. Let them see to it that they come from there with a harmonious and enthusiastic following. And, to accomplish this, but one thing is necessary, and that is to pursue in all its proceedings the grand old maxim: "In essential unity, in non-essential liberty, in all things charity."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Democracy Sets the Pace.

The selection of St. Louis as the place of meeting for the Democratic national convention will meet with general approval. It is always good policy to begin a political campaign in a political stronghold of the party. St. Louis and the state of Missouri are joined to the Democracy by bands of steel and will give the nominee an appropriate send off.—Philadelphia Record.

A Slogan of Triumph.

The action of the national committee is a message to the Democracy of the nation which will strengthen their confidence, arouse their enthusiasm and inspire them with an energy and resolution that will render them invincible in the campaign. The course taken will demoralize and dishearten the opposition.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The First in the Field.

The national committee has done a wise thing in naming an earlier day for the Democratic convention than the date of the Republican convention. To be first in the field is everything when an aggressive fight for a good cause is the requisite of victory, and this is certainly the necessity in the coming contest.—Richmond Times.

More of an Undertaking.

The St. Louis convention will have a bigger job on its hands this year than it one that is to be held in Chicago. The former will have to name a president, while the latter will simply have to choose a historical man-of-war for its party.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

On the Run.

From all sources comes approval of the early date fixed for the Democratic national convention. The party is strong enough to show its hand first. The other side is all broken up. The Republicans are on the run, and the best they can do is keep them there.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

An Early Aggressive Campaign.

We congratulate the Democratic national committee on the result of its meeting at Washington. In the selection of St. Louis as the place for the convention at a central point, in a city affording ample accommodations and loyal to Democratic purposes.—Manchester Union.

The Date Shows Good Judgment.

The national Democratic committee did a wise thing in reconsidering the determination of the day before and fixing the date of the convention June 5.—Boston Post.

A Fortunate Selection.

The selection of St. Louis as the place for the holding of the Democratic national convention is a fortunate one for the Democracy.—Milwaukee Journal.

Victory in '76, Victory in '88.

St. Louis well received the national Democratic convention in 1876, and it claims to the same distinction in 1888.—Buffalo Courier.

The Next President.

The next president is to be nominated in St. Louis. This is satisfaction enough for one day.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Magnetism All Gone.

Those who saw Mr. James G. Blaine when he was in London last year at the jubilee, will not be surprised at his letter from Florence declining to be put in nomination as Republican candidate for the American presidency. Mr. Blaine looked as if he were very much exhausted. His energy and his magnetic powers seemed to have evaporated.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The True Inwardness of Things.

The "anti-saloon Republican convention" will be held in New York in April. It will be largely composed of delegates to the saloon Republican convention in Chicago.—St. Louis Republican.

A Sign of the Times.

There is an old superstition that a year with three eights in it is a lucky year.—Atlanta Constitution.

This Is What They Did.

When the issues of the twenty years from 1856 to 1876 were substantially settled the Republican party began to lose its vigor, because it seemed incapable of setting its face to the future and dealing with new questions. It lingered over the past and tried to keep up the sectional division when the people began to wish for its disappearance. It permitted grave abuses to make their way into the public service, and seemed to lack the vigor to grapple with them. The revenue system, which had been necessitated by the war and the public debt, had fostered powerful monopolies and built up special interests at the expense of the people, and these were concerned for their own perpetuation. They were permitted, in a great measure, to control the action of the party. Their money was at its service so long as their protection was guaranteed. Their rich representatives made their way into the party councils and obtained high places in legislation and administration. They dictated party declaration and had a dominating influence upon party action.—New York Times.

A Mighty Slander Platform.

The friends of Gen. Harrison—who, by the way, was never anything more than a colonel, and not a very gory one at that—out in Indiana, are making a great effort to secure a delegation to the Republican national convention favorable to his nomination for the presidency. This prompts us to remind them that an election was held in the Empire state a few months ago that was supposed to have given proof for good and all the bosmirch of Grant and Lincoln, the respective sons of their respective honored fathers.

Gen. Harrison is a very worthy but mediocre statesman, whose principal recommendation, so far as we can make out, is not that "he is the son of his father," but that "he is the grandson of his grandfather, 'Old Tippecanoe and Tyler too.'" And that is a mighty slender platform to run upon, and don't you forget it, oh, men of Indiana.—New York Sun.

The New Postmaster General.

President Cleveland is to be congratulated in having put a Jacksonian Democrat at the head of the postoffice department. The new postmaster general is such, and he has proceeded to work in a very business like way, and after a fashion which should commend him to the hearty good will of all Democrats.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Boomerang Boom.

With Foraker forging to the front in Ohio, Uncle John Sherman's baby blizzard boom, which he fondly hoped would sweep over Ohio, now that Blaine is out of the way, appears to have exhausted all its energies in leveling some of his own fences.—New York Evening World.

The Opportunity May Come.

By all means let the Ohio men continue to shout for John Sherman. The Democrats who still bear in mind the frauds which put Rutherford B. Hayes into the White House, will welcome at the polls such an opportunity to settle up with the Ohio senator.—New York Sun.

A Thing of the Past.

It did not seem probable a few years ago, but it is now almost an accomplished fact, that the Republican officeholder has ceased to be a reality, and has become in the city of New York merely a reminiscence of a past and unregretted period of history.—New York Sun.

Ever Since He Took Tilden's Seat.

H. B. Hayes has come out with an expression of deep commiseration for American sheep, in case the duty on wool is removed. It will not surprise the country to know that Hayes has been feeling sheepish for some time.—Alta California.

A Gentle Reminder.

Those persons who think that Blaine will no longer be the presidency are earnestly asking: "Who is Blaine's heir?" It does not appear to have occurred to them that there may be a pocket in Blaine's political shroud.—Chicago News.

No Doubt About This.

If the convention were to nominate me I would not accept," says Gen. Sheridan. "Why, you would, general, you'd accept p. d. q. Good American citizens like you are throwing away presidential nominations.—Kansas City Times.

A Step at Ingalls.

Ingalls' reading of Washington's farewell address was thoroughly appreciated by the members of the senate. Probably a good many of them were sorry that it wasn't Ingalls' farewell address.—Chicago Herald.

And It Will not Either.

Republican organs are claiming that their party is rich in presidential timber, but a little time like this doesn't prevent the party from selecting a man weak enough to insure his defeat.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Question of Time Only.

What are we to do about all those rebel flags that Republican secretaries of war, from Stanton down, have returned to the ex-rebel states? Ought not the Republican party to be abolished?—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A True Statement of Affairs.

The Democratic party is much stronger everywhere than it was in 1884, and is threatened by none of the dissensions which so seriously handicapped it in New York that year.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Plenty of Land on Hand.

The Democratic party was never so full of the courage of its convictions; never so ready to fight for them; never so sure that to fight is to win as it is now.—St. Louis Republican.

Discord in the Air.

The voice of the Blaine banquet is still heard in the land and it is very harsh discord to the owners of the sherman boom.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Let Him Think So.

Young Mr. Lincoln announces that he is out of politics, and he evidently believes that the announcement is important.—Atlanta Constitution.

Inquiry by Republican Clubs.

Have you read our Jimmie's letter?
Have you read it through and through?
Have you read it so you're certain
What Jimmie's going to do?

Is it not about time for the voters of this township to prohibit cattle from running at large in the streets? All towns with any pretension to cleanliness enforce such a by-law, and Charlevoix ought to. We hope that the matter will be thoroughly discussed before town-meeting, and that it will be decided to try prohibition for a year.

Late advices from Mr. Burke give assurance that the rebuilt Champlain will be called the "City of Charlevoix" if it be possible to effect the change of name, and there is good reason to believe it is possible. The boat is rebuilt from the keel up, and her machinery is made practically as good as new. This will correct any contary impression that may have gained circulation.

One of the most important engineering projects of the day is a plan whereby the distance by water from ports on lake Michigan to lake Superior points could be reduced about 300 miles. A party of capitalists considered the feasibility of the project and about decided to carry the plan into execution. The proposed plan to construct a canal connecting the two great bodies of water from the head of Big Bay de Noc on lake Michigan to south bay in Lake Superior. The distance is forty miles. New York and Minneapolis capitalists have revived the project, and that a survey will soon be made locating a route with a view to commencing the construction of what would prove an important waterway. Competent engineers, whose attention has been directed to the plan, pronounce it perfectly feasible. The estimated cost of the canal is $5,000,000, and if sufficient capital can be secured and his plan meets the expectations of those interested, the work will soon be inaugurated. Vessel owners and captains speak very highly of the scheme, and pronounce it a grand achievement if perfected.

Patrons of the Barber Shop.

The worst thing a man with a tender skin can do is to go from shop to shop and get shaved by as many different barbers as there are days in the week. A barber who is up to his work gets as well acquainted with the faces of the men he shaves as the engineer gets to know the grades and curves of the road he runs over. It takes one or two shaves to find out the peculiarities of a customer's face and the man who drops into any shop he may be passing suffers unlimited torture in consequence. People who shave themselves have generally been constrained to do so by the unintentional cruelty of strange slaves of the tonsorial art. Fortunately for the profession, they mostly return to their old habits, for although at best one man in five can shave himself, not one man in twenty can stop a razor and keep it moderately sharp.—Barber in Globe-Democrat.

FACTS.

In the American Magazine for March, lovers of Indian antiquities will find much to interest them in an article by Charles Ellis, describing and illustrating the natural features of Mackinac Island. And living so near this historic place makes it doubly of interest to us. Mr. Ellis has been fortunate in discovering a very curious Indian legend of the Creation, which accounts for white men as well as red, but not in a flattering way. The ancient legend of creation has the most natural and complete explanation ever given of the origin of Lover's Leap, the red Adam was driven from the island by an evil minded angel who was enamored of the red Eve, and she having denounced the angel as "devil," with whose sins could not be compared to remain longer than to express her hate of him, "fled like wind as it swept down from far Wangalaunee" and leaped from the cliff. Her banished mate, who was paddling sorrowfully along the shore and saw her fall, urged his canoe forward and saved her life; and Manitou restored them to the island and banished the angel from Heaven. He fell to the underworld of bad spirits and there became a great leader and the father of the white race of beings called men, who filled with the hatred of their father toward the red Eve, have never ceased to work for the ruin of her descendants.

FARM AND GARDEN.

PROBLEM OF VENTILATING A CELLAR SATISFACTORILY SOLVED.

Statements Made by an Experienced Horse Breeder—Professor Shelton Tells How to Cut Corn Fodder—An Economical Plan for Feeding Stock in Yards.

Every section of the country has its own special feed racks, and an assortment of files and plans on the subject between widely differing localities often results in added conveniences heretofore untried by many.

FIG. 1—ECONOMICAL FEED RACK.

For economical feeding in the yard there is perhaps no better device than the one here reproduced from Minnesota Farmer, and in use in many sections of the west.

A simple way to build one of these feed racks is to begin by setting four tall posts in the ground in the form of a rectangle. Their height and distance apart will determine the size of the rack. It is not best, however, to make it very wide, say not over six feet, as some difficulty would be experienced by the animals in pulling out the hay if bound solidly in the center. Set the posts leaning toward the center, in order to make the opening at the bottom wider than at the top. This will prevent binding, and the hay will easily settle as it is being eaten away from below. From about eighteen inches above ground, to the tops of the posts, the sides and ends should be boarded tightly, making it possible for the animals to reach the hay only from the bottom.

To make the rack complete, a manger must be built entirely surrounding the upright part, set four short posts securely in the ground opposite the corners, and others between to give firmness to this part, where pressure is always brought to bear. If the manger is made slanting, and narrow at the bottom, it will prevent animals from getting in, as they are tempted to do in cold or stormy weather. Many consider it a good thing to cover such a rack with a shed roof, thus always keeping the hay dry. This can be done with very little extra expense.

FIG. 2—FEED RACK AND SHED.

Farmers who have many animals to feed sometimes build several of these racks, arranging them at the entrance of their sheds. This admits of the animals eating under shelter from one side during inclement weather; the second cut, in which the rack is shown at A, and the shed at B.

Hints on Horse Breeding.

At one of the New York farmers' institutes, an experienced breeder in horses read a paper on "Horse Breeding," in which occurred the following statements: First decide what style of horse you want to produce. There are several classes of horses, the race horse and trotter, the carriage horse, such as the Cleveland bay and French coach, and the various breeds of draft horses. The English Shire, the Clydesdale and the Percheron. Of these various breeds the race horse can only be bred to advantage in large establishments. The American trotter has only become a distinct breed within a generation, but now we produce the trotter quite uniformly. The English race horse was the product of years. A American trotter, of which Rysdik's Hambletonian, Mambrino, Henry Clay and a few others were the foundation. Only within fifteen years has an intelligent study of the trotter been pursued. Now the rules adopted and published in the register govern. Breeders of trotters of the trotter have reached a degree of success of which they are justly proud. They produce the fastest road horse in the world.

The Cleveland bay was the offspring of the thoroughbred race horse on larger mares. The French coach horse was bred under government supervision, which owned all the stallions. The Norman should not be confounded with the Percheron. The former is massive-set carriage horse; the latter better adapted to heavy draft. It is the draft horse of France. The English Shire and Clydesdale horses have been much improved by the best of care and feed well. Such treatment pays.

The farmers can breed a few colts every year and work their mares most of the time. Cheap raising of colts on the starvation plan does not pay. The dam should have her feed. It is estimated the cost of properly raising a colt until it is four years old at $100, and the dam of less will depend upon the quality of the colt at that age.

Length to Cut Corn Fodder.

Numbers of interesting experiments reported upon by Professor Shelton, of the Kansas Agricultural college, is the one relating to the proper length to cut corn fodder. According to the professor it pays to feed corn fodder cut much less than the usual length of the stalk. He estimated the cost of properly raising a colt until it is four years old at $100, and the dam of less will depend upon the quality of the colt at that age.

Ventilating a Cellar.

In this enlightened age, it is not necessary to waste space or time in explaining the reasons why every cellar, whether under dwelling house or elsewhere, ought to be ventilated. Every progressive man and woman understands the necessity, but everybody does not know how to bring about the desired ventilation. A Kansas genius, who has solved the problem to his own satisfaction, explains, in Prairie Farmer, with the assistance of a diagram similar to the one here presented, his mode of ventilating an outdoor cellar.

In his cellar he puts a vertical tube—3 inches square, inside measurement, extending from within 4 inches of the floor, out 3 feet above the roof. This is left open until extreme cold weather when it may be readily closed with a wisp of hay at the top.

CELLAR VENTILATION.

This tube, he explains, draws off all moist and cold air from the bottom, as the warm air always rises to the upper space. If the cellar becomes too warm, a slide is drawn from the side of the tube near the roof, until the desired lower temperature is secured.

When this correspondent builds another he proposes to have two tubes, one reaching down to the floor, as above described, and the other just through the roof, as shown at C. The construction of his cellar is as follows: F, ventilator, with screen over inside end. This is for summer use, being closed in winter, though it might serve as a chimney if it was necessary to have a stove in the cellar during the latter season. The roof beam A and brace B are 2 hard timber, 6 by 6 inches. The plank covering the rafters, E, is 2 by 12 inch hard pine. The walls are made of stone.

How to Handle Wasps with Safety.

In reply to a query in Science, "Is it true that white one holds his breath it is impossible for him to be stung by a wasp?" a Connecticut correspondent in the same journal says: "I have picked up bushels of live wasps, holding my breath at the moment when the wasp was grasped, and have never been stung under such circumstances. I have frequently been stung by wasps when I have disturbed them unawares. As to the explanation of the phenomenon, I have none to give. I have tried the experiment on hornets, honey bees and bumble bees, and a single trial with each was sufficient to prove that the plan did not work with either of these species."

Hays and Thrift.

It is reported that the big cattle ranches of the west and southwest are breaking up.

Experiments made during the past season in exporting pears to Europe did not result favorably.

According to the department of agriculture, the average per acre of wheat used for seeding is 1.38 bushels.

The last legislature of Michigan enacted a law, making the members of the state board of agriculture an independent forestry commission.

Silk production is being encouraged in Kansas. The state has, by act of legislature, established a station from which eggs will be distributed and reelers educated.

The peach growers of Maryland and Delaware have decided to ask the legislatures of those states to enact laws compelling growers to destroy all trees affected by the yellows on the first appearance of that dreaded disease.

A WEEK OF PRAYER.

For the National, State and Local W. C. T. U., from March 18th to 25th, 1888.

BELOVED SISTERS:—We call every union, and every woman in our heroic constituency to spend a week in united and special prayer, both private and public, for such a baptism of wisdom and courage upon ourselves and our work as will put the fire of divine power as shall be felt in all this land. Reasons, year upon year, is one of struggle and of destiny. Within these months the temperance cause shall be in the very heart of a mighty contest. Then let us pray,

First: That upon our great organization may come a fresh impulse from Heaven; and on every active worker a new anointing of the Spirit.

Second: For our unused membership held to the pledge and name, but not consecrated to the spirit and activities of the work. Let us ask God to call our dormant women to life.

Third: For the great body of Christian womanhood who yet stand afar from this greatest of missionary agencies for the salvation of our own and other lands.

The meetings of the week need not be widely public, but there aim to invite universal attention. Begin quietly an afternoon meeting for prayer in your own union, a public meeting, or in a parlor, with the door touched already with a long, long for more of God in our work, and more of His power on all our people. Make special first for all members of the unions, that together we may offer our prayers. If attended to, there will be a fresh and deep consecration upon the temperance reform or its methods.

Seek God. Seek Him alone for a great wakening of the church and the nation. The liquor traffic is here with its abominations legalized because of spiritual death. We need consecrate anew and made true, Sisters of the W. C. T. U., set the week apart, hold at least one meeting a day for the quiet, unostentatious seeking of God herein suggested. Two public evening meetings, with sermons, gospel talks, or conferences would be of great value. The evening of March 25 might be made effective by union services where these can be arranged. When the week closes, not give way for this, hold such a meeting in the afternoon of that day.

No topics are suggested, but they lead from the one central thought of all the days. Many things you will remember; our own work; our country's need and perils; the workers who must go out into the coming contest; the pleaders at the fireside; the voters at the ballot; but this one thing seek and find—God's touch of power upon our own spiritual life, and the spiritual life of the nation.

On behalf of the National W. C. T. U., FRANCES E. WILLARD, Pres., CAROLINE B. BURLL, Cor. Sec.

One Bouquet a Day.

Somebody once said 'the didn't mind a plain dinner if their were roses on the table." If we can afford A cella in bloom will make the bared room beautiful. Flowers help us over many rough places in life. There should be plants in every sunny window; there should be flowers, or, at least, something fresh and green on the table three times a day every day in the year. Leave out the cake, but have some flowers. Better a rose-bud before the guest's plate than a Welsh rarebit or the richest gravy—better for all concerned. Did you ever take some flowers to a sick room or hospital? It's the greatest pleasure ever invented. Try it and see. Here, a little bouquet for mother, "O, that's for girls" Wait a little, my man, and we shall see you spending all your spare change for button-hole bouquets and sending roses to your friend on the other just through the roof, as shown at C. The construction of his cellar is as follows: F, ventilator, with screen over inside end. This is for summer use, being closed in winter, though it might serve as a chimney if it was necessary to have a stove in the cellar during the latter season. The roof beam A and brace B are 2 hard timber, 6 by 6 inches. The plank covering the rafters, E, is 2 by 12 inch hard pine. The walls are made of stone.

Incident Consumption

Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and Whooping Cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why then leave yourself and children exposed to disease and death, when Hamilton's Cough Balsam will relieve all of these, and prevent diseases, such as Pneumonia, Inflammation of Lungs, and Consumption. All Lung difficulties are relieved by this wonderful balm. Sold by 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman. mar

Sherman Answered.

In his speech at the Lincoln banquet in Columbus John Sherman said:

"We gave them an overflowing treasury and they don't know what the devil to do with it."

"They" know what not to do with it—not to squander it, steal it, scatter it as the navy rings, the star route rings and the treasury department rings have done before them. They do not propose to do anything with it "in the devil," but they do propose to use it in the administration of government, and in that alone, until they can cut down taxes, in spite of Sherman, and stop the overflow.—Missouri Republican.

Do You Value

Your horses and cattle? Attention to their health is as necessary as their regular food. If your horse is suffering from Epizootic, Ringbone, Spavin, Sprained Leg, Fever in Feet, Strains, Distress or Cuts, or your Cow has Caked Bag, Sore teats, or Bad Blood, you will save money by buying Parmelee's Veterinary Liniment and using it freely for any or all of these troubles. Any man, with your stock into a healthful and valuable condition. It is the best Liniment that for general use. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman. mar

Worth Knowing.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City, Fla., was taken with a severe cold, attended with a distressing cough and running into consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced in flesh, had difficulty in breathing, and was unable to sleep. Finally he tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and found immediate relief, and after using about a half dozen bottles found himself cured, and has had no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures as Dr. King's New discovery for Consumption. Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it. Trial bottles free at all Crosier's drug store.

Stock Growers

All agree that for general use in their business no powder is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those prepared by E. M. Parmelee, because they really do contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do not fail to act quickly and effectually in Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, Bad Blood, Stoppage of Water, and Poor Digestion, &c., in horses. For Cattle, Hogs, Sheep, Poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 35 cents. Sold by G. W. Beaman. mar

A Novel Church Entertainment.

In a Presbyterian church at Placerville, Cal., a few evenings ago, a novel entertainment was given. A young lady representing America was seated on a dais covered by the flag and stripes and was attended by four little pages, who introduced successively representatives of various heathen countries dressed in appropriate costume. These kneeling as supplicants pleaded with America to send them the Gospel. The parts were well carried out, and the proceeds go to the cause of the mission.—New York Tribune

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phoebe Cousins, Hartford, Conn. Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 78 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years and can now myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, only 50c. at Dr. G. W. Crosier's drug store.

Strength of Actresses.

Fanny Davenport is said to be the strongest woman on the stage. She has a powerful physique and the test of health, Morphine, she does not use. Her looking, is physically strong. She thinks that she developed her muscle as a young girl by walking miles in the country, her family, and in after years by churning butter on her ranch in California.—Cleveland Leader.

THE NEXT VICE PRESIDENT.

Sketches of the Men Most Talked of in Connection with the Office.

Speculation is rife at present as to who will be the next vice president of the United States. We give below sketches and portraits of the men most talked of to take the second place on the Democratic ticket.

Daniel W. Voorhees was born in Butler county, O., Sept. 26, 1827. In 1849 he was graduated from the Indiana Asbury university. He began the practice of law in 1851. He was elected to the Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, Forty-first and Forty-second congresses, and took his seat as a Democrat in the United States senate in November, 1877, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Oliver P. Morton. Was subsequently elected by the legislature for the unexpired term and for the full term expiring, re-elected in January, 1885. His term of service will expire March 3, 1891.

William Freeman Vilas, present secretary of the interior, was born at Chelsea, Vt., July 9, 1840. In 1858 he was graduated at the University of Michigan. He studied law in Albany and after he was admitted to the supreme court her of the state of New York he moved to Wisconsin. He enlisted in the army of the rebellion in 1861 as a private in the Fourth Indiana cavalry and in the Forty-seventh Indiana infantry. In 1868 he was elected to the state senate and served four years. He was elected lieutenant-governor on the Democratic ticket in 1876 and governor in 1878.

THIRTY-NINE ROUNDS.

The Prize-Fight Between Sullivan and Mitchell Results in a Draw.

Too much talked-of fight between Sullivan and Mitchell occurred on Baron Rothschild's estate at Croll, France, and resulted in a draw. Thirty-nine rounds were fought, Sullivan getting the first knock-down, and Mitchell the first blood. Both men were severely punished, but the reports agree that Sullivan probably had the worst of it, for the reason that he stood up and fought, while his opponent was dodging and failing to save himself. THE Methodist University at Mitchell, Dakota, was burned to the ground on Friday morning. There were over forty journals of the conference present. Those in the vicinity of the university had begun at 12:30, Mitchell winning the toss for corner and choosing the sun at his back. Sullivan came in like first round both contestants showed their tactics, Mitchell's aim was to avoid punishment and produce the fight in the hope of tiring out the American. Sullivan fought for a knock-out from the start, and in round two he was three to one against the field. Toward the end of the fight the betting became even. In the first round Sullivan got away with two blows on Mitchell's head, and receive a left-hander in his stomach in return. Mitchell then crouped to avoid punishment, but in the second round Sullivan landed his man on the ropes twice and went down. The third and fourth rounds were like the preceding one, Mitchell being knocked down at the close of each. It was evident at this time that Sullivan was surprised and disappointed at the stamina and pluck displayed by Mitchell. In the eighth round the ring, full could rarely get to close quarters. Sullivan evidenced, however, in the sixth round that Sullivan was suffering for lack of wind. Mitchell was gaining courage and taking advantage of his adversary's condition by forcing the fight at close quarters. Sullivan's recent jaw was swelled from blood, lasting rounds rose to fifteen a fearful storm prevailed, and nearly all but the principals and their seconds took shelter in a shed. In one of the rounds Sullivan received a severe cut on the cheekbone, which bleed copiously and shaken up the temple, but Sullivan was evidently trying. He was shivering visibly, and his teeth were chattering from the dampness which he had endured. By and by, however, the sun came out quite warm, and with the appearance of renewed vigor on Sullivan's face, the fight recommenced rather, but Mitchell agaitly stood him in good stead, and he rolled out the retired most of the time. The end of the fight was tedious. The ground had become soft, which was used by the men to their advantage, and would stand in the middle of the ring while Mitchell would dance about, Sullivan seemed little hurt, and showed great generosity and scared the best, but it was evident he was afraid of Sullivan's right. A draw had been mutually agreed upon by the seconds of the pugilists all get together and shake hands, but at least two hours elapsed, probably favor, owing to the darkness. The fight occupied 2 hours and 10 minutes.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

A POLITICAL quarrel in Clark County, Georgia, between Sheriff George W. Allen and ex-Sheriff Davis Carter, resulted in a murder and suicide. Allen shot Carter dead and then killed himself.

A CHARLESTON (W. Va.) dispatch announces the death of Gen. D. H. Strother, an old time and popular author. His literary career was begun in 1853 by the publication in Harper's Magazine of a series of illustrated sketches of Virginia life, over the nom de plume of "Porte Crayon," which appeared regularly several years. He was 72 years old at the time of his death.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

THE new internal-revenue bill was submitted by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to the full committee on the 6th inst. The following is a brief outline of the measure:

It begins by removing the tax from tobacco on July 1, 1886, after which date manufacturers of cigars will pay a special tax of $5 annually instead of $10 as now. Dealers will pay $5 annually as a special tax. Dispensaries and tobacco to the full amount of the tax will be allowed on cigars and cigarettes packages held by manufacturers and dealers on July 1. The tax on fruit brandies is reduced one-half. Stills of less than 40 gal. capacity are exempt. Penalties and minimum punishments are laid down for violations of internal-revenue laws in the statutes they are abolished, and it is left to the discretion of the court to fix the penalty, not exceeding the maximum imposed. Revenue officers are empowered to administer oaths, issue subpoenas, and, without asking permission from the district attorney, to bring suits. Any deputy collector, with this exception warrants for arrest, search and seizure, shall make and set forth the facts and alleging facts to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant. Cases to court officers in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws shall only be tried in cases where a district attorney shall, or wherein the district attorney, upon application of the collector, shall refuse to prosecute upon information or indictment. Persons arrested upon warrants under the internal revenue laws must be taken before a United States judicial officer in the county of arrest, or if no such officer be in that county, within the county of arrest, and the judicial officer shall have power to make the preliminary examination and discharge, admit to bail, or commit to prison the persons arrested. This section does not apply to persons arrested for offenses committed in internal revenue districts in which the secretary of the Treasury may compromise civil or criminal cases and remove or remit fines, penalties, or assessments under the internal-revenue laws. Provision is made for not made, or are made, upon the ground of any compromise, or remission of any penalty or forfeiture, or of any claim for internal revenue tax or tax upon which the tax shall be assessed with interest at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum. All fruit brandies made from the product of the year 1886 shall be stamped on or before March 31, 1887. When a distillery is seized the machinery and apparatus must be sold without being condemned to forfeiture. Distilleries which much less than twenty-five bushels of grain per day shall be rated according to their capacity, and may be operated without bonded warehouses. Special warehouses may be established where the president of any designated number of these distilleries may be appointed, which president shall be responsible subject to the customary bond, and distillers may withdraw spirits free of tax for use in the arts and medicine. The act provides that it shall go into effect July, 1886. The total reduction in revenue made by the act is about $71,000,000, made up of $60,000,000 on tobacco and $6,000,000 on the special taxes remedied.

The Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee have received to add this bill to the Mills tariff bill, making it an integral part of the scheme for revenue reduction.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "The House Committee on Elections unanimously confirmed the decision of the sub-committee in favor of Gen. Post's title to the seat as Representative from the Tenth District of Illinois. Before beginning the tedious examination of the ninety pages of printed record it was agreed by the sub-committee that their guide upon disputed points of law should be the statutes of Illinois, as construed by the Supreme Court of the State. The disputed votes were taken up one by one, and it was found that irregular and illegal votes had been cast for both parties to the contest, but after giving Mr. Worthington the benefit of all doubts the net result of the sifting was about fifty-one majority for Gen. Post.

THE swords in the possession of Mrs. Shields belonging to her late husband, Gen. James Shields, are to be purchased by Congress for $10,000.

ENVOYS are being made to have locomotive engineers, like marine engineers, licensed and controlled by the Government. It is said that a bill has been prepared on the subject, and will be submitted to Congress.

THE Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has agreed to make a favorable report on Judge Hayes' bill appropriating $75,000 for a Government building in Davenport.

THE House Committee on Commerce has made a favorable report on Mr. Bayne's postal telegraph bill, says a Washington dispatch. It appropriates $2,000,000 for the purpose of the act, and places the general supervision of the system under a Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. The work of establishing the telegraph lines, etc., is to be done under the direction of the Secretary of War. The rates of tariff for twenty-word telegrams are 10 cents for 500 miles or less, and 20 cents for 500 to 1,000 miles, with proportionately increased rates for longer distances. The report which accompanies the bill defends the Government's right to build and operate telegraph lines, and says that public opinion, good faith and justice do not require the Government to purchase the property and franchises of the Western Union Company.

AN investigation designed to cover the general subject of combinations and monopolies was begun Thursday by the House Committee on Manufactures. The sugar trust was the first to be investigated. John E. Parsons, a New York lawyer, was the only witness examined, and his testimony did not throw much light on the subject.

THE Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means are standing like a stone wall between their tariff bill and criticism, says a Washington special to the Chicago Daily News.

They are determined that the bill shall be reported to the House, and, if possible, passed just as it is, without a change in punctuation or a comma inserted. They say that the majority of the committee have had great vexation in getting up a bill that will satisfy the Democracy long and long, and with immense difficulty have finally secured an agreement among themselves upon a measure. They say that they dare not risk any further consideration lest an entering wedge shall force the measure to pieces. They have all sworn body calls by the Democratic caucus, and they say that they will stand by their work. So stand are to be resisted and voted down if possible, and they will succeed, unless Congressman Morrison introduced a petition from a cement company in Illinois, asking that cement be placed in their capacity, and pay for material used in the construction of their Special warehouses. Opposition to this petition is expected, and it is doubtful if it will be reached. Then Mr. Reed presented a similar petition from a Maine cement company, which has dealed also. Several other petitions representing various industries, will be presented, and, if they are not reached, Mr. Morrison will make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Should different interests involved be requested to be heard, the request will be granted by a party vote. Judge Kelley then will be ready to present the report of the sub-committee by the time Mr. Morrison's motion is made.

THE United States Minister at Pekin has informed the Department of State that the ports of China at which foreigners have the right to reside in and transact business of its business are as follows: Shanghai, Newchwang, Tientsin, Chefoo, Ichang, Hankow, Kiukiang, Wuhoo, Chinkiang, Ningpo, Wenchow, Foo Chow, Pamoin, Takow, Amoy, Swatow, Canton, Kiung-Chow, and Pakhoi.

In the death of Thomas J. Potter, Vice President and General Manager of the Union Pacific system, that company loses an executive officer whose services were almost indispensable, and from the list of the really great railroad magnates of America one of the most conspicuous names will be missed. Mr. Potter died in Washington.

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

THE Union Labor party of Indiana met in convention at Indianapolis and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, J. R. Mellor; Lieutenant Governor, John F. White; Secretary of State, A. C. Geyer; Auditor of State, John P. Hannegan; Treasurer of State, H. C. Dull; Clerk of the Supreme Court, J. C. Smith; Superintendent of Public Instruction, W. H. Johnson. The platform reaffirms the platform of the Cincinnati convention of 1886.

At the convention at Grand City, Neb., Gen. Colwell was re-elected by a majority of six over Francis. The contest was bitter. The latter was supported by the Law and Order League and was pledged to enforce the prohibitory law. Ex-Senator Thomas H. Carpenter, a Prohibition Democrat, was in Harrison on the convention day. The people's ticket, headed by the Hon. Fabio Mayor, was elected Mayor of Nashua, Iowa. Mr. Mayor is a Democrat, Democrats were elected Aldermen. Three Republican Aldermen and two Democrats were elected at Waverly, Iowa. At Waterloo, Iowa, three Republicans and one Democrat were elected Aldermen. The village of Oak Grove, Mo., recently incorporated, elected three license trustees, and two anti-license trustees. H. C. Blackburn, Prohibitionist, was elected Mayor of Washington, Ind. At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, P. Mullaly, Democrat, was elected Mayor by a majority of 700. The Democrats elected four Aldermen. For Councilmen out of the twenty-one Aldermen, one elected at Cilumwa, Iowa.

SECRETARY FAIRCHILD, in his report submitted to Congress on the Pacific railroads, stated that the Treasury surplus would reach $140,000,000 in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887. It is now estimated at the department that the surplus at the end of June, 1888, will exceed $100,000,000.

GEN. NEAL DOW, the venerable "father of prohibition," has announced himself as a candidate for the Mayoralty of Portland, Me., on Tuesday, by the Republican candidate, Charles E. Shannon, with a majority of 1,000. It was a fight of runs against prohibition, and prohibition was laid to bed. Dow was the social candidate of the Prohibitionists and Democrats, heading both their tickets. The democrats and temperance men had been holding meetings, rallied for Dow, but did not think it necessary to go to the polls on the issue of the anti-prohibitionist election.

At a meeting of the Illinois Republican State Central Committee held in Chicago on the 6th inst., it was decided to hold the Republican State Convention at Springfield May 5 and 6.

THE Maine State Democratic Convention will be held at Augusta, May 26, for the nomination of a State ticket and delegates to St. Louis.

THE Iowa Prohibitionists have decided to hold the Democratic National Convention in the north now of the Tippecanoe Indian Land, which will be arranged to seat 11,000 people.

THE INDUSTRIAL REALM.

THE question of the legal obligations of railroads to operate their lines in connection with the Burlington strike, says a Chicago telegram, is now brought up for adjudication before Judge Gresham in the United States Circuit Court in the form of an application for injunction restraining the Wabash from further refusing to receive or deliver Burlington cars. It is said that the school of Locomotive Engineers and its officers from issuing orders to engineers and firemen to refuse to handle Burlington freight. The Burlington case is thus appealing to the courts to restrain the most strongest because the Wabash road is in the hands of a receiver appointed by and acting under the authority of the United States Court. The decision in this case will determine the relation and legal standing of all the roads that have entered into pledges of neutrality as a means of avoiding trouble with the brotherhoods.

A CHICAGO dispatch of Saturday says: The Burlington officials received the following telegram from the General Manager of the Burlington and Missouri River Railway in Nebraska:

Judge Dundy, of the United States Court, has issued an order requiring the Union Pacific Railway Company to take our business in accordance with our charter, and restraining and restraining the engineers of the Union Pacific Railway Company from refusing to take our business; also restraining the engineers from striking, combining, or conspiring for the purpose of organization or advising a strike.

THE FOREIGN BUDGET.

DELAY in the settlement of the Bulgarian question continues to threaten the peace of Europe. Increasing irritation in Russia is plainly indicated in the cable dispatches. Orders have been issued to dissolve the colleges of military stores at Warsaw and for the immediate return of officers absent on furlough from their regiments. Should the powers continue to postpone action Russia may say she yield to the pressure of influential public sentiment and herself undertake the expulsion of Ferdinand and the selection of his successor.

A BULLETIN was issued at San Remo on the 6th inst., signed by all of the six doctors in attendance upon the Crown Prince, which says as follows:

In view of the reports published in the press alleging that there are differences of opinion among the medical attendants of the Crown Prince of Germany, the undersigned deem it their duty to inform the public that the condition of the illness to such divergence exist. Just as little do they maintain that a consultation of the kind has taken place during and since the illness, the contrary has been repeatedly affirmed. The wound has healed, the voice is improving, and the other physical things are in a healthy condition. The nourishing and strength of the patient increase. The patient's strength is more satisfactory. The fever has abated. The night was free from fever. The patient has slept well, has had no fever. He sleeps, with interruptions, for hours together.

LORD LONGFORD is on his way to the far northwestern portions of the Queen's dominions in America, to hunt polar bear and musk ox.

THE GRIP OF BERLIN.

THE grief of Berlin at the loss of the Kaiser is pitiful, if we may credit dispatches from the German capital.

The stewed churches are thronged with weeping men and women, heartbroken over the loss of their beloved Kaiser. Crowds assemble near the monument of Frederick the Great, uncovered, and sing the hymn of the Prussian dead at the window where the body of the Kaiser lay in state. The Crown Prince Late Thursday night the royal patient gave an audience to Prince Bismarck and Count Von Moltke, which has marked the closing days of his life. The Prince of Wales has telegraphed to the Crown Prince of Germany the news of future announcement of death, and found Prince Bismarck and Count Von Moltke in the bedside. Despite the remonstrances of his physicians, the Crown Prince insisted on prolonging the conversation with them, discussing with cold-blooded calmness the chances of his present course, the possibility of peace, of war, and the illness of Frederick. The Crown Prince, who is now dying Emperor by his signature, gave the Chancellor and Count Von Moltke the Emperor's last signature is as bold and firm as that of his father, Frederick. The interview lasted half an hour. The Chancellor and the Emperor had a short conversation with the Empress, who was in a state of stricken family. Tears rolled down the cheeks of the Empress, who is the mother of the Crown Prince, and of Prince Henry, the Grand Duchess of Baden, was present at the interview. The Empress is passion to her father, accompanying him on his long rides and drives in the open air, and in the study. After leaving the family, Prince Bismarck and Count Von Moltke had a long talk with Prince Bismarck. Throughout his last at 8:30 o'clock Friday morning, Prince Bismarck, Count Von Moltke, and the moment of dissolution was near, and summoned the Crown Prince to his bedside, and stating to the people, as well as the officers of the army, and court

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

A BILL to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship Canal Company was reported to the Senate on the 5th inst. A resolution was agreed to instructing the select committee on Indian bonded to inquire into the methods of allotting lands in severalty to Indians on reservations in Nebraska and Minnesota, and as to the sale of timber on those lands. Resolutions were also adopted calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information relative to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, and as to the sale of timber on those lands. The Senate then took up the bill for a bridge across the Mississippi River between Rock Island and Davenport, Iowa, and after a long debate the bill was passed. The Senate then took up the bill for the relief of the pre-emptor, homestead, and timber-culture settlers

SULLIVAN, from the standing point of pugilism is not the man that his devotees claim him to be. He has brute force and that is all that he possesses. He has not courage, but obstinacy. He is not so much a hero as a bull dog, being a big brute, with a spark of intelligence that makes him all the more dangerous. It is a good thing that his pretensions have been slipped from him. He has been a noisy jackass masquerading in a lion's skin. Let us hear no more from J. L. Sullivan.—Bay City Tribune.

IF the protective tariff does not foster and encourage trusts and monopolies, why does hard coal that was sold all through 1877 and 1878 for $4 and $4.25 gross retail—why does that same coal now cost $8, with severe fines to be imposed on any distributor who may dare to sell for a smaller price? If a protective tariff be such a wise expedient of government in time of profound peace, why are wages lower now than when coal was $4? Why, anyhow, should coal be held at the cornered price of $8 in the cold months?—Dayton Democrat.

TENNYSON can take a worthless sheet of paper and by writing a poem on it make it worth $50,000. That's genius. Vanderbilt can write fewer words and make the sheet worth $50,000,000. That's capital. The United States government can take 412¼ grains of silver, stamp it, and call it a dollar. That's power. A mechanic can take $25 worth of material and make it into a watch worth $100. That's skill. The merchant can take an article worth ten cents and sell it for ten dollars. That's business. A lady can purchase a good bonnet for $10, but prefers to pay $100. That's style. The ditch-digger works ten hours a day and shovels tons of earth for $1. That's how the doctrine of supply and demand regulates the price of labor.

MEN who have succeeded in acquiring wealth do not lie exactly on a bed of roses. The wealth of a rich man is frequently regarded, not as the reward of labor, but as the proceeds of robbery of the unfortunate. Whatever he does with it, his acts are censured. If he lives expensively and spends his money freely in all directions, thus promoting the prosperity of all to whom it may go; or if he gives great dinners, keeps a coach and four, and indulges in all the luxuries which he can well afford, then he is criticised as being a drone in the human hive and of no advantage to the community. If he lends his money at the market rate he is a Shylock; if he invests it at a low rate of interest—in government bonds for instance—language is scarcely sufficient to express the enormity of his offense in the eyes of his many censors. And is not labor entitled to a reward? Undoubtedly. Possession of wealth is no more a crime than possession of poverty. The men who complain against the rich and their immunities are complainig against all they consider most desirable. In censuring methods and ways of making money or spending it they are censuring the very means they are themselves using as far as they are able, and the privileges they would claim if their sphere of action should be enlarged. The reward of labor must not be rendered uncertain.

R. Connable & Son, of Petoskey, have purchased a new fourteen-mile tug in Chicago for their fishing business. Henry Burns will ship as her engineer and will go to Chicago in a few days to fit out.

Col. O. T. Booth has sold to Chicago parties about 500,000 feet of seasoned birch and cork pine lumber which he has had on hand for the past two years.—Petoskey Independent-Democrat.

The three-year-old stallion, Bell Boy, owned by S. A. Brown & Co., of Kalamazoo, was sold a few days ago to parties at Frankfort, Ky., for $36,000, the highest price ever paid for a three-year-old trotter.

On the first of May, Mackinaw City will be made a signal display station, and a full station will be opened at Sault Ste. Marie. The display station at Mackinaw City will receive cold wave and signal warnings during such time of the year as navigation is open.

The Cheboygan Democrat is about to commence its ninth year of publication, with new body type and other improvements, which bespeake prosperity for the publisher. The Democrat is one of our most valued exchanges, and any amount of prosperity is none too good for its owner.

The state crop and weather report shows injury to the wheat in the southern four tiers of counties. The average depth of snow in the northern counties was 22 inches, the central sly and southern four tiers were practically bare. There remain in the hands of farmers about 1,700,000 bushels of the 1887 wheat crop for market. Live stock's condition is slightly below the average.

The Jackson Patriot says: Michigan pays its chief executive $1,000 salary per year and its secretary of state $800. The former is eking out an existence by delivering grange lectures and attending banquets, and the latter is earning an honest livelihood on the state news column of the Detroit Journal, and desires it understood that he is not a candidate for further honors in the line of statecraft.

A special from Grand Haven to the Grand Rapids Democrat, under date of March 14, says: Capt. Snyder yesterday sold the steamer Van Raalte to Messrs. Mayo, Brown & Hofstra, of Muskegon, for $7,500. The Van Raalte only last season had new ceiling, deck, and deck beams put in, about $3,200 having been laid out on her in the past two years. She will now be rebuilt and made over into an excursion boat for the purpose of running on Muskegon lake.

THE Detroit Evening Journal asks for the truth of the following: A young man of Jackson called upon his lady love a few nights ago, and she met him at the door. By some means not explained, while in the hallway she found that his breath smelled strongly of whiskey. She led him to the door, and with more sorrow than anger in her voice, she said: "Joe, this county has voted on the prohibition question, and now I am going to vote. I vote no! Now don't come back until you have got around on the side of the majority." He got out.

Frankfort raised $7,500 for the T., A. A. & N. M. railroad, instead of $75,000, as first published. J. M. Ashley said to the committee that waited upon him in regard to the matter, that "if the citizens of Frankfort will give me the right of way on both sides of Betsie Lake, to the shore of Lake Michigan, I will commence work soon as the weather will permit." This proposition was accepted at a citizens' meeting, and the village council called a special election for last Monday, March 19, to bond the village for $7,500, with which to purchase the desired right of way.

Louis F. Arno, the pilfering portrait painter, of Cadillac, pleaded guilty before Judge Aldrich last week, and was sentenced to one year's imprisonment at Jackson. He deserved much more, and would have received it but for his eloquence in depicting the lonely condition of his wife and children during his imprisonment, which brought tears to the artist's eyes, and reached the heart of the judge. After sentence had been pronounced, the judge learned that the wife and children had been heartlessly deserted long before his coming to that city. The judge will hereafter undoubtedly look into the history of such fellows outside of court before passing sentence.

Labor Costs Less in America Than in Germany or England.

I have recently made some investigations which prove indisputably that American labor can compete with foreign. A lady's laced gaiter shoe, 24-button, can be made in Lynn, Mass., for 35 cents worth of labor. The manufacturer of the same shoe in Manchester, England, pays his workmen 60 cents. In Germany the labor costs 80 cents. For the single shoe the American laborer is paid less than either the English or German workman, yet he earns more per day. That is because of the superior intelligence, skill and organization of American labor. Another instance lies in the manufacture of cotton cloth. A German weaver turning out 100 yards of a certain quality will receive 70 cents for his labor. The English workman on the same quality of goods will receive 60 cents, the American 40 cents. Yet the American weaver will make more wages per day than the English or German laborers. It is our machinery and the skill of our workmen that enables them to earn more wages than foreign laborers and not a protective tariff. We could drive England out of the world's market if we would exchange for the commodities of other countries duty free.—Frank Hurd.

They are Demoralized.

One thing is very clearly demonstrated by the election of last Monday. That one thing is, that the republicans of Petoskey need a better organization and more thorough methods of working up and getting out their full strength at the polls. Every democrat except five voted on Monday.—Petoskey Record.

This is the situation all over the country. Ever since the death of Zack Chandler, republicans in Michigan have been losing their grip, and this demoralization has gradually extended to all the primaries. Here lies democratic opportunity. The best organization will win.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Ludwig Liberg, of Charlevoix, Michigan, his wife, to Adelbert R. Upright, dated July 1st, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, August 20th, 1884, in Liber 8 of mortgages, on page 97, and assigned by said Adelbert R. Upright to said Mortgagee, on page 98 of said Liber 8 of mortgages, by an assignment dated August 20th, 1884, and recorded in said office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, on page 98, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of two bonds of the Charlevoix Savings Bank (a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the state of Michigan) of Charlevoix, Michigan, bearing date July 1st, 1884, one for $1,000 and the other for $500 respectively, which said bonds are in Liber 8 of mortgages on pages 567, and 568 respectively, and which said Liber 8 of mortgages on pages 98, on March 16, 1886, on which mortgage there is now claimed to be due and unpaid the entire principal and interest thereon secured by said bonds, viz: Nine hundred and twenty-three one hundredths Dollars (923.23). The said mortgage is now owned by the above said Charlevoix Savings Bank, and by proceedings having been instituted either in law or equity to collect the same, or any part thereof, the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale therein contained, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, or so much as may be necessary to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage and all legal costs, at public vendue, at the front door of the village of Charlevoix, and 3rd one (1) of section six (6) of thirty-three (33) north, of range six (6) west, in Charlevoix County, Michigan,

The Monday evening's meeting of the Business Men's Association was adjourned to meet next Monday evening at the Bridge Street House at 8 o'clock sharp.

Through the kindness of county treasurer Orlando Blair, we are able this week to give a statement of the delinquent taxes of 1887 returned to the county treasurer's office by the several townships.

An Indian named Kee-was-kee-ons was arrested Saturday for stealing several small articles from Bartholomew & Co. He was tried before Justice Kane Monday morning, and fined five dollars and costs, or ten days in jail. He went to jail.

The C. W. Hill Granite Co., of Jackson, delivered last week a monument to the memory of G. W. Wrisley, victim of the Champlain disaster last June. It is of fine gray marble, of appropriate design and excellent workmanship, and is a worthy memorial.

A village newspaper is a photograph of the town where it is printed, and is the only evidence in the origin readers have of the town's prosperity. Every firm should be represented by a standing advertisement, be it large or small, that strangers may get a good impression of the place.

Geo. W. Miller, the clothier has a profuse display of hats and caps for the spring trade. He can suit all peculiarities of taste, fit all sizes of heads, and dress you all in the prevailing fashion. The principal change in style from last season is in the soft wool or "crush" hats, which are made with higher crowns. Other styles are substantially unchanged.

Jos. Beauvais is building forty new row boats, six clipper-rigged sailing yachts, and one coal burning steam yacht as an addition to his present excellent boat library. A number of the rowboats are built of cedar and butternut with deck inlaid of different colored woods. Wherever Mr. Beauvais' boats have been used they are very popular, and the demand for his work has made it necessary for him to enlarge the capacity of his works. He has just placed a twenty horse power engine in his factory, to drive his machinery. Mr. Beauvais' long experience in boat-building and his facilities for doing the work makes his place headquarters for all kinds of pleasure boats.

Mr. J. Milo Eaton, the well known attorney and real estate agent, has purchased of Oscar Upright the abstracts of title from Jan., 1885, which completes Mr. Eaton's abstracts to date, and enables him to furnish a complete and reliable abstract of any piece of land in Charlevoix county. Mr. Eaton has been actively engaged in the real estate and money loaning business for the past twelve years, and for that reason is better acquainted with the titles of the county than any other man in the county, and any person desiring to have their titles examined, and if defective made perfect, will do well to call on him at his office over the postoffice.

All appearances indicate that the school entertainment next Wednesday evening will be one of the very best of the series that in the past has been so universally popular with the friends of the Charlevoix schools. The character of the exercises chosen, and the preparations in the line of practice and drill, all point to a successful effort. If any have thought that preceding programs have exhausted the resources of good material, they will be agreeably disappointed if they witness this one. No one should miss it. Nearly one hundred and fifty children will participate in a pleasing variety of parts. Remember: At opera house, Wednesday evening, March 28th.

Twenty years ago tomorrow (on March 23d, 1868) the publisher of this paper packed his little grip with one change of underclothing, and walked from Onondaga, Ingham county, to Eaton Rapids, Eaton county, Mich., and entered the office of the Eaton Rapids Journal to learn the printing business. We were then fresh from school, our teacher for that winter being now the Hon. R. A. Montgomery, of Lansing, and it was he who secured for us the position in the printing office. During the twenty years we have devoted our time continuously and exclusively to that business, with no desire to exchange for any other. In that twenty years we can note many changes in the methods and circumstances of the country press, especially in the means of securing prompt information of important county news, and the giving each week the local news from all over the county.

W. P. Brown has received the plans and specifications of the new Episcopal church to be built at Charlevoix the present year. The plans present a gothic chapel 24x50 feet on the inside of auditorium, with enchancel, and under transept 12x20 feet, and also a vestry. It is expected to complete this much of the chapel, and have the same for occupancy the coming summer. The plans are so arranged that the structure may be enlarged when desirable without injury to the entrance, or chancel, by adding side transepts which, when fully completed will make the auditorium 48x75 feet, and accomodate three hundred persons On the inside will be seen the framework in natural wood, polished, with the chancel finished in colors. The window in the south, behind the chancel will be a memorial to the deceased daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Brown, in which may be seen a figure, life size, elegantly set, representing charity. The plans of the church were prepared by M. W. Roberts, a well known architect, and are the gift of Rev. Jones, rector of St. Luke's church, of Kalamazoo. The church will be erected upon the vacant lot west of S. M. See's residence.

THE COW QUESTION.

Some Reasons Why They Should Not Run at Large.

The JOURNAL is not in a ring to oppress poor people, neither is it actuated by purely selfish motives in the attempt to prevent cattle from running at large in the streets of the village. Anyone who ever lived in a city where cattle were prohibited from running loose in the streets, and at the same time made themselves acquainted with the labor and expense of the beautifying of streets, yards, and grounds, will agree with us that it is impossible to do that work successfully when cattle are likely at any moment to destroy what has taken years of time and many dollars in expense to cultivate and grow.

In addition to the property they destroy, cows in the street are a constant menace to small children who may chance to wander outside the yard and into the street or alley. There have been numerous instances reported where children were injured by violent cattle. The thrifty, cleanly housekeeper who looks beyond her doorstep to the sidewalk, will not hesitate to declare the average cow a most intolerable nuisance.

Shrubbery and thrifty gardens are especially unsafe, no matter how good the fences. Gates and bars are no protection against very many cattle. In an unlucky moment the fence is opened, and the work of a season is lost.

The Sentinel argues that there is not sufficient pasturage. There never will be until it is certain that pasturage is necessary. When it is made necessary someone will be enterprising enough to furnish it. Some have argued that the expense of pasturing will make it necessary to sell the cows. Nine out of every ten owners of cows sell one-half or more of the milk produced. Then let the cost of pasturage be added to the price of milk, and the consumer, who does not keep a cow, but suffers from other people's cows, will willingly pay the one, two, or three cents a quart increase, giving the cow owner a positive benefit. A ten-dollar tree or shrub saved will pay two cents a quart increase on five hundred quarts of milk; and what man would not much rather pay that increase to save the labor and expense already invested. As a rule cattle that are pastured give better milk, because of better food, than those which run wild. After the first season, the price of pasturage and the price of milk will be governed by the law of supply and demand, as now, and no one will suffer, while all will find a renewed interest in cultivating gardens, and in beautifying front yards, and streets, adding all the time to the inducements to strangers bred in the city to come and live with us.

If you are not wholly convinced, will you not consent to try it one year and have cattle herded or pastured outside of the principal streets of the village?

The Wandering Cow Prevents Yard Ornamentation.

Editor Journal.—Thank you for stirring up the bovine question. To any one not raised, reared, and brought up a mossback, and dry-rotted as such, the nuisance of cows running at large in the street is beyond doubt the most disgusting practice a community claiming to be civilized can indulge in. Not enough that said street ornament is very unsightly and continually in the way of buggies, or spill their manure on the sidewalk for people to slip on, and ladies to drag their clothes in, and make life miserable for people that are not twenty years old in Charlevoix, or people not used to associating with cows; but some persons want to beautify their homes and our village by planting trees, shrubbery, and flowers, and our neighbor's cows are sure to put at nought any and every attempt. A twenty-dollar cow will destroy a hundred-dollar garden in a few minutes.

Charlevoix is peculiarly—not situated, but constituted—that it might try have to feed the cows for a minority, and respectable owners feed their own cows.

Do the poorest classes have cows? I have not found that to be a fact. If a person is well enough off to be the owner of a cow, he certainly ought to be well enough off to feed her. If he is not, why should I or you feed her for him. Let us take one more step forward in civilization. Let the village council put a stop to this nuisance. Let people that have cows feed them, and not impose in this indecent manner upon the public any longer.

Please agitate this question and oblige the community at large.

A CITIZEN.

Eveline Proposes to take a Step Forward in this Matter.

Our Eveline correspondent sends a long letter reciting some of the hardships through which the pioneers of that township have passed in the matter of stock raising, but asserting his belief that the time has arrived when it is better and cheaper for each farmer to fence his own stock in a pasture lot than all the stock of the township out of his crops. That in the clearing of new land it is much more of a hardship to be compelled to enclose it with a fence before he can get a crop, than it is to get cattle pastured. That cattle at large frequently break into crops and not only injure the crops, but in many cases injure themselves by overeating of green wheat, oats or corn, and sometimes from choking on potatoes or bagas. Another matter of some importance is the frequent quarrels between neighbors on account of cattle breaking into growing crops, and destroying more than their necks are worth. The opinion is also expressed that while in some cases fewer cattle will be kept, all will be kept in better condition all the year and not so many as now will come out of the winter mere skeletons,—"spring poor." This system will gradually improve the stock, and give better results and more cash profit to the stock owner. Come to the polls April 2d, prepared to vote to keep cattle out of the roads, and you can go home at peace with your neighbor, and rest at night without fear that your summer's work will be destroyed by cattle before morning.

[We have been promised a defense of the present system, but the copy is not at hand at time of going to press.]

The Bennett Monument.

Last week the C. W. Hill Granite Co., of Jackson, Mich., delivered and set up in the Charlevoix cemetery the monument purchased last fall by the family of Mr. Henry Bennett. It is of Gray Scotch Dice Granite, cottage design, eight feet high, on a granite base three feet two inches square, making a total height of eleven feet two inches. Total weight about 7,000 pounds. There are four raised polished panels, with fine hammered border lines and ornaments. The inscription is simple, giving only the words "AT REST" in addition to the names of Mr. and Mrs. Bennett, the date of birth of each, and the date of death of Mr. Bennett. With the monument came also a granite marker bearing the word "Father." The entire work was done in Aberdeen, Scotland, and was delivered here in the original packages in which it was imported. C. W. Howard, agent for the firm, superintended the erection.

THE KING IS DEAD.

Death at Berlin of the Venerable Emperor of Germany.

Pathetic Description of the Last Hours at the Bedside of the Dying Ruler.

Prince William Takes Charge Under an Imperial Decree Signed in November.

The venerable Emperor William of Germany breathed his last at 8:30 on the morning of Friday, March 9. The event was not unexpected, as he had been sinking for forty-eight hours. In fact he was so near death's door the day previous to the final collapse that his death was prematurely telegraphed from the German capital to all parts of the civilized world. A Berlin dispatch dated at midnight of those days says:

"An immense but silent crowd stood near the palace all day, notwithstanding the fact that a heavy rain fell and that the streets were patrolled by cavalry. Business in the city was virtually suspended, and the theaters were closed. Divine service was held in the palace at 5 o'clock. All the members of the imperial family, the court dignitaries, and the members of the household were present. Hundreds of people knelt on the pavements in front of the palace and joined in the prayers offered by Chaplain Koegel. The Emperor fell into a swoon at 4 o'clock, and remained unconscious until 8 o'clock. He afterward fell into a quiet sleep, which lasted till 7 o'clock. Wine and other liquid nourishment were administered to him occasionally.

"Special services were held during the afternoon in the various churches. All the edifices were crowded to their utmost capacity, fervently is the prayers. Much personal grief was shown.

"The scene in the Kaiser's sick chamber between 4 and 5 in the afternoon of Thursday was impressive and affecting. At about 4 o'clock the Empress, the Crown Prince and Wilhelm, his son, entered the room, while sobs and silently persons were standing around his bed, among them being the Prince and Princess William, the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Baden, the Hereditary Prince and Crown Princess of Sweden, the Princess Frederick Charles, Prince Frederick Charles, Prince and Princess von Bismarck, Count von Moltke, and several ministers of state. The old monarch was full of fortitude. He felt that his end was near, but he desired to utilize the last moments of his life to bid farewell to his nearest and dearest, who, like the Empress, joined fervently, and then he took leave of everybody, speaking individually to each of those present. His mind was perfectly clear, and his ideas were quite connected, but he nearly half an hour he spoke with scarcely any interruption. At 5 o'clock he fell into a deep sleep, from which he awoke refreshment, and afterward again conversed with those around him. When he was beaught to husband his remaining strength he lay quietly, with his hands folded, in a state of partial stupor. Toward evening he conversed with Prince William, the Emperor went on to talk in cultured tones of various matters, and spoke a short time. The rule of Frederick William and Germany, being regarded as almost equally sacred, and his sympathies, is considered with as deep concern as is the soon-expected accession of his son. Prince William will probably not offend Bismarck and Von Moltke. The experience of his father has taught him that it is wise to know to be prudent. The Emperor, as a European war, will doubtless be maintained during his brief reign. But after Bismarck and Von Moltke have gone, and the affairs of the great German nation are in the hands of young Prince William, the Emperor may be more aggressive. Naturally, all only throughout Germany, but all Europe, he has suddenly become an object of the greatest interest and solicitude.

"DEATH OF THE MILITARY PARTY.

His mother's death, which he felt keenly, and has clearly distinguished himself as yet as a representative of the most objectionable type of the Prussian military "Junker." He is the pride of the military party, was a favorite of the late Emperor, and is the hope of Prince Bismarck.

"Prince William has great friendship for Frederick, as the latter has no special liking for him. Frederick has little of the Hohenzollern spirit of aggressiveness. He believes the time has come for Germany to devote herself to the arts of peace, and he is particularly accessible as a rule to the anti-Prussian states of Germany. He is not a believer in immense standing armies like his father or Prince Bismarck; he does not dream of the conquest of France, and he knows that the time has passed when Germany can rely on the mere strength of bayonets, sabres, and artillery.

"This has not been the belief of Emperor William and Prince Bismarck. Both have believed that the power of Germany, which was won by the sword, must be kept by the sword. The Prince's son is in a manner calculated to give him

Poets and Modern Ideas.

Mr. Sam Foss, one of the great poets, invent "Tom Hoods" in America, says in a recent issue of the Yankee Idea:

Homer was the great poet of his time because he wrote of matters that were interesting to his contemporaries, he described the single combats of warriors; he charged on the exciting tails of chariot races; his poetry is full of minute descriptions of armor, clothing, weapons, and the other belongings of his time. He wrote of things that people were interested in. His song was as full of current interest as the current newspapers of to-day. He came on the world of David, the poet of the Hebrew race. He was of flocks and shepherds; of green pastures and still waters; he embodied his song the popular conceptions of the theology of his time, and appealed directly to the sentiments of the people of his generation. All great poets have done the same—Dante and Shakspeare and Milton. The poets have been honored most by poetry who have been most in sympathy with their contemporaries.

But though Homer was a great poet in his day is no reason he should be copied and imitated indefinitely. In this is just what our poets are doing to-day. They are far behind the times. Yankees. Fauns and dryads sylphs and naiads, mermaids and Olympian gods and goddesses are the political stock in trade. The cotton wool of mythology, despite its original beauty, in the hands of many long-eared poets looks like a growing a trifle tiresome. We long to be New York, a Denver, a San Francisco, and are yawning drearily on such a dead monotony of Athenian ports. Who can doubt that there is as true poetical souls living in Boston or Omaha, or in our American farmhouses, or on our cattle ranches, as ever lived in Attica or Asia Minor. The world is not dead, but the world is hamadryads and wood-nymphs; but is a pretty tiresome thing to be in the roads and ocean steamers, in elastic lights and tenderness. If the workmen were a little of wonder and poetry for Job and Homer, why should we be the locomotive engineer like an angry demon, breathing smoke and fire across the continent, be a weary theme for the Jobs and Homers of to-day. The old bards sang of Mercury, the messenger of the gods. The people were interested in the telegraph messenger, he was a theme of current gossip, so to speak. If there is no excitement in regard to a messenger who carries a telegram, why should we be expected to have a swifter message-bearer of the gods, coming around a sharp angle caused by a boulder, was a jack rain of twenty-three animals. They all looked like phosphorescent glow, which made them appear all the more vivid against the dark of the hill.

They were loaded with different articles of merchandise, and the last one, which the spectral driver was urging on with his short goad, seemed to be loaded with bibles.

Every once in awhile as the train slowly filed along, the spectral driver of lean his load against a projecting rock as if resting himself. He would cause the driver to stop and look in his short stick. The weird specters slowly turned their heads and looked at him. More dead than alive from fright we made our way to where we had left the horse and buggy.

My companion informed me while on our way back to the city that this strange sight could be seen any dark night.

On the Outposts, 1780.

The way through the woods was deep in snow, and incumbered as they were with cattle, party progress Roberson made but slow progress, it being Christmas Day, 1779, before they arrived at the outpost of Lamb's Ford. Here we were molested by the Indians, but suffered much from the cold, and waited for the winter was the most severe which had been known in a century. The ice in the Cumberland was thick enough to sustain the passage of animals, and it was not many days before the settlers had crossed over and begun on the bluffs which lined the opposite bank the building of the fort and the few big houses which formed the nucleus of the future capital of Tennessee.

It was in the very heart of the wilderness, surrounded by nearly twenty thousand Creek, Cherokee, Chickasaw, and Chickasaws, all of whom were in alliance with Great Britain, which at that season of the year was all but subjugated the Southern colonies.

The stations erected, the settlers awaited in anxious suspense for the coming of the Indian wives and children. The three months allowed for the voyage had expired, but no news had come from them, nor had the sound of the paddle been heard on the stillness of the river solitudes. The anxiety about them soon became intense. Thus it was for a full month, and until the end of April. Then one morning at sunrise a solitary flat-bottomed boat, along the Cumberland, and in a few hours the little fleet of forty flat boats, canoes, and pirogues came to anchor under the walls of the fort, amid such rejoicing as was never before known in the wilderness.

We had been a voyage without a parallel in modern history. A thousand miles they had come, through a country infested with Indians, living in frail boats, down rapid and perilous streams never before navigated by white men. Their way had been through foaming whirlpools and over dangerous shoals thirty miles in extent, and they had endured the bitterest cold, and for many long days and nights were subjected to the constant and deadly fire of fifteen hundred Chickasaws, the most ferocious tribe of savages on the American continent. Thirty-one of the company had been left by the way, tortured by the savages, and one had been drowned.

Thus, amid ice and snow, and the intense cold of 1780—not noted as the coldest weather in American latitudes—was planted the first civilized settlement in the Mississippi Valley.—Edmund Kirke, in Harper's Magazine.

How Jumbo Came.

Jumbo had never been out of the Garden since the day he entered it, twenty years before. When my agents attempted to get him out he would stay out, and he seemed to know instinctively that something extraordinary was going to happen. My agent cabled me: "Jumbo is lying in the Garden and will not stir. What shall we do?" I replied: "I am his lawyer as long as he wants to." All this, it will be observed, kept up public interest. Then we built a car on wheels and sunk the wheels into the ground, leaving both ends of the cage open. It was many days before he could be induced to walk through. We let him get used to going through for several days and finally shut him in. It took a score of horses to pull the cage out of the earth after we had dug around the wheels, and we dragged the cage down to the wharf. Those Jumbo feet a whole crowd of his admirers, including such fashionable people as Lady Burdett-Coutts, who brought him cakes and dainties. One enthusiast testified his affection by sending some champagne and oysters. On the vessel we had to cut away part of the deck above his lodgings to make his apartment large enough. The cost of Jumbo was $10,000; his final cost was $30,000. He paid for himself the first ten days after his arrival.—P. T. Barnum, in the Epoch.

Records That Went to Halifax.

It has not long been known that at the commencement of the British troops in March, 1776, many of the loyalist inhabitants of Boston departed with them. The fleet, conveying the troops and the fleeing civilians, proceeded to Halifax, where many of the loyalists took up their abode and where they subsequently remained, as we found at the present day. It is also a matter of general belief that these fleeing ladies took with them many valuable records. It is not, however, generally known that among the missing records include all of the papers of the Boston Custom House, which at that time had established to the time of the evacuation. Among these papers were the records of the arrival of many of the vessels which brought the early settlers of the colony, and which included much which, at the present day, would be of the greatest value as historical material. It is credibly reported that many of these documents are still in existence in the possession of the authorities at Halifax. Would it not be an excellent idea to secure, if possible, these valuable papers, which it probable might be done upon proper application?—Boston Advertiser.

Rebuked.

"Well, Bertie, dear, were you a good boy at school to-day?" said a fashionable mother of her boy of 10 years.

"You can just bet I was," replied Bertie. "I had to stay after school in one room for a month is going to get a licking, and I'm going to resign out myself."

"Bertie," cried his shocked parent, "I want you to stop using such slang words and phrases. Where you catch up such stuff at times is a mystery to me. Every other word you say is a slang expression, and I want you to cease it at once. Talk about 'freezing' on to a thing! What you giving us, boy? Do you expect to freeze on to anything valuable? Not if I know myself, I don't. Now, you light out, and let it be a cold day before I hear any more such talk from you, and don't you forget it."—Detroit Free Press.

She Appreciated Emerson.

An old washerwoman in Concord, at work one day, as it began to grow dark unrolled her sleeves and said she must go home and get ready for Mr. Emerson's lecture.

"Why, are you not too tired to go?" she was asked.

"Oh, no, indeed; it always rests me," was the reply.

"Do you understand what the lecture is about?" continued the questioner.

"Well—no" was the answer; "but it does me good to see him stand up there, looking so beautiful, and telling us all we are just as good as he is!"—Boston Gazette.

Always Prepared.

"Did you ever have a lady hand you a twenty-dollar?" was asked of a car conductor yesterday.

"I have."

"Nicely dressed, high-toned ladies?"

"Just so. There were several on this line who used to hand me lead quarters."

"And you didn't feel like saying anything to them?"

"There was no need to. I always had four lead nickels to return for change."—Detroit Free Press.

Why Hair Curls.

It is not generally known that the reason hair curls when moistened is a hot iron is that the moisture on the side next the iron being evaporated by the heat the cells in that part approach each other more closely, and this shrinking of one side causes a bend or curve.—London Hospital.

TOMMY, THE BEACH CAT.

A Story Written to Interest and Amuse the Little People.

But Which Will Prove Edifying, if Not Profitable, to Adult Readers.

TOMMY, the beach cat, says a writer in the Chicago Times, was catching a rat, and Barbara was sitting at watching Tommy. Barbara was very tired and tomorrow at sunrise she found herself in a wedding, and the kids kept dropping over her round blue eyes.

Barbara had named Tommy "the beach cat" herself, because he had been found wandering on the beach. They were always together, up stairs and down, and half a dozen times a day they were given their milk together. The house was very still on the particular day, for mamma and all the rest had gone up stairs and forgotten Barbara, who sat alone in the kitchen in her little red chair. Tommy, the beach cat, sat quietly and shiny near her, and both of them were quite startled when a rat suddenly whisked into the room. It was a very small rat indeed, and it would have given a peck of chaos to have been caught in the act of that room without being noticed. But that was absurd to hope for, for very little escaped those two friends, Barbara and Tommy. Barbara saw it. There was a sudden exchange of challenge between the scared rat and the cat, whose whiskers were twitching with enjoyment, but after a few seconds of brilliant racing and dodging they both sat so still that Barbara was on the very verge of rolling out of her chair on the floor, when the rat made a dart into the rat hole. Tommy bolted after. The rat vanished through a hole. Barbara feared Tommy would follow and be lost to her, perhaps forever; so she gave a rush after him and caught him by the tail just as he reached the hole. To the surprise of Barbara, this hole opened wide enough to let both her and the beach cat through, and they found themselves safe after being dragged through a very tiresome journey, at least Barbara thought so. The rat's journey was much longer than that of the cat, and when Barbara and Tommy had come to the end of the journey, they found themselves in a strange place, and Barbara was very, very small for a girl and Tommy very large for a cat, they looked at each other, they were nearly the same height.

"I always take a walk in the country when I can," remarked Tommy, "it soothes me so."

"Have your fur in the right way, so to speak," broke in the black cat.

"I am very fond of the country" Barbara saw that it was very full. The meadows stretched in long rows down the yard.

"All killed by care," said Tommy, sadly, as he looked at the cats.

"And have none died from anything else?" the little girl asked sadly.

"Well, sad Tommy, "I hope you won't feel hurt if I tell you that boys and girls are responsible for a good many of their deaths."

"You don't mean to tell me that the tin cans we tie to their tails hurt them, do you?" Barbara asked, blushing red.

"No, not that. Worse than that. They never take a swing on a summer afternoon that they don't let the old cat die.

"But do you do the first eight times you are killed?" inquired the little daughter, stopping to pull up her stocking.

"We fall into a state of catalepsy and are laid on a mantelpiece for nine days. At the end of that time we feel as well as ever. But each life is better than the last, and at the close of the ninth we go where all cats go. The cats that scratch and caterwaul and commit all those crimes in the category of catdom are in only the first or second stage of life."

They walked back through a lovely forest of catnip, which was all in bloom and filled the air with delightful perfume. Barbara said good-by to all the cats and dogs, and invited them to spend a day with her in her boy and girl land. Just then she felt a dreadful pain in her head. She screamed at the top of her voice, and she heard mamma saying:

"Why, this poor child has fallen right out of her chair on the floor! Poor little dear! Let mamma rock you to sleep again:

"Drowsy, heavy, winsome maiden,
Close thine eyes and take thy rest.
On the daywards arrow laden,
Close them, sweet,
Go to dreamland, Love, thy pilot,
In this wise,
There is no pain or sorrow
Made you sleep.

A Poetic Thought.

A 4-year-old grandchild of Hannibal Hamlin was told that if a bit of blue sky could be seen among the heavy clouds caused by a passing shower a rainbow would be visible, and he was able to go to the picnic which the shower had decreed. At last he looked up, and on seeing a wee spot of blue, exclaimed with delight:

"I see you, God, with your pretty blue eye looking down here, and now we can go."—New York World.

A DARK OUTLOOK.

Possible Effect of the Emperor's Death on the Future of Germany.

(From the Chicago News.)

The outlook for Germany's future is not a bright one. Prince William, the heir to the throne, is a man of a very limited mental and hereditary nature, his grandmother, the beautiful Queen Louise of Prussia, has left of him a curious rumor in the neighborhood of the Court, which is to the effect that he is not a man who seems to admirable his disease to a degree which he never has a more unfavorable change from which he never has ever led power and more wholesome lives than "Queer Fritz."

PRINCE WILHELM.

Life and Characteristics of the Eventual Emperor of Germany.

Prince Wilhelm, the eldest son of "Unser Fritz," will be all probability succeed his father as Emperor of Germany. According to reports, he is physically sickly, but Bismarck's malady is not in nature and has reached such an advanced stage that his death is expected to occur within a short time. The rule of Frederick William and Germany, being regarded as almost equally sacred, and his sympathies, is considered with as deep concern as is the soon-expected accession of his son. Prince William will probably not offend Bismarck and Von Moltke. The experience of his father has taught him that it is wise to know to be prudent. The Emperor, as a European war, will doubtless be maintained during his brief reign. But after Bismarck and Von Moltke have gone, and the affairs of the great German nation are in the hands of young Prince William, naturally, all only throughout Germany, but all Europe, he has suddenly become an object of the greatest interest and solicitude.

DEATH OF THE MILITARY PARTY.

His mother's death, which he felt keenly, and has clearly distinguished himself as yet as a representative of the most objectionable type of the Prussian military "Junker." He is the pride of the military party, was a favorite of the late Emperor, and is the hope of Prince Bismarck.

"Prince William has great friendship for Frederick, as the latter has no special liking for him. Frederick has little of the Hohenzollern spirit of aggressiveness. HIS EDUCATION.

Prince William has been carefully educated and has been instructed by tutors and private instructors in the ordinary branches of learning, such as history, religion, and gymnastics. He was then sent to the gymnasium at Cassel, where he passed his examination for the university with great credit. He then entered the university of Bonn, and afterwards spent a year with them at Leipsic, where he was kindly received by the Emperor, who has ever been fond of him. A biographer of the Prince chronicles the fact that he not only loved military history but also black bread for his breakfast, and for his dinner he preferred a plain joint of meat to an entire opera. Like most German boys, he was fond of botanizing. He loved to smoke, to drink and every kind of sport. He was recognized as a capital swimmer and a good shot, and he was fond of a game of cards. He was a great admirer of Heine, and liked to read the more classical contents in which he was not a little bitter than that for Prussia, he considered it also that he had a youthful passion for writing dramas, of which he wrote a dozen pillow-slightly. One of these productions was a tragedy, which he called "Ala-in-Cassovelin." He also translated some of the odes of Horace. Finally he took his degree, and then was commissioned in the Guards. In 1867, he was immediately placed on the military staff of his father, and he was with the Prussian troops at the battle of Sadowa.

HIS MILITARY RANK.

The Prince William is now present in Colonel Commander of the Guards of the Guard. He has the entirely affectionate to have an opportunity of proving himself worthy of his father, the Great. At present, however, he is only a Major, and he has, of course, no actually field ting into scrapes.

"On the 27th of Feb. 27, 1881, Princess Augusta Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein. His other wife, Prince Wilhelm, was born May 9, 1882. This was the last act of such an important and crown prince. There was a curious prediction connected with the birth of the Prince, which is to have implicit faith. It was said that he would live to the age of 81, and that his son would not succeed to the throne. He is said to be

FARM AND GARDEN.

A NEW PEAR, ADAPTED TO A WIDE RANGE OF COUNTRY.

A Well Known Horseman's Talk on Distemper—Hints on Tree Planting—Taking Wire from Fences and Hop Yards. Device for the Apiary.

A Kentucky apiarian, J. S. Reese by name, had in practical use the past season a device for getting bees out of finished or full cases of honey while on the hive without the use of smoke, etc. The plan also works well when applied to a pile—less or more—of full cases, when the bees can escape and not return. Mr. Reese believes his plan to be a new one, but modestly, declines to apply for a patent, and describes it in detail for the benefit of others, with plain illustrations, in Gleanings in Bee Culture.

A COST CASE BEE ESCAPE.

This cone case bee escape is simply as follows: Take an empty supers case that any beekeeper may be using—say, for illustration, the T super. Cut a thin board to fit well just inside the T rods here two one inch holes, one near each end. Make two small cones of wire cloth, that large enough to tack over the one inch holes, and about one and one-half inch high. Now make two more larger cones, about three and one-half inches in base and three and one-half inches high, and tack over the smaller cones. This will leave a space between the smaller and larger cones, and each cone has a hole in its apex that will admit a bee. You now have a device like E in the illustration. Make this board, with cones, near the bottom of your empty super, as shown by B. Now, as this empty section case with the false bottom—or top—with cones, is just the size of the supers cases already on the hive, the full super may be raised, as at A, and a super (C) filled with empty sections can be put on the hive. Between the supers A and C, the cone case B is placed, with cones pointing toward the brood nest. The full supers of sections may be left on but on top of the cone case, and all is done in a twinkling. In a few hours you may expect to have your full super all clean of bees and not a cell unsupped. If the cone case be adjusted in the afternoon or evening, your full super will be just as you would desire it next morning.

Mr. Reese says that he makes the wire cloth cones very rapidly by using two tin cones of right size, molding the wire cloth between the tin ones. I shows the outside cone. G is the square of wire cloth and H is the finished cone, which is fastened on to a wooden stake, the latter stuck into the hive. The central mesh of G, or as nearly as may be, is placed on the apex of the cone K. The cone K is then driven down, forming the square of wire cloth into a cone. Queen cell protectors can also be made on these tin cones to perfection.

Mr. Reese inclines to the belief that one set of wire cones would answer every purpose that the two do, especially if the hole was made larger, say one and three-quarters or two inches. The editor of the Journal quoted from, commenting on the same, expressed the opinion that one set of cones is practically safe.

Quinine for Horse Distemper.

Quinine is said to be the favorite remedy in Southern Kentucky. Mr. L. Brodhead, the superintendent of that breeding establishment is credited with having given his method of treatment for distemper as follows:

Give for weanlings from fifteen to twenty grains a day. We generally give two granules once a day, but when they are taken and the fever is high, give about fifteen grains twice a day, morning and evening. If the attack is mild we give only one dose a day, and continue until the fever has left the system. The quinine allays the fever and is good for the inflamed throat. It is an excellent tonic, and so far has cured every case we have had, about 100 in number. In the early spring we had several very severe cases that I am sure we should have lost but for the quinine. Three were yearlings, and we gave about twenty grains in a dose twice a day. Older horses can be given sixty grains a day, in two doses. Whenever one has fever use quinine freely, no matter what the disease. It is almost a specific for lung fever and pneumonia. I have cured two cases of lockjaw in colts by using this summer with quinine and altho-thin, twenty drops of the latter to a dose. We are not partisans to weigh the quinine, but guess at a dose. Put it in a spoon and put it on the tongue without elevating the head, or exciting the animal. We pull the tongue to one side, insert the spoon, turn it over and wipe on the tongue, then pass to the other side and the animal gets it all. It is perfectly safe, and there is little, if any, danger in giving too much. We are twaddling in the south average considerably larger than our northern cousins, a smaller dose would probably answer the purpose in this section. It is best to administer in the morning to get it put up in ten grain powders. Open the quinine can be required very easily, for if fifteen grains is required divide one of the powders in two, and add one half to one of the ten grain powders. As distemper is very prevalent in all sections of the country, the above directions should be remembered by those who have the care of horses."

Experiments with Field Corn.

Of thirty-five varieties of field corn tested on the grounds of the State Agricultural college of Colorado, and reported upon by Professor Blount, but two have been in any way improved. The Pride of the North and the Yellow Flint, having proved most valuable, have been selected for several years. Peach's six ounce ear, growing singly on the stalk, in five years the ears have been much to average eight or ten ounces, and have been doubled on the stalk. Reese's from those who have tested the seed, and are most disturbed. The fodder is fine and when cut before frost and well cured, stock prefer it to hay. When selected for seed all stalks bearing two ears or more are left standing in the field until dead ripe, and when they are cut up the top ears only are saved, and only those that are well formed and have straight rows. By judicious selection of the first ears that ripen, the period of maturity has been materially shortened. This variety, the first year was 141 days ripening. Last year it ripened in ninety-eight, and in the fields of some farmers in ninety days.

Transplanting Trees.

A southern correspondent calls attention to what he considers an important point in transplanting trees, viz.: To have the tree, when transplanted, in the same position as to the points of the compass as before removal. He says: "The south side of a tree is exposed to the direct rays of the sun, while the north side is more or less protected from them. Nature accommodates itself to the changed condition, and the difference in development in many trees on the south and north sides is obvious to ordinary observation.

When the south side of a tree is turned to the north, each side finds itself in a position for which nature has made no preparation, and death follows almost as certainly as if the top were put in the ground and the roots turned up to the sky.

The willow and some other trees will grow if planted upside down, and many trees will grow with the south side turned to the north, but with trees difficult to transplant at best, it is a mistake very apt to be fatal to turn the south side to the north, and the older the tree the greater the danger from changing sides in transplanting.

A Pear of Promise.

The Idaho pear, which takes its name from the state where it originated, attracted, during last season, considerable comment from prominent pomologists. The shape of this pear, which is roundish or obovate, is shown in the cut. It is of large size, the illustration here given having been reduced one-third from natural size. It varies in color from a green yellow to a bright yellow, according to its ripeness. The flesh, which is firm and juicy, is devoid of any gritty texture, and is characterized by a very pleasant flavor and distinct aroma. Its season is later than that of the Bartlett and it gives promise of being a good keeper.

IDAHO PEAR—TWO THIRDS NATURAL SIZE.

It is claimed that the trees are vigorous in habit, having dark foliage, with the fruit quite evenly distributed over the tree, sometimes in clusters. The Idaho pear is a seedling, grown from the seed of a large red cheeked pear (name unknown) planted by a lady at Lewiston, Idaho, some twenty years ago. The tree fruited the fourth year from seed, it is claimed, and has borne annually ever since. As the latitude of its origin is 46 degs. 24 mins. north, and it has survived winters when the thermometer ranged from 15 to 30 degs. below zero, there is good reason for believing it hardy and adapted to a wide range of country.

Cheap Device for Winding Wire.

The device shown in the cut for taking wire from hop yards or fences appeared originally in Rural New Yorker, where it was described as follows: Take an old washtub and bend five or six inches wide; nail the board across the tub, letting it project three or four inches at each end. Then through the center of the bottom of the tub and of the board on top bore a one and a half inch hole. Put a pole through the hole for a shaft. Also bore a hole about a foot from the center and drive in a peg for a crank handle, as shown. The one seen in the cut is an old well crank

WINDING WIRE.

If it is worked in a hop yard, fasten the shaft to the poles, letting it project at the end where the wire is to be taken of enough to slip the tub on. If it is to be used in taking wire off a fence or where there is nothing to which it can be fastened, drive two posts in the ground six or seven feet apart. Then in the wire to the end of the board and turn the crank, and you will see how nicely the wire will coil around the tub. The tub must be tapering, of course.

Things to Know and to Do.

Fowls should always have access to a sand or dust bath.

Cold, more than any other one cause, checks the production of eggs.

Plant the Beurre d'Anjou pear. It is for a fall pear what the Bartlett is for a summer pear, and more.

Study well the new seed catalogues, especially those from trustworthy seedsmen.

Fresh lime scattered around the cellar will help to keep it dry.

In making out orders for nursery stock one is liable to invest too largely in novelties. Stick pretty closely to tested and proven varieties.

Secretary Woodward would draw and spread manure from the stable, even if the snow were a foot deep. He believes that, spread on corn land in the fall, it does 50 per cent. more good than when spread the following spring.

Sealy legs in fowls, a complaint of the season, should be treated by rubbing twice a week with a mixture of lard and kerosene, applied warm.

Carrycomb and brush are good for the cow as well as the horse.

A Fit Applicant.

"Yes, we want a good strong boy. Where you been before been employed?"

"I'm a permanently academy."

"And what kind of work did you do there?"

"I was employed to jogg the table when a scholar wrote his fair sample of my hand writing," before taking "cause at Scribbling academy.—Boston Transcript.

The Purpose of Pain.

It is as conceivable—we refer it as a suggestion to be considered and not as a theory to be accepted—that the object with which pain is sent into the world is not the development of man's moral nature so much as the development of his energy. Man can do one thing without God, from his very perfec ness, cannot do, and that is, make an effort: and whatever the ground concealed purpose, a jury of it must be that man should strive. We can not make a man love or believing, or how he can add by striving to the stature of a foot in the universe—but if were not intended to strive, to develop will, and display energy, and make exertions, the world would surely have been made a very different one from what it is. It is always whipping him up, him and the animals, too.

There are only two forms of pain which are absolutely universal among sentient creatures, which man feel as strongly as women, and which are felt more by man both, and which human beings, whether refined or degraded, absolutely refuse to endure; and those two are hunger and thirst, the two grand impelling forces of the world. Without these two pains, there would be no world such as we know it. The wild animal would scarcely ever stir. Hunger, doing nothing; the useful, dead, released alike from hunger and the whip, would be worthless to man; and man himself, though he might reflect as well as sensate, would scarcely be brought to work.—The Spectator.

A Story About Jenny Lind.

I was too young to be an analyst of a voice or to know one when I heard one. But this I remember, that Jenny Lind affended me a new and delicious sensation. Her singing is affected me that I burst out crying, and as it was thought that I was sick, nothing would satisfy me but I was shamefaced to explain my feelings and so lied.

There was so little sleepiness in me and I was so vexed at the summary judgment passed upon me that I lied about crying when I was in my cot. Jenny Lind, at the hour when the company was to go away, came into the room where I was. She saw me wide awake, and asked if I was the little sleep child; then came over to me and whispered, "Why did you cry?" "Because your voice is so nice." She laughed and said, "That can't be. We only sing when things are ugly and unpleasant." I, thinking she considered me a little flatter, cried again, and then was able to get out, "The Bakes in the Wood' is very nice to read, but it makes me cry so fearfully that grandmamma has taken it from me and locked it up." Jenny Lind said, "You're a dear child. When I sing I don't I'll bring you such a pretty toy, and sing on purpose for you." She never did come back, and so I never got the toy.—Cor. London Truth.

Theodore Thomas' Extraordinary Powers.

Theodore Thomas' extraordinary power over a foot which he had seen Professor Wieniawski and Thomas perform. The professor, it appears, had been "training" an orchestra and a brass band at one and the same time, in a building in which this was done was a long one, divided in the center by a wall. Thomas, it appears, had in reality been two separate buildings at one time, but the upper part of the dividing wall had been "cut away". On the top of this wall a platform had been built just broad enough for a single good standing room. On this platform Thomas stood. Before him on the floor were the brass instrument players, and to his left the string and soft instrument players. The former were playing a lively march, two four time, while the latter were sweetly rolling out an air in the "down, left, up" beat. Thomas' right arm went through the quadruple movement without the slightest interruption, while the left arm and hand beat triple time just correctly, both at the same time.—Rochester Argus.

For Bridesmaids to Carry.

A shoe filled with flowers is the very proper thing for bridesmaids to carry, and charmingly pretty it is. The first wedding at which this idea was carried out was that of Miss Stewart and Mr. Carlberry Rice Vaughan-Pyne, which took place about a month ago. The bride's wedding at which the bridesmaids carried shoes were those of Sir Robert and Lady Emily Peel's eldest daughter and Mr. Barton. The shoes in the case were of pink satin lined with a mixture of green and of mauve colored roses, and hung from the arm by pink ribbons. Shoes were carried by the youthful members of the bevy of bridesmaids of Miss Whitehead's wedding. The shoes were of pink satin filled with flowers of hues to match that color.—London Court Journal.

Bridge Over the Channel.

A scheme for the erection of a bridge over the English channel is in active consideration among French capitalists and engineers. The projected bridge would be twenty-two miles long, resting on piers of concrete and structure 150 feet long by 100 broad, placed at intervals of 540 yards. The causeway of the bridge would be 120 feet above the sea level, to permit the passage of ships, and would be 100 feet wide. The estimated cost is $200,000,000. It appears that the channel is not so deep at the proposed crossing. There are shallows out from Folkestone and over twenty feet from the surface, the depth from these shallows to the shore on either side varying from 100 to 160 feet.—St. Louis Post.

Feet and Meter.

According to Mr. R. G. Ravenstein, the English foot is used as the standard of length in about one-fifth of the 1,000 inhabitants, the meter by 347,091,000 people and the Carolina foot by 5,905,000. Denmark and Russia are the only countries in continental Europe which have not adopted the meter.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A LETTER FROM J. G.

He is Earning No Money and Writes Touchingly to B. N.

"ARTIST ON THE MEDITERRANEAN, 1 IN THE GOAMING, 1883.

"Mr. Wilbehn (Contiguous) Wind Office, New York, U. S. A.:

"Sun.—Would you mind using your influence in trying to get the enclosed piece printed in the Sabbath Worship and send me whatever it is worth in currency by registered mail, care lock box 29, Rome Italy? I am not earning anything this winter, being disabled by neuralgia, and so it has occurred to me that I might write some piece for the paper, telling of sights and sounds abroad. If you print this letter, or use your influence to that end so that it gets into the paper, will you send me ten or three copies and I will pay you in a few weeks. But, if you do not use it, I wish you would avoid making mention of it with a blue pencil, as several other editors have done, for it annoys me very much.

"Please do not make fun of the piece if you do not use it, as I am nervous and heart disease, and anything that makes me cry angers me so that I can't write. If the heart is what it is called, and if I live twenty years longer it will be about all I can expect, so please be some light of my piece. Fraternally yours,

"J. G."

For some time we have been selling our "Sun" correspondence at ridiculous prices. It is a beautiful sheet of water, which has been placed by nature in a frame that as history can inform us. It is from 20 to 30 feet in depth, and is well located to do business upon. It has two mines of silver, one of gold and one of quicksilver in Africa.

An enormous quantity of water flows into the Mediterranean sea, for a half dozen European rivers contribute to it, and the Atlantic commales discharge its waters into the sea. And, yet, owing to the hot, dry winds which sweep across from the sandy wastes of Africa, the evaporation is very great and keeps the sea from overflowing its banks. This should teach us that even nature abhors a surplus. I would rather be twenty quarter of a good yacht on the Mediterranean than to live upon Sun Yorr.

We visited Milan not long ago. It is an inland town without soldiers and is watched by the Odona river. Otherwise the place is very pretty indeed. Milan, in pronouncing Medium by hearing down hard on the last syllable, is a railroad center in northern Italy. It is eight miles in circumference and has ramparts around it. Milan points with pride to her statues. I often think that New York would invite more visitors from abroad if she had a better line of ramparts.

The architecture of Milan embraces many types, but a good deal of it is mediæval, with a roof of the same. Florence, however, has some palaces that are much older than those of Milan, I think. Milan used to have 240 churches, but 117 of them did not pay and have suspended. We visited the church of Joseph II. Since that other churches that were closed have been opened and the convent to attract, and now there are not over eighty out of the original number. I see no trouble doing the whole business. I could hire a carriage and carry people inland to the churches here for $17. The cathedral at Milan is the rate in every respect, and is a thing well, I sometimes think that it is foolish for other churches to try to compete with a cathedral. They may succeed for a while, but sooner or later they will have to succumb to the cathedral and give up.

Everywhere we go we find the Caucasian is in the ascendant. I sometimes think that the blood of the Caucasian is more red and has a wider circulation than any other. But this is a deviation from what I was saying.

The narrow streets of Naples are quite pretty, and extend several miles out beyond the town, like those of Fargo, D. T., where sidewalks several hundred miles in extent are laid down at the expense of the county, in this way Fargo had sidewalks that extended for miles in one direction through the neighboring farms, and the county paid for them. Fargo has been a wider river than Sun Yorr ever has attempted. Aside from this there is little similarity between Naples and Fargo. The old streets of Naples are narrow and crooked, and the houses are so high that a tripe peddler standing upon the roof on the flat hat of a passing tourist is permanently inspired and the last price yourself.

Naples claims to be the loveliest harbor in the world. We try to imitate her in New York, but we fail. We have property enough in New York and fleet, contemporaneous beggars as well as more or less disease, but we have not been able so far to unite our poverty and disease in such a way as to successfully imitate the picturesque bazaarous of the east. Our poor people in America are too robust and our invalids are too many of them wealthy. So long as it is that way Europe and Asia will be able to attract business in spite of all we can do to prevent it.

We can get up a fair specimen to look at, but it lacks age and the air of travel as well as the lounging and picturesque poverty of bazaarous bigotries of the old world. I sometimes think that the reason Naples is long retained her supremacy over other cities in this line was largely due to the stimulation resulting from the close competition between Venice and the Italian cities which set up bazaarous in the matter of eruptions.

The population of Naples is nearly 500,000, but the annual rainfall I have been unable to obtain. If I can find out in time I will send it in my next letter. If I can not I will send me the money for this piece and hold the article till I can ascertain that the rainfall is you may do so.

The foregoing is written in such a plain, straightforward way, and contains so much information, that I am in doubt whether Mr. Ward wrote it or not, but possibly he has been taking something for his energy. Whether he has done so or not, it is safe to say that he has been taking something. The only way to keep Mr. Ward from taking something is to sail it firmly to the floor.

In printing the letter I like to help Mr. Gould, and wish to state that I do not hold myself responsible for any of the statements made therein.—Bill Nye in New York World.

HAZING AND ITS REMEDY.

The Evil Being Traditional and Deep Seated Requires Heroic Treatment.

The evil is deep seated and has its tap root in the past. It is traditional. The older colleges, if there are based, are also cursed with traditions. And college traditions are easily born, and die hard. These disorderly tendencies are not only inherited from the past in this country, but they are imported from abroad. The extent of their survival there may be seen in the hazings, fightings and midnight serenades with which "Tom Brown at Rugby" is overweighted. They have survived, with additions, in American colleges.

Members of advanced classes presently instruct the younger classes what is always done, and what, therefore, they are bound to do. The newer ones aspire to be as "smart" as their predecessors, and so they must have hazing, rushes, "Monday Monday," freshman beer, reciprocal hornings, small marauding, and what not? The effect of these foolish traditions at one particular stage of the college course, in the sudden but transient transformation of a considerable number of well minded and well mannered young men, is something as serious as it is surprising and otherwise unaccountable.

In other communities it is the acknowledged rule that the whole population is banded together to detect and punish wrongdoing. In college communities the case is reversed; the combination is to prevent detection. It is seldom the case that one student will give information against another that might lead even to his reformation. And when it becomes apparently a question of punishment, not only will young men of no principle disregard the truth, but men of high principle will generally prove lighter sooner than aid in rectifying the wrong. Dr. Gore, where it became an question, sorry for the safety of father and son that the father should know of the notorious habits of uncontrol into which the son had fallen, he went away, "convinced of the injustice done by the father to the young man, because he was informed by classmates that the statements were untrue. It should be said, however, that one of these classmates, after graduation, had the manhood to come to a college officer and say: "I lied to Mr. ——."

In another instance, a case of assault upon a professor by a whole class, including, with one exception, all its best men, were induced to agree beforehand that they would not answer any question as to their own whereabouts at a given time—though many of them were quietly studying in their rooms—lest the circumstance should lead to the discovery of the offenders; and they submitted to suspension rather than answer the question. Illustrative facts of this kind might be accumulated to any extent. But it is not necessary. The college man can bear witness to the general state of the case.

After young men have been fully and fairly warned that they will be held amenable to the law of the land, the application of the law is not to be withheld. Young men of high spirit are sometimes applied with excellent effect. In one case the young men of the 'nobs' mentioned disclosed themselves and brought him before a magistrate. One of them proved to be a son of the chief justice of the state, and the settlement was easy for the young man. In other cases the young men, under arrest for gross violence, have lost and not jury in an appearance again.

In a third institution certain college riots, sons of influential parents, felt the lockup while their class was graduating. These are hard remedies, to the last degree undesirable, but the abuses are still more undesirable, and if all other educational influences prove ineffectual, then the law must be the educator. The application of the remedy in a few instances would render further application unnecessary.—The Forum.

The Salmon of Kamchatka.

Hundreds of salmon were in sight, absolutely touching one another, and as we passed the river boats were nearly stopped upon them. Their back fins were visible as far as we could see the stream, and apparently stretching over from shore to shore. Some of the upon the banks were piled up in a solid mass, and our then boat-decaying fish was distinctly perceptible at a distance of a mile and a half or two miles. In weight these salmon range from seven to fifteen and even twenty pounds. They were, for the most part, foul fish—blotchy, with patches of red and white, and the kind known to the Russians as the Garbusa; but others in fair condition were to be found, and with a little trouble I succeeded in pulling three good ten pound fish in as many minutes with a gaff. Any other method of fishing would have been useless. It would have been nearly impossible to make a cast without foul hooking a fish, and nine-tenths or more of them were in a condition to be foul hooked.—The Cruise of the Marchesa.

Assignee of Mortgage.

J. MILO EATON,
Attorney for Assignee.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default being made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed by Homer Meacre and Mary E. McKinney, his wife, bearing date Nov. 24, 1881, and recorded Jan. 5, 1882, in the register's office for Charlevoix county, in liber 1 of mortgages, page 46, on which there is claimed to be due at the date hereof, the sum of Twelve hundred and twenty dollars, the Company now being the owner of said mortgage, by virtue of an assignment thereof, notice is given that by the power of sale therein contained, and the statute in such case made and provided, the premises therein described, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy said mortgage, with interest and the costs of foreclosure and attorney fee of twenty-five dollars, and also the legal fees of the foreclosure, will be sold at public vendue, at the hitching bobbs, in the front door of the Lewis Block that being the building in which the Circuit Court for the County is held, in the village of Boyne, in said County of Charlevoix, on the 17th day of March, 1883, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, the premises in said mortgage described, to wit: Lots eight miles of the plaza. Of course, all contriers and all officials who discover from the mortgage fund to the Premier Ito were "suspected." In a word, Japan was suddenly placed under martial law.

So decided a step necessarily needed a pretext, and a conspiracy was invented. Ito was officially discovered. Ito, who models himself on Bismarck, is a believer in the blood and iron policy, with this difference, that he has no personal aversion to shedding blood on the scaffold, a form of manifestiveness which, with the great chancelor cannot truthfully be accused. Ito, since he got home from his tour of Europe, has only bided his time to head off the parliamentary movement, and now believes he has accomplished his object. His methods are those peculiar to Germany. The army is increased and liberally paid; the laboring masses are kept lustily employed on unnecessary railroads and expensive public works, and the school appropriations are cut down, and this is characteristically "absolute."—Boston Transcript.

Smooth Work Silver Coin.

A short time since Deputy Postmaster W. S. Leake, when paying money into the federal office in that city, was informed that a silver coin that had become very smooth was counterfeit by a citizen and was refused. As such coin had been received at the postoffice for stamps, etc., in the transaction of business, the question became an interesting one, and having it could not be rejected as multated coin, a half dollar which had been refused acceptance was forwarded to the secretary of the treasury for his decision, and the following reply has just been received by Postmaster Stephens:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 1, 1883.

Sir—I return herewith, as requested, the half dollar inclosed in your letter of the 5th ult., with information that the coin has been examined by experts in the office of the treasurer of the United States, and that it was accepted if presented at that office for deposit or redemption. It is the law or regulation under which it could be declined, is being simply worn smooth by natural abrasion.

Under department's regulations of Aug. 1, 1882, coin reduced in weight either by wear or so reduced, but "reduction by natural abrasion is not considered mutilation." Respectfully yours,

HUGH S. THOMPSON, Assistant Secretary.

A Tall Musical Story.

A young lady who is a very fine vocalist was telling me an incident of an annoying experience with a musical friend. Her attention was first directed to the music in her romance on an occasion when she was particularly anxious to show the sweetness of her voice, and she became conscious of a shrill, harsh and grating sound, like a tuning fork on a piano. She stopped in the middle of the song and asked if there was not something wrong.

It was readily seen that the piano was all right, and the singer was asked if that the discordant noise was her own. She was deeply mortified, and it was not till some time afterward, and after several repetitions of her former experience that she discovered the source of the sound—a loose remnant of a breastpin which she wore close to her throat. The vibrations of her chords were transmitted in some way to this pin, thus setting the instrument in motion, which grated against its setting and created a most discordable noise.—Louisville Post.

Who Stopped the Train?

When a railroad train was about five miles out of Nashville the other day it was stopped and the conductor found that the conductor was not on board. The train was backed up and the wrathful conductor was taken on. A theatrical company, carrying a great among its properties, was on board. Soon after leaving Nashville the second time the property man came back and asked who pulled the bell cord. No one knew. "The gun did it," said the property man, in a hoarse whisper. He then explained that the gun had climbed on top of a pile of trunks in the baggage car and discovered a small piece of cotton hanging to the bell cord. The animal at once began pulling at it and kicking, and the man gave a pull on the bell cord, which the gun signaled the engineer to go ahead.—Chicago Herald.

Railroad Building Out West.

The western people apparently think no more of throwing down a railroad, if they want to go anywhere, than a conservative farmer does of taking an unmeasured walk across country, and the railroad constructors and managers are a little amused at the extreme shyness and want of facility in construction and management of the Eastern roads. The west is a country made and crossed by roads, and so accustomed to eastern work is not desired on a western job.—Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's Magazine.

We are lately in suspecting a prosperous man to be a fool.

Farmers and the Tariff.

A fact of considerable interest has just been brought out in the course of a discussion at to the lowest price at which wheat can profitably be grown in this country. Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Boston, who is well known as a political economist and statistician, makes the statement—on information procured from fifteen companies and firms of Eastern money lenders that out of 250,000 mortgages put upon Western farms in the last forty-eight years 113,000 have been paid. He makes the further statement that of all these mortgages less than one per cent have been foreclosed and there are very few instances where the foreclosure has failed to bring the amount of the mortgage.

As evidence of the patience, economy and thrift which, in the struggling against enormous indebtedness, these facts are interesting and valuable. They bear testimony, also, to the shrewdness of New England money lenders in estimating the value of farm land. But why the protectionist newspapers should be publishing the facts—as they are—with apparent exultation we are at a loss to imagine.

Can it be possible that they regard the statement of mortgages paid as an evidence that the farmers have been prosperous under the war tariff? If they do they must be wondefully perverted. For the statement of mortgages paid invites attention still more strongly and significantly to the number unpaid and to the enormous extent to which the American farmer has been obliged to mortgage his acres.

Of this extent Mr. Atkinson's figures give us but a feble idea, covering, as they do, the operations of only fifteen firms and companies of lenders on farm mortgage. To do him justice, he did not intend his statement to be comprehensive or exhaustive. It was not his purpose to show how largely the farms of the country had been mortgaged, but to show that a considerable proportion of the farm mortgages had been paid. He probably reasoned—and was probably justified in reasoning—that if something like fifty-three per cent of the mortgages given to the fifteen firms had been paid, there had been a similar ratio of payment throughout.

Fortunately information is not wanting as to the approximate extent to which the farms of the country are mortgaged. In an article published recently in the New York Times, Frank Wilkeson made an elaborate calculation from which it appears that the amount represented by the face of mortgages in the great agricultural states of the west is $3,424,000,000. The value of the farms in these states, as shown by the census and the assessment rolls, is $13,931,000,000, so that the mortgages represent not far from twenty-five per cent of the entire farm value in the states referred to.

When it is considered that twenty-eight states are not included in these figures it is apparent that the proportion has nothing upon which to congratulate itself in the showing Mr. Atkinson makes as to payment of mortgages. Behind that showing is the ominous and disheartening fact that with protection in full force for a quarter of a century the farmers in ten states of the west have mortgaged three billion and a half more of money than they have earned. A more complete condemnation of the whole impositions scheme can scarcely be conceived.

Yet it is upon the farmers, next to the workingmen—if not before the workingmen—that the protectionists mainly rely for the continuance of their plundering scheme. When he grows under the imposition of a tax upon his plow and his harrow, his hoe, his shovel, his ax, the lumber that builds his house and the glass that lets light of heaven into it, he is sweetly told that it is all to go in him a "home market," and this he is expected to believe, notwithstanding his daily interview with the fact that the market price of his principal product is regulated at Liverpool and not at "home." And if he should point to the fact that his utmost efforts avail only to keep up the interest on his mortgage after standing his share of taxes and supporting and educating his family, he is again invited to contemplate the beauties of a "home market," and to see how the wealth of the country has increased, as shown by the enormous extent of our millionaires in the south and elsewhere. It is safe to predict, however, that the farmer will not be hoodwinked much longer by these pictures or pretenses of the protectionists who have so long used him as a pack-horse.—Free Press.

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

Governor Joel Parker's Success in Cranking out of a Small Hole.

An incident which illustrates Governor Parker's readiness in extricating himself from an unexpected dilemma was related by him to the writer very years ago. While he was a member of the house of assembly, in 1848, a question of some local and political importance came up, and the then young and rising statesman decided to oppose it vigorously. To this end he prepared an elaborate speech, in which he let his patriotic fire run into fluent. It was so well pleased with his effort that he told a friend what he was going to try. To emphasize portions of his speech he referred to an oil portrait of Washington, which hung on the wall at the right of the speaker's desk. When he got to that portion of his speech, he exclaimed: "And over this portrait of the father of his country, which hangs on the wall at the right of the speaker's desk." When he got to that portion of his speech,

A Passenger Train in Georgia Takes a Fearful Plunge—Twenty-five Persons Killed and Many Wounded.

A TERRIBLE railroad calastrophe happened at a point seventy-five miles south of Savannah, Ga., in which twenty-five people were killed and thirty-five seriously injured. The following particulars of the accident are telegraphed from Savannah:

An Indian fast mail from New York for Florida ran through a trestle a hundred miles south of Savannah early yesterday. The exact number of the killed and wounded is not known. Twenty-five people are known to have been killed and between thirty and forty injured, ten of whom are expected to die. The private car of President Walker, of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, Mr. Wilson and Miss Gould and wife and others in it, was one of the cars that went down but was not injured. George Gould and Mrs. Gould received slight injuries. The engine was saved by a broken link between the baggage-car. The baggage-car got off the track and ran along the ties for about 100 yards, the bridge at Horse-shoe Bend. The baggage-car mounted the track, but the train passed safely over the bridge. Immediately on the other side of the bridge there is a long curve, and the train left the track. The baggage-car struck the cross-ties—it gave way, and the entire train, with the exception of the engine, dropped through, and all the cars but one were completely wrecked. The train was composed of a combination car, three baggage-cars, a smoking-car, one coach, two Pullman cars, and a car belonging to the Lehigh Valley. This last car was occupied by President Wilhur, of the Lehigh Road, his family, and friends, and survived the shock. The second engine ran at one to Black Shear, a mile and a half from the place where the accident occurred, in the place where such accidents MIGHT WHO were ready to render assistance in getting out the dead and rescuing the wounded. The Superintendent of the Savannah, Florida and Western Railroad, Mr. Flournoy, was on the board of it. left Savannah for the scene of the accident with physicians and nurses.

CROP CONDITIONS.

Report of the Signal Service Bureau.

The Signal Service Bureau at Washington reports that—

The backwardness of the season has been greatly overcome in Minnesota, but as the government is now conducting a specially reported throughout the States of the Mississippi Valley. Killing frosts are reported as having injured fruit in the northern portion of the Gulf States, Missouri, and Tennessee, although the weather conditions in the Southern States have been favorable for the ripening of cotton, which has been somewhat injured by freezing weather. The alternate freezing and thawing have doubtless proved more or less injurious to the winter wheat in the States east of the Mississippi. Heavy snows prevented injury to wheat in the Middle and Atlantic States.

Emperor Frederick's Condition.

A Berlin dispatch says that serious reports concerning the Emperor's condition are again in circulation. The Emperor's despondency, which has been increased by the change from the blue sky of San Remo to the severe frost and deep snow of Berlin, causes great anxiety. Although he can speak, his voice is so thick and husky and his pronunciation of vowels so imperfect that only those who have been constantly with him, such as the Empress and Dr. Mackenzie, can understand him.

Judge Dundy's Decision.

JUDGE DUNDY's decision, at Omaha, in the injunction case brought by the Burlington against the Union Pacific and the engineers, declares that while the engineers can quit work when they please they have not the right to enter into a conspiracy, and by concerted action leave the Union Pacific without engineers in order to prevent it handling Burlington freight. Engineers have not the right to refuse to haul Burlington cars, and to refusal would subject them to imprisonment.

End of the Santa Fe Strike.

THE strike on the Santa Fe system ended on Sunday, and the engineers and firemen returned to their posts. This move was made in accordance with a notice issued by Mr. Conroe, Chairman of the General Grievance Committee at Kansas City, to the effect that he was advised by Chief Arthur to request the men to resume work, and for himself to proceed to Chicago to adjust all outstanding standings. The notice was promptly obeyed.

A Railroad Indicted.

THE Illinois Central Railway, its general agent, and its freight agent at New Orleans have been indicted for violation of the interstate law by overcharges on cotton shipments and alleged discriminations.

THE Democrats of Missouri have called three State conventions, as follows: First, for the selection of delegates to the National Convention at Sedalia, May 17. Second, for the nomination of judges at Springfield, Aug. 15. Third, for the nomination of Governor and other State officers, at Jefferson City, Mo., Aug. 22.

Congress.

BILLS were reported to the House of Representatives on the 19th inst., and placed on the calendar as follows: For public buildings at Jackson and Saginaw, Mich. To provide certain arms and equipage for the militia of Oregon. Granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars between 1828 and 1842. The bill authorizing the President to appoint veterinarians in the army of the regular corps. The bill to amend stamp was reported adversely. The Senate was not in session.

THE EASTERN STATES.

Fog the combined fury of the hurricane, the darkness and pallor of the snowfall, and the lowness of the temperature, the storm which raged on the Atlantic coast on Monday and Tuesday has no parallel in the history of that section of the country. A New York special of Wednesday says:

The story from daylight Monday to noon Tuesday is simply the history of the paralysis of a great capital and contiguous territory, and even of portions of the country. Mobile avenues obstructed, and finally absolutely blocked; streets were made impassable; the elevated closed up; telegraph and telephone service was destroyed, and the metropolis was absolutely at the mercy of the elements. If people who rose at the terrible dawn of the Northwest this winter will picture the same conditions on this scarcely inferior scale of an inland city can form some idea of the extent of the storm. Fancy a city of half a million of people, with a population of a ten-foot snow-drift in Broadway near New York's population, or a woman dropping dead from fatigue and exhaustion at the corner of Fulton and Nassau streets, New York, in the thoroughfare in New York City. It is now twelve hours since the storm subsided, and New York is still snow-bound. Not a train of any kind has entered or left the city. Not a horse-car has moved in the streets. Not the elevated railroads, which have ceased just like some kind of running order. On the surface roads not a wheel moves. The snow and ice is frozen solid over the tracks to a depth of from two to three feet, and it will take, even if even the great battery turns to the task, time, and thousands of people walked from Brooklyn to New York over the East River on a solid ice-bridge which had accumulated in the two days. New York is depopulated, so to speak, territory for food and fuel from day to day, and only for the most necessaries of life boats enter. No milk reached New York yesterday. No coal came in, and it had arrived there was no way of taking it away. No meat came in from the West. Up town, the Harlem River was impassable, and bakers got yeast in many cases that the supply of bread had run out, as no flour could be delivered. The blockade in the streets was so bad that when a fire alarm occurred it could not be answered. The Brooklyn Bridge pulled over the shoulder cut of a snowy road, because of railroad trains are snow-bound in Brooklyn and on all sides of the city, and no idea can as yet be formed of the loss of life. About the only incident of the storm was the death of a woman from Mr. George D. Harmount, a well known down town merchant, who was found lying on the table and smoking a pipe of fifty-fourth street, within three blocks of his home. Her husband had left her to go for help, and then fell on his face dead. The assumption is that she died from too pipe too murdered man and freezing in the cold. The thermometer in the car into the brain. Mrs. Alcright and her husband left their home in Brooklyn Sunday, but before the girl could cross the threshold she murdered fired another ball, which struck her at the check and passed through her head and out at the neck. She fell on the porch in a pool of blood. Whitmyer then ran to the bar, made a hole in the hammer, entered it, and then shot himself in the left side of the head. He died in the house of the insane. The girl is still living, and is expected to recover, but the mother is nearly crazed by the terrible affair.

By the decision of the Illinois Supreme Court relative to the Hyde Park annexation, the city of Chicago finds itself in a municipal and fiscal complication that promises to be extremely awkward. The court decides the act of the Legislature to be unconstitutional under which the attempt was made to annex Hyde Park to Chicago, and remands the case taken up on appeal back to the lower court. Under the ruling Hyde Park is relegated back to its previous status as a village, and all the proceedings taken by the municipality of Chicago on the supposed on the the annexation was which are rendered unlawful and unpleasant. Complications and embarrassments almost amount old will arise in consequence of this decision. All that has been done as regards the improvements of the city and the addition of new wards goes for nothing, and the registration for the spring election is completely upset. The decision will be followed by lawsuits and precedents that have no legal existence.

THE Ohio Legislature has embarked in the business of investigating pools and trusts, unanimously passing a resolution reciting that—

It is apparent that through the combinations commonly termed "trusts" or "pools" salutary competition has ceased to exist, and that the combination has in many instances, if not generally, been depressed, and lower organized that may be so read as to endanger the best interests of both government and people. It provides for a joint committee, consisting of two members of the Senate and three members of the House, with power to send for persons and papers, to hold meetings and report to the General Assembly at its adjourned session the facts ascertained and the legislation deemed necessary in its premises to protect the interests of the people of the State.

At Springfield, Mo., Dr. George M. Cox, United States Pension Examiner, and a woman named Ellie Ellis at the railway station, entered a carriage with her, then beat her with a bottle containing sulphuric acid, which burned out her eyes and otherwise disfigured her handsome face. The man fled. The Emperor has issued the following proclamation:

To My People:

The Emperor has ended his glorious life. In the much-loved father whom I bewail, whom my royal house with me laments in deepest sorrow, the faithful Prussian people have lost a ruler who, with the crown of the German Empire, has restored to Germany the ancient glory of the German Emperor. His illustrious name will always be inseparably bound up with all the greatness of the German fatherland, in whose new creation the united princes of the Prussian people and princes has now with the German people to thank him. It is my hope that Prussia may be able to see in the hold of its earnest vocation by never-tiring care, a national father, to lead a sure foundation for that success which was afterward gained by German valor, and which, in the year of grace, 1871, has given national unity to the German people, and the empire a portion of power such as up to the time of the new creation of Germany had never but and scarcely dared to hope for, and that Prussia, in the 200 years of its existence, has always been the nucleus of its strength and strengthen and beneficially increase by the blessings of peace, and by the wise increase of governmental, lately resting upon her own strength, and the strength of her allied princes, the confidence of nations, and serene only to enjoy in peaceful progress that which she has gained. That the to so we have to thank Germany the center of peace and to foster and preserve it, is my firm determination, and I have strong by my house throughout the history of the Prussian people, and I am, in the place of my ancestors, the Prince of Prussia, entrusted that on the basis of the unbreakable fidelity of the princes and of the people, which, independently of every change in the form of the State, has been the strong foundation of the Prussian State, the monarchy, my royal state transformed as it now is, may continue to be the nucleus of a German State, of which I am now called, and of which I solemnly promise to be, the faithful, the true, the happiness and to assure. May God grant me the strength to fulfill this my promise, and to the people, with my royal house, the blessing of peace and labor, because we as much desired as for years.

Perished in the Blizzard.

ALEXANDRIA (N. J.) special:

Two men were found dead in Alexander and Lamberton's Bigler Sawing Machine Company's lumber yard, in this place, on the morning of the 19th inst., and it is supposed they perished in the fog or fell out of the cars. The men were Jacob Lamberton, of this place, but perished while crossing the meadow.

TAMAQUA (Pa.) special:

Jacob Hoffman, a farmer, running three miles from Tamaqua, left his home on Sunday morning at 8 o'clock to drive to town, and left for home at 6 o'clock in the evening, and was found dead in the road. The horse and buggy were found in a ditch. Hoffman's death was caused by the storm.

Tamaqua (Pa.) special:

Three persons in this vicinity are now known to have frozen to death on Monday—a farmer, a milk, meat, and coal famine is threatening.

Newark (N. J.) special:

Dead bodies of three men, nearly dressed, were found in the Passaic River on Monday morning. The bodies were identified as different parts of Newark. The men are still unable to reach their homes, and are still unable to reach their homes. Farmers are now coming to market with their produce.

NEW YORK'S BLIZZARD.

Graphic Account of the Effects of the Great Storm in the Metropolis.

The Losses Occasioned by the Snow-Blockade Estimated at Millions of Dollars.

(SPECIAL NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.)

Business men in New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey since last Monday morning are something unprecedented. During that time the New-Yorkers have been as completely cut off from the world as if they were in a city other, as though their big city was in the middle of the Sahara. For the last three days living from hand to mouth, and yearned for but and scarcely dared to hope for, and that only for food, fuel, and light, the people have begun to realize the full extent of the blow which was attached a placard with the inscription: "Justice at last." The body was the boast of the blizzard. The blizzard was the assassination of Gen. Bryan Grimes, seven or eight years ago. He has been heard to boast of the deed on several occasions when in liquor. It is not known who the lynchers were.

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

THE House Committee on Public Lands at Washington have decided by a party vote to forbear to take any action looking for a forfeiture of all unearned land grants.

MAY 27, at Springfield, is the decision of the Illinois Supreme court. The Central Committee as to the date and location of the Democratic State Convention. The court has each 490 votes or fraction thereof cast for Cleveland in 1884 is the convention apportionment.

THE Republicans of Bradford and Wyoming counties, Pennsylvania, have nominated Hon. Myron R. Wright for Congress from the Fifteenth District. The other counties will concur.

CALIFORNIA Republicans will hold their State convention at Sacramento, May.

THE Democrats of Arkansas will hold their State convention at Little Rock, May 30.

THE Thirteenth Ohio District Republican Convention elected Sherman delegates to the National Convention.

THE Indiana Prohibition State Convention at Indianapolis nominated Dr. Jas. J. Hughes for Governor and adopted a platform demanding strict prohibition and woman suffrage. Electoral tickets were also nominated, large wore chosen, and four members of the W. C. T. U. were added to the State Central Committee.

THE INDUSTRIAL REALM.

It is not given to every judge to be able to please both sides, but Judge Gresham found himself in that happy position after rendering his decision in the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy-Wabash case, on Saturday, says a Chicago special. It suited the Burlington people, giving them more than they expected, and the lawyers were quite jubilant over it, while the Wabash attorneys had nothing to complain of. The decision went further than accomplishing the rare feat of being mutually satisfactory. It virtually gave the "Q" road a clean sweep of the Wabash and interchange freight with it. In the decision Judge Gresham laid down the law for the bodies being in the hands of the court, the Wabash was governed by the receiver in the same way as any other road, and was free from amenable to the operation of the law governing common carriers. Under the provisions of the interstate commerce act it could not refuse to accept freight from one line and accept it from another. Any such discrimination would not be tolerated by the court. The Wabash receiver, having announced that he was ready to haul all the freight a connection by the "Q," there was no necessity for an order in the case. The Chicago papers announce that Chief Arthur and Grand Master Sargent have acknowledged that the strike on the Burlington Road is lost to the men. Mr. Arthur does not believe the Burlington will yield now, but the men want to fight it out longer, and still hope to win the road.

A KANSAS CITY dispatch of Friday says "the journeymen tinsmiths who were employed by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company went on on a strike. The strike involved about twenty men in this city, and is the reason that the road has not been handling Burlington freight. The men left work ordered by some one in authority there is no doubt, but in this city the men profess ignorance of the cause of the strike, and say they have quit because they are "tired."

Journals of Chicago, where men are remained unchanged on the surface, says a Chicago special of Saturday, the strike of the engineers of what is known as the Sack IV system is spreading rapidly, its effects already being extended to points on the Pacific coast. Other roads seem certain to share in the difficulty, and the general strike is now thought to have been averted is now more probable than ever unless some settlement can be reached within a few days. Chief Arthur professes ignorance of the cause of the strike on the Santa Fe.

THE WORLD AT LARGE.

MORMON elders who have been making converts in small districts of Rutetourt County, Virginia, have been notified to leave or be lynched.

SULLIVAN, the pugilist, is reported to have said that instead of training himself he intended to sparring exhibitions and glove contests, as he considered himself fat enough for the ring. Mitchell's friends are jubilant over the result of the recent fight.

THE following dispatch was sent from Bismarck, the capital of Dakota, on Wednesday, bearing New York date:

BISMARCK stands ready to give substantial aid to the blizzard sufferers in New York, as soon as possible.

GOV. N. G. ARMSTRONG, Chamber of Commerce.

AN EDMONTON (N. W. T.) special says: "Last evening it was reported that owing to hunger during the previous winter several cases of cannibalism occurred among the Sioux Indians on the Peace River, and below Vermilion. It is now reported that the cannibalism was not confined to the Sioux, but that a child of a woman who has killed and eaten twelve persons, members of her family and others, was alive at last accounts."

THE idea of establishing commercial union with Canada meets with approval in the House Committee on Foreign Relations, which has unanimously agreed to report favorably Mr. Hitt's resolution providing for the appointment by the President of three commissioners to negotiate a reciprocity treaty.

THE FOREIGN BUDGET.

DEPUTATIONS from all the regiments swore allegiance to the new Emperor, Frederick III.

"CAUSE, sure a shocking accident," says Crown Prince William took the oath with the Second Regiment of Guards. The Emperor's appearance has caused a shock to the loyal people of Berlin. Every one who has seen him agrees that he is looking very badly. The Emperor has issued the following proclamation:

To My People:

The Emperor has ended his glorious life. In the much-loved father whom I bewail, whom my royal house with me laments in deepest sorrow, the faithful Prussian people have lost a ruler who, with the crown of the German Empire, has restored to Germany the ancient glory of the German Emperor. His illustrious name will always be inseparably bound up with all the greatness of the German fatherland, in whose new creation the united princes of the Prussian people and princes has now with the German people to thank him. That the to so we have to thank Emperor William. In his never-wavering determination to be a faithful ally of Prussia, he was ever supported by his reliance upon the self-sacrificing spirit of the Prussian people, the people had given unvarying proofs and in times of the most critical nature, of the rights and duties which are connected with the Prussian crown. Firmly rooted in the affections of the people, and in the hopes and in so to rule, I am resolved to faithfully preserve the inheritance of my ancestors. I am filled with the greatness of my mission I shall make it my task to be a father to my people, and to live only for their welfare. I shall be able to make Germany the center of peace and to foster and preserve it, is my firm determination, and I have strong by my house throughout the history of the Prussian people, and I am, in the place of my ancestors, the Prince of Prussia, entrusted that on the basis of the unbreakable fidelity of the princes and of the people, which, independently of every change in the form of the State, has been the strong foundation of the Prussian State, the monarchy, my royal state transformed as it now is, may continue to be the nucleus of a German State, of which I am now called, and of which I solemnly promise to be, the faithful, the true, the happiness and to assure. May God grant me the strength to fulfill this my promise, and to the people, with my royal house, the blessing of peace and labor, because we as much desired as for years.

Metamorphosis.

"Well, mamma, isn't it funny how people turn into other things?"

"But people don't turn into other things yet, Bessie, that happens in books, you know, in 'Alice in Wonderland.'"

"Yes, but, mamma, they do turn into other things. Little gals turn into grandmas, and mamma turns into grandma."

"That is true."

"Then little boys turn into papas, and papa turn into grandpas."

"Yes, dear."

So it seems that there is such a thing as metamorphosis in this world, after all, and one only needs to look around to find it out! Evidently we do not get half the benefit of our education we should, if we might if we took the childlike view of things—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Bobby—I couldn't, ma; I was holding the cat.—New York Sun.

BRUSSELS lace is celebrated all over the world, and the manufacture is confined to one of the places where this beautiful and costly lace is made. Here we see a group of women, very quiet, very neatly dressed, with their hands in their lap, working the delicate and soft-looking hands, although the fingers are quite workmanlike. The busy fashioning the delicate pattern of a piece of lace, and it is marvelous how each has a pattern of her own, which she alvers from memory, which has been handed down to her from her mother and grandmother, and which the women are working on cushions, with pins and bobbins, and some one pattern, which is the most costly and delicate of thread. We are told that the thread is all made by hand, and is so fine that it is difficult to see the signs of a single beesnice in the dry upper air it would break before he feel it is finished. There are old women in Brussels who have spent nearly all their lives spinning in cellars.

A PRETTY ornament for the hair is the "rose bow." The petals of the rose are formed of ends two inches long of gros grain corded ribbon cut in sharp points at the upper edge, fine gold spiral wire is used stems, and sawtoothed ribbon, for the calyx. This is attached to a long hairpin.

WIRE hats promise to figure conspicuously as an item in the fashion world this season. The very dressy costumes will have them of the dress material and trimmed with metal and jewelled clasps. With extreme will prevail—extreme of fashion. Half up the bodice or just mark the waistline.

HIGH LICENSE AT WORK.

How It Prohibits Prohibition and Fails to Root Out Rum.

Under an $845 License the Saloons of Kansas City Have Nearly Doubled.

Illustrations from Illinois, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, and Other States.

The Kansas City Herald has been engaged for the short fallacest the very extreme high license system prevailing in that city and the influences which have been practised under it. The facts produced are even more startling than those given recently in the Voice for Chicago by Samuel W. Allerton. And yet Kansas City enjoys the benefit of a saloon license three-fifths larger than Chicago's.

Kansas City changed from low license to high license in April, 1882. Previously to that time the saloon license fee was $150 a year, and under that fee there were 250 saloons in the beginning of 1882. The license fee charged after April, 1882, were increased to $500 and $650 to the State and county, making a total fee of $860 a year, which has since been increased to $845 a year. Under this high license system there were, in 1883, 445 saloons, and at the beginning of February 471. The population of Kansas City at that time is as high as in 1882, the number of saloons has probably increased much beyond the ratio of the increase of population.

In the year 1887 there were 7,920 arrests in Kansas City, of which 3,021, or more than one-third, were for drunkenness. No record of arrests for drunkenness was kept in the last year or two, but the comparative figures are recorded for one to understand that with the increase of saloons, drunkenness keeps pace with the increase of saloons. Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids, WEDNESDAY, MAY, 9TH, 1888,

At 12 o'clock noon,

For the purpose of electing delegates to the Democratic National Convention, called to meet at St Louis, Missouri, June 5, 1888, the selection of a State Central Committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

The convention will elect four delegates and four alternates at large, twenty-two district delegates from each congressional district and twenty-two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, from each congressional district, and a chairman at large.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the county they represent.

The delegates from each Congressional District will meet in caucus at ten o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: Two district delegates, two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, one vice-president of the convention, and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

All voters who are in accord with the present Democratic administration in its efforts to reduce taxation to the legitimate wants of the national government, economically administered are invited to participate in the selection of delegates to this convention.

T. M. WESTON, Chairman.
JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four (4) delegates.

THREE of the nine justices of the supreme court were born in 1816.

THE Duluth Paragrapher says its presidential ticket is "Conkling and Lockwood—the Apollo and Belvedear, of American politics."

LABOR's demands are being heard at Washington. A bill applying the eight-hour law to letter carriers was favorably reported to the senate last week.

THE democratic state convention will be held at Grand Rapids May 10, to elect delegates to the national convention to meet at St. Louis, June 5th, 1888.

A YOUNG man in Louisville, who smoked forty cigars a day has been pronounced of unsound mind by the physicians. It was pretty good evidence of weakness somewhere.

A PENNSYLVANIA wife kept her husband away from a certain saloon in a rather novel manner. She trapped a skunk and flung it into the place, and even the proprietor, who is a great home body, decided to take a week off.

THE Philadelphia Telegraph calls upon the republicans in congress to redeem the pledge of the party made in national convention in 1884 to revise the tariff and reduce the surplus. It calls in vain. The republicans in congress are not given to keeping the pledges of their party when it comes to a question of tariff revision.

THERE are 141 veterans of the civil war in the house of representatives at Washington, of whom 58 were confederate, and 83 union soldiers. The seven members from Mississippi all fought in the confederate army, and they are matched by the seven representatives from Kansas, all of whom served their time in the union army. Thus the north and the south are united in fact, as well as in law.

THE Supreme court of the United States has decided that the section of the Iowa statute of 1886, prohibiting railway companies from bringing liquor into that state, is invalid. The court holds that the power to regulate or forbid the sale of a commodity after it has been brought into a state does not carry with it the right and power to prevent its introduction by transportation from another state. The chief justice and Justices Gray and Harlan dissented.

BEFORE the death of Chief Justice Waite the following was the composition of the United States Supreme Court, with the age of each member, the time of appointment and residence: Morrison R. Waite, of Ohio, (rep.), born 1816, appointed, 1874; Samuel F. Miller, of Iowa, (rep.), born 1816, appointed 1862; Stephen J. Field, of California, (dem.), born 1816, appointed, 1863; J. P. Bradley, of New Jersey, (rep.), born 1813, appointed, 1870; John M. Harlan, of Kentucky, (rep.), born 1833, appointed 1877; Stanley Matthews, of Ohio, (rep), born 1824, appointed, 1881; Horace Gray, of Massachusetts, (rep), born in 1828, appointed, 1881; Samuel Blatchford, of New York (rep), born 1820, appointed in 1882; L. Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi, (dem.), born 1825, appointed 1887. Mr. Waite's successor will now be appointed by President Cleveland, and will undoubtedly be a democrat.

Death of Chief Justice Waite.

Morrison R. Waite, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court died suddenly last Friday morning of acute pneumonia. He passed away without a moment's warning. The illness which was the immediate cause of his death began only the Saturday night before, when he complained of a chill. He attended court Monday and was not considered in a critical condition until the evening before he died.

We Want More Eggs.

Every family wants more eggs. We don't have half enough nor one third enough in our home, and yet we have as good hens as you can find anywhere. The trouble seems to be they don't produce enough, and we have been studying how to make them produce more. Eureka! We have found it—we have, as it were, "it onto" just the scheme. We have been reading and listening to protective tariff arguments, and we learn that high tariff stimulates our productive industries—that if it had not been for our protective tariff we would be making nothing in this country, probably not even anarchists. Now in looking over the tariff list we find that eggs are on the free list—that is the reason that our hens do not produce more eggs. We are glad we have found it out, and now if our congressmen do not speedily give us a tariff on our hens—we will try an experiment of our own to test the truth of this tariff theory. We will resolve so helping us John Rodgers, not to buy a single egg laid by our neighbors hens except we pay double what they ask for them, and thus will we be able to force our hens to "lay on McDuff, and damed be he who first cries, hold, enough"—eggs.—Broadaxe.

DEMOCRATIC UNITY.

The Day of Destruction Draws Nigh Unto the Republican Party.

On the threshold of the great political contest of 1888 the Democratic party is practically a unit. There is no issue capable of dividing it. There is no possibility of any such issues arising. The spirit with which the eastern Democrat enters the conflicts is the spirit which animates the Democrat of the north, the south and the west. The purpose of each is the purpose of all. The great principles for which Democracy stands today and which will constitute the distinguishing features of its platform are principles that cement the party in an adamantine union. It represents three cardinal ideas: First, the obligation to conduct the government of the nation on business principles; second, the duty of reducing the burdens of taxation, and, third, the necessity of protecting the rights of the people and the interests of trade from the encroachments of rapacious industrial combinations.

In the details incident to the practical embodiment and enforcement of these ideas there may arise honest differences of opinion, but those differences will never be permitted to seriously disturb the harmony of the party's councils or imperil the integrity of its battle array. They will be settled without diminishing its capacity for effective action, without sowing the seeds of personal dissension, without producing a murmur or a break in the ranks. This perfect concert and consolidation are recognized as the essential condition of victory, and they are already insured without risk of sacrificing one jot or tittle of the duty which public opinion summons the Democracy to discharge. As to our friends—the enemy—the day of destruction is at hand. They will choose some gallant leader to command their forlorn hope, and after the battle has been fought they will resemble the imperial guard when night fell on Waterloo.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Future of the Colored Race.

Care comes with competence. People who are troubled about to-morrow are more thoughtful to-day. A race with only animal pleasures and instincts increase like animals under favorable conditions as to climate. Fecundity and thought are antagonistic. Hence "a poor man for children," not because he is poor in pocket, but in brains. The Irish peasantry have almost run the Yankees out of New England. They have from ten to fifteen children. The New England rule is two. The black population advances in numbers like a glacier advances, slowly, and steadily, and no temporary device will stop it. When the negro's become as anxious to provide for the future as the whites their crania will be larger and longer, but their families smaller. No microbe will destroy them, as it does the Australian rabbits. The only plan is to dose them liberally with cook books.—Chicago Times.

Another Pipe Line.

It is stated that a syndicate of New York, Toledo, Chicago and Detroit capitalists, representing $25,000,000, has just organized to build a pipe line from the northwestern Ohio oil fields to Toledo, and to erect refineries, so as to compete with the Standard Oil company. They claim to own patents on a new process of refining, and can place the product on the market at a cheaper rate. The capital stock of the new company is $10,000,000.—Frank Leslie's.

Sherman, the Champion Shirt Wearer.

The rumor that "Old Red Shirt" is homesick and is preparing to leave the Wild West shore and return to America need cause Buffalo Bill no anxiety. After about June 6 John Sherman will be open to engagements. He has more or less successfully filled the role of "Old Red Shirt" for the past twenty years, and it would be nothing more than right to give him a chance at the position so honorably filled by the Pawnee chieftain.—Chicago News.

Lord Tennyson's Income.

Lord Tennyson receives an income of from $20,000 to $25,000 a year from the sale of his books, but not a cent of it comes from an American publisher, despite the fact that his poetry is nearly as popular here as in England.—Chicago Herald.

MICHIGAN MENTION.

Sundry Gleanings From Our State Exchanges.

A celery trust is to be formed at Kalamazoo.

Greenville is to have a $10,000 opera house.

Grand Rapids will have its new cable road by May 1.

William Steele, of Ionia, owns two cows that cost him $4,925.

It is said that Crystal Falls has 27 places where liquor is sold.

Michigan men have recently purchased 250,000 acres of Mississippi timber lands.

The government has granted the state troops the use of the government field at Mackinac for the next encampment.

The Gale Plow Company have already received 100 bids from different towns that think they want them, and the suckers keep on biting.

The Cheboygan News says Capt. Thos. Gallagher will be promoted to the mastership of the Algomah when Capt. Boynton takes his post on the St. Ignace.

Tom Caroll, the Mud Lake tough, who is now in Canada at $500 expense to his bondsmen, is wanted at Elk Rapids for biting off a man's nose.—Kalamazoo Herald.

Saginaw valley loggers are leaving the woods. It is estimated that about 400,000,000 feet of old and new logs will came out of the Tittabawassee and its tributaries this year.

The owners of the Canadian propeller California, which foundered in the straits off St. Helena last September, with the loss of nine lives, are asking for bids from the several wrecking companies to raise her and deliver her at St. Ignace.

A jury in a Crawford county justice court has decided that it is not a violation of the game law for a setter to kill deer out of season. A verdic of "not guilty" was rendered in the case of J. Herron on the above grounds, although he admitted the killing, in January.

Arnold Van Loghen has a well-trained bird, known as a siskin, from our own northern woods. This pet has been drilled to draw a miniature wagon loaded with seed, up an inclined plane, and his supply of seed also calls forth his energies in the same direction.—Kalamazoo Herald.

Tekonsha possesses a musical prodigy. Ethel Cogswell, a little girl six years of age, exercises her voice and instrumental music with the greatest of ease and with excellent effect. She knows nothing about notes, but takes up difficult tunes and with great rapidity.—Battle Creek Journal.

There are 1,667 students in the university this year, of whom less than half, or 811, are residents of Michigan. Every state and territory in the union is represented; also Canada, Japan, England, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, the Sandwich Islands, Italy, Turkey, Costa Rico, Russia, Scotland, and the United States of Columbia.

Beaurle & Co., have purchased ten acres of land on Bear river, adjoining the G. R. & I. railroad in the south part of Petoskey, and will erect a large steam factory to be used for the manufacture of wood faucets, bungs and a variety of wooden wares, and will employ 50 to 75 men. Mr. Fay, a Chicago capitalist, is backing the scheme.

The free traders of Manistee have challenged Judge Ramsdell of Traverse City to discuss the question of free trade at Manistee, and have chosen Rev. Mr. Walkley, pastor of the Unitarian church there, as their champion. He takes the affirmative that absolute free trade is far the best interests of the United States; Judge Ramsdell the negative. The discussion will take place at Manistee this week.

Michigan lumberman have this winter begun to use sled locomotives for logging purposes. The engine is built on runners instead of wheels, but has one driver with sticker spurs to it, that digs and pushes the sled along. The sled runners dampen the snow and the runners press it down. After a trip or two the roadway becomes coated with several inches of solid ice, and sledding is easy after that.—Cheboygan News.

A Berrien Springs correspondent of Benton Harbor Palladium unearths the latest scheme of swindling to bamboozle farmers: "A seed company, whose place of business is in Oceana county, send out their oily-tongued agents representing that the company have new kind of oats and potato, the oats yielding from 80 to 120 bushels per acre, and they desire to place them in the hands of a few of the leading farmers of each township to introduce them. The company exacts for their share, one-half of all the crop grown from their seeds, and further bind the farmer not to sell any of his share of the oats for less than $1.50 per bushel; thus the farmer who bites at their scheme is virtually working his own farm on shares. I have been told that several grangers have already been taken in."

At the school house yesterday Master Clyde Leavitt held a cartridge on the stove to melt some grease that was attached to it. The grease melted all right enough, just as Clyde thought it would. But something else happened, also, and the doctor soon after removed a bullet from Clyde's hand. He is now having a vacation, carries his hand in a sling, and knows more about cartridges than he did. This accident is the result of several of the smaller boys carrying revolvers and cartridges to school of late.—Bellaire Breeze.

Returning on Tuesday from a trip to Lake county, we stopped a few hours at Cadillac, and among other places visited we called at the retail store of Wm. Gray, the "Co." of the firm of A. T. Washburne & Co., of Charlevoix. Mr. Gow was in New York buying goods for the spring trade, for both the Cadillac and Charlevoix stores. But what he wants of more goods in the Cadillac store is a conundrum, as the salesroom (100 feet long) was packed from one end to the other. We think it safe to say that that store contains nearly as many goods as any two stores in Charlevoix. Buying as they do for so large a trade, it is no wonder they can offer so many unusual bargains.

We are glad to announce that O. B. Weed, M. D., his decided to make Charlevoix his permanent home. He has spent years in hard study, and for the past year has been attending medical lectures at the Detroit College of Medicine, and has not only enjoyed the clinical advantages this well known institution, but also those of Harper and St. Mary's hospitals, where thousand of patients are treated each year. Dr. Weed graduated with honor, and has also taken special course in gynecocracy and diseases of the eye and ear, and therefore enters upon his professional work with confidence. He has secured pleasant office rooms over the Bank of Charlevoix, and hopes to be fully settled by the last of this week. His family are visiting friends in the southern part of the state, and expects to join him in his new home in May or June.

One seldom has an opportunity of spending so pleasant an evening as the school entertainment afforded last night. While the hall was so filled that standing room was at a premium, order was so preserved that even the smallest pupils were distinctly heard. The rendering of each piece on the program would warrant special mention, but time and space will not permit. The concert recitation of Barbara Frietchie by the primary department could but reflect credit upon their teacher as they being so young, caught the life and expression of the recitation through her. The gymnastic exercise with piano accompaniment, could not have been more harmoniously performed. Money Musk by Winnie Bartholomew was musically and gracefully rendered. Prof. Enos requested that the audience should not ask the pupils to repeat any of the selections, as the program was lengthy, but the trio, "Three Black Crows," by three crows, proving too irresistable for obedience, the hearers heartily asked for a repetition. The net proceeds of the entertainment were $45, to be expended for school library.

Purely Personal.

Miss Ruthie Smith is quite ill this week.

Mrs. J. L. Hurd will start to-day for Ionia.

Mrs. Isaac Mills is recovering from a recent illness.

Mrs. R. A. Bedford returned from Manton Friday.

Miss Mattie O'Neill is spending her vacation at home.

Orlando Blair was in Charlevoix charged with being so young he could not keep a cow and hire her pastured. We do not believe the statement made by our correspondent in this issue, that "twenty head of the cows owned in the village would have to be sold or given away if they are shut off from the commons." It is not true.

It is true, however, that the price of milk could be made to balance the extra cost of keeping the cow, and the saving of trees, shrubbery, and garden, would more than counterbalance the extra price of milk. One gentleman who keeps for rent several houses and lots, and who has lost many valuable shrubs, asserts his willingness to give free pasturage to three cows whose owners are too poor to hire them pastured, if by so doing he can be guaranteed against further loss by reason of the cows running in the street.

Last summer our park committee posted signs in the park, imposing a fine of $5 for destroying any tree or shrub, yet the cattle which were permitted in the park did more damage than could possibly be done by malicious boys. Anyone acquainted with cattle can refer to many instances where they have wound the limbs of a small tree or shrub around their horns and absolutely ruined it. If we are to continue paying $50 to $100 a year for improvements in the park, let us protect those improvements by keeping out the cattle.

On account of this agitation several have already engaged pasturage for the summer, and if the voters decide next Mon'ay by a full, hearty ballot to restrain the cattle, we are sure there will never be reason to regret the action.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—I, as a citizen of Charlevoix, would like to say a word on the cow question through your very valuable paper. In answer to your editorial but few words are necessary. It is not a question of pasturing our cows, for it is a well known fact that there is no pasture to be had contiguous to our village. It is a question of cow or no cow. Nine tenths of the cows owned in the village would have to be sold or given away if they are shut off from the commons. The income derived from the cows owned in our village goes a great way towards furnishing food for the poor man's table. And many are the little ones that will go to bed hungry, if the cows are banished from our town. Now a word to "Citizen." I think that citizen could very much improve his or her manners by associating more with those they call "mossbacks" or even with some of the more gentle cows. I think they would learn not to kick so hard. I should say there were many things more of a nuisance than cows on the street. For instance, drunken boys and the places where drunkards are made, and the gambling dens in town. They can violate the laws every day and no one has the courage to say why do you so, but the cow calls forth any amount of invectives. The reason why the saloon and gambling holes are so much more to be protected and encouraged than the cow is that they can furnish votes and prepare candidates for our prison and alms-house while the poor cow only furnishes good pure milk and cream for the mossback. I always supposed that a person's standard of respectability was measured by most people by the length of their purse, but I see that the "Citizen" introduces a new standard,—the size of their cow pasture. And here let me say that the way to keep the cows from the street is for owners of vacant lands contiguous to the village to enclose those lands so as to provide pasturage and at the same time increase their repectability, and I will guarantee that nearly all owners of cows would be glad to patronize them by hiring their stock pastured. But enough has been said. Vox Populi is Vox Dei in this matter.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—The anguish of your contemporary on the cow question is so like and worthy of himself that an answer to his foul epithets and vile language is entirely below my dignity. As the publishing of my name has nothing to do with the right or wrong of cows running at large, I will sign myself simply.

A CITIZEN.

ACT No. 303, of the Public Acts of 1887, provides severe penalties for illegal voting at primary elections, conventions, etc., and as the method of electing overseers of highways and voting on the question of cattle running at large is the same as in a caucus or convention, we trust that the inspectors of election will see that the provisions of the act are enforced. If cattle must run at large, we want to feel that it is the expression of a majority of the bona fide voters of the township.

ILONTON, March 27.—Geo. Allen moved his family into Mrs. R. Bedwin's house east of the store.

At the social held at T. C. Bird's the evening of the 16th, a good time was had, and the receipts were $12.

The Ironton schools closed Friday for two weeks's vacation.

Another wedding at Ironton, Wednesday evening of this week.

Splendid traveling on the lake now.

One of the worst snow storms of this season struck this place last Wednesday evening and continued all day Thursday.

The following ticket was nominated at the caucus, held on Saturday afternoon at the Mountain school house:

For Supervisor, AVA SMITH.
For Clerk, Robert A. Miller.
For Treasurer, Albert R. Steele.
For Justice of the Peace, R. L. Allen.
For Highway Commissioner, John Dunlop.
For School inspector, Fred E. Shiller.
For Constables, Dan Melville, I. G. Waldron, John A. Hammond, John Loose.

The question of publishing the proceedings of the township board was discussed and will come before our voters on election day to be decided. This would be a good plan, let our tax-payer know what becomes of the money for it is right we should know. All of our tax-payers should turn out and have a say in this matter.

Our school closed Friday with the best of satisfaction.

Chas. Hardy wishes us to mention that he will be on the road buying rags in exchange for tinware, paying one cent per pound. He will start April 1.

FOX & MILLER

THE SMOKE SPRITE.

BY JOHN ALSBO.

Clear in mouth I cast,
Of smoke like frolicks on a gusty day,
Wreathed round my brow, with blended gate profound and deep,
Tobacco-tinted, scribled me into sleep.

Dreamed that my pipe was ascending sky
Heaped forth a blithe and merry sprite, a thing
Agile, with laughing eyes and rosy cheeks
Whose coral lips are sinuing as she speaks:

"I am the spirit of that nothing weed
Which men extol for what that nothing is
Which, when smoked and the bowl has been cleaned,
That rests the weary, makes the sleep unneed.

"Loved in all climes since Raleigh, noble sect,
From peasant's cotch could men here rich or Nor found he aught of honor, since or pelf
Be paradise of Tobacco, as thyself.

"Prized by all men except a wealth few
Who, in their pride, do as honest chews;
Too nervelessness and effeminate, they say,
Their weakness wealth some weaker joke;

"One, young essays of less sense than sound,
Much pity I have seen pitying fool
Twice, thrice during friends what demons
Bound in the bondage of a pipe vice:

"The ladies, these them I am one, admit
"Tis nasty habit to smoke, I little not,
The winsome wife, cuddle in sofa, says: "Dear,
I like the flavor; stay and smoke it here."

"Tobacco, sweet narcotic, meat and drink,
Thou art a cozy mind, no help, a think,
Life's cares are nothing, and life's joys: "Dear,
I adore thee, Have a bowl of Tobacco."

"There's sense in all you say, but still it seems
That you indulge, like mortals, in extremes,
Tobacco is good, but not good to excess,"
And so I would, but, just then, I awoke.

IT WAS THE CAT-TAILS.

BY EVA N. DE JARNETTE.

"Cat-tails, Genus Typhus, also called Reed-mace." Webster's Unabridged Dictionary.

Girls, do you know what they say? In your ceal for fashioning and decorating soft them, have you ever thought to bend down your ear and listen to their whispers?

In the long ages of antiquity King Midas was punished for ill-taste in music by having ass' ears clapped on his head.

At his wife's suggestion the king invented the fashion of bangs, frizzes, ear-locks and such, and he wore a great bag-topped crown to conceal his deformity.

But no man is a hero to his valet, and the barber knew the secret. Weary of the burden of the terrible secret, he dug a hole in a solitary place, and whispered into it,
"Our master has asses' ears!"

Cat-tails sprang up, and to this day, when agitated by the wind, they mischievously repeat the hint, unkiniously varying the message to make a personal affair of it,
"Our rulers have asses' ears!" they murmur—"asses ears!"

They whisper in Greek, and if Dick and Tom, fresh from college, cannot make it out, it is because they are just humbugs, and don't know anything about the language.

Moreover, Homer says, the giant Typhus gave more trouble to the gods than all the rest put together. He was like a cork; push him under in one spot and he would pop up in another. It was a difficult thing "for to put a head on him," for he possessed already a hundred of his own. And when at last Jupiter "planted" him alive in the Isle of Ischia, and was thinking about setting up a nice tombstone over him, to let the friends know what a person, spreading, ubiquitous kind of old hairpin he was, all at once cat-tails with their hundred heads, appeared, and the wind floated their downy seed-puffs over the face of the earth.

Diseases with a hundred forms broke out among men and beasts, which are still called by the same name wherever the cat-tail grow. So Jupiter concluded not to waste his money on a fellow who could actually make the four winds of heaven and ether do his nature in his behalf.
He grabbed, even bundling into the same channel the esthetic fancies of fashionable young ladies of the nineteenth century.

But Dick Harrington didn't know a word of all this.

Although long past the age when a fellow's friends constantly tell him, as a piece of unexpected news, "how he has grown," Dick had all the whiskers he could call his own, and had grown fat certy he had not let his troublesome ans-tache remain ident, instead of respectfully scraping it off, and cutting it with his sister's scissors, till it was as cuff as a blacking-brush.

If course, he had trampled over cat-tails and cish-mosses, pond-lilies and wild roses, thousands of times, but had never bothered his brain over the generic names of sedges and reeds.

He had published them as good "cover" for grouse, partridges and Indian hens, excellent than stong with snake-worms, cra-shells, and other small cra-tacea, as the proper food, or signs of feeding ground for "snipes," "marins," "summer ducks,"
"sora-rails," and "doe-wilders."

He wasn't esthete at all, Dick wasn't, and wonder his pretty sister Dale was "out" with him for putting on that rust-ty-brown shooting-jacket, and stuffing his pantaloons into boots that were quite big and strong enough to walk about sleep, and for going out after "dippers" and "spring-tails" when a girl was coming—and those "utterly utter" kind, too, who have never a shadow of any kind of real trouble to sour them, and consequently think that the sun shines and the "wide world wags" for their private and individual benefit.

Afraid of a girl! And he just at free two in the stocking feet." No wonder he looked sneaking and mean, and when Dale followed him as far as the horse-blocks, still arguing the question, he gave three perfectly hypocritical reasons for not going to the station to meet Dora, his dainty dear cousin and bosom friend.

Dora.

Falsely he averred a flock of dappers or wild turkeys (Kate could not make out that he said, he mumbled so) to be scattered and in waiting for him to fill in Carrie's Wood, in testimony of which he produced a "yelper," and velped till Kate put her fingers to her ears, for all the gobblers in the yard, angrily answering, came strutting up, with their "Turk's heads" swelled up as red and big as some tomatoes.

"Dick, I am too sick only mean to live. I'd like to throw a plate at you, really. Dick, I am ready to cry. To have to send the hired boy to drive, when I've got a brother tall as a church steeple."

"Kate, I'd go in a minute, but I've got to meet a man.

"Hush, Dick, you are telling sisters Dora is so pretty too," sighs Kate.

"The washerwoman has all my collars, and——

"I wonder you are not afraid you'll end like Ananias and Sapphire. Oh, I do wish I wasn't afraid to drive Flirt myself. And two bright little tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Really, Katie, I was in the village yesterday, where they have manners, and should not like to run the risk of her catching them in me.

"Oh, I do hope Dora will pay you for this; indeed I do. I hope she will flirt fit half off your hand, you aggravating, good-for-nothing——

Dick fled away out of hearing, for in his heart of hearts he was afeard of a girl."

He had climbed Forney's Peak when it was two feet deep in snow, and shot a Texas panther, had slept quietly by the bri-once fire to the music of the gray wolves' hideous howling and the mountain-lion's doleful roar. He had dared the redskins of the Black Hills in their fearful fastness, but was pitifully "afeard of a woman."

Stepping out, as if he was owner of the Seven League Boots, keeping a keen eye to the sickbed tabitha, a "point" from his his black-and-tan setter, he communed sadly with himself as to how he could possibly avail himself of lodging privileges under his father's roof for the coming week. How he was to eat and sleep, keep out of sight of his sister's friend, and still be highly thought of and admired by her,
"afeard of a woman."

Kate this time, for he dearly loved his pretty sister, and hated to cross her wishes.

"Unless I break a large knock out an eye, she would never forgive me," was his conclusion. "However, I'll hunt to-day, and go into the merry business in the morning."

"Sing while we may,
Another day
Will bring enough of sorrow."

Hola! Something is the matter with Pluto! His white-tipped tail has ceased to vibrate—he elongates his body, thrusts forward his head; his eye is set; his limbs stiffen rigidly; he is "point to have a fit!

"His only White-ear! hang, hang!
How the feathers fly! Three birds, by all that's lovely

He bags the prettr, brown, quivering creature, witnessing a pang of commotion, and looks up for fresh victims. When game is plentiful the true hunter takes no note of time, nor does he heed the pangs of hunger.

Passing through the dim, damp depths of the leafless woods, he added some woodcock and "hairy brown-eyes" to his bag.

The short winter day is almost ended.
The naked, rusty tree-tops stand cut coldly against the pale, grayish sky; the shudder-ing wind of the coming day creeps over him, and he begins to realize that he has eaten nothing since breakfast.

As the Loadstone Rock drew Sinbad's frail bark remorselessly to its destruction, so Dick is marching straight into the clutches of his fate, unknowing and unwilling.

The unerring certainty with which skillful sportsmen can distinguish objects afar off is well known, but none the less remarkable. By the pale, smothered gleam of the fading sunset Dick perceives a thing which makes his heart flutter.

There has been a signal of danger. His own footsteps crunching over the stiff, dry flags, and the boss of

"The ripple wanting in the reeds,
And the water lapping on the crag,"

are the only sounds he hears.

Yet (Venus and Bacchus!) Pluto was not more startled at "the man's footprint in the sand" than was Dick at a fine game well, cuddling in a bunch of briers, gently, innocently waving in the evening breeze.

A step further there is a spring of scarlet China berries, some small footprints in the mud, and a glove.

Not Dick! Rags make a big, tough old salesman particularly fastidious about "fits," and Dick liked them small hun-ney, although his own would have done for Hercules. Lady gloves are sometimes prettier than the hands they cover.

This one was a dainty, embroidered little affair, and told a tale of distress lying there among the dried grasses and things girls are for ever reaching after for their winter vases, with scrambling little footprints to the mud all around it.

Beauty bedeggled in its greed for the decorative cat-tail. Dick sighed as he put the pretty trifles in his vest-pocket.

A few more strides on the Seven-league
Boots and he was on the high road, where Flirt had stamped hither, while the lived boy held her in, and the young lady "went for" the rushes.

After off he could, through the parlor windows, see the light, "where horse-hoof fires gleamed warm and bright." He called along with remnie of mad ins-ing to his boots, bristling all over with cockle burrs and Spanish needles, hands grimed with gunpowder, and a heavy gun on his shoulder.

But nothing felt so heavy as that bit of green in his pocket, and the dusty glove, with the sylvanite's crumpled rose-leaf, they made a lump that ridiculed and galled him. He was in a fever to be rid of them.

He made a circuit of the stable-lot and garden to prevent the possibility of his being seen from the parlor windows, as if in these days of high art young ladies had nothing better to do than sit moping in a gloomy light like Marius in the mosed grange.

Cautiously passing the hasseyacke arbor, looking about and around over his shoulders, he plumped upon what he most wished to avoid.

Sat and the dear boy—and sitting on the stone rising in mystic majesty over the big wooden gate, as Saint and Seldom.

He nearly stepped upon them, but before he had time to swoon or shoot himself, would have to walk around them lovely the situation, was introducing a fairy-like creature, with Indian sunset in her hair, and aurora borealis in her cheeks, was murmuring his name.

He had not the sense to excuse himself and leave, but stood like a great object, blushing, muttering, looking like the poor
"Exile of Erin," or a Pennsylvania roadside.

To Dora he appeared more of a beautiful Dryad than ever, for the shock had lit the face his great beard left exposed, and in a pretty fine voice, she began talking to him.

"Oh, Mr. Harrington, Kate and I have been thinking such things about the Pleiades and Orion, and Bernice's Hair. How they must have looked and shone, just as they do now, thousands of years ago, when the Greek boys and girls went tramping over the lofty roads of Arcadia on their way to the Olympic Games; and they talked of them under the same names that we do tonight—don't they, Kate?"

"Indeed they did, Dora."

"And they twinkle now just as they did on the night Alexander stormed Tyre, and Hannibal terrified Rome with his victory at Cannae. Don't you think so, Mr. Harrington?

"Kate did not want to see her brother die right in the prime of life, so she mercifully answered for him in an off-hand kind of way.

"Indeed he does, Dora. Dick has been half over the world, you know."

Then she carried her friend into the parlor, leaving Dick too weak to walk up his steps.

Then she went up to his room later, to see why he did not come down, he told her he had a chip in his eye, his ankle was out of joint, his nose was bleeding.

Katie just went on laying out his best clothes on the bed for him to put on.

"Now, sonny, don't you be a great goose.
Dora's the dearest little creature in the world. Don't you mind her talk about the stars and things; it is just a way she has, and she'll get over it in no time. She is all dressed up in her great grandfather's shoe-buckles, playing backgammon with an old Greek.

"Dick! Dick! I hope she will flirt fit half off your hand, you aggravating, good-
for-nothing——

Dick fled away out of hearing, for in his heart of hearts he was "afeard of a gal."

He had climbed Forney's Peak when it was two feet deep in snow, had shot a California panther, had slept quietly by the bri-

HE WAS NO KICKER.

Bot Mr. Tooter Williams Vehemently Objected to One of the Committee's Rules

A Half Hour's Excitement and Fun in the Thompson Street Poker Club Room.

THE Thompson Street Poker Club held its meeting, and Mr. Cyando Whiffles, Chairman of the Committee on Jack-pots, Ante and Stakes, submitted his report on Saturday evening, writes H. G. Carleton, in the New York World.

It was read twice, according to rule, and Elder Jubilee Anderson was about to move its acceptance, when Mr. Tooter Williams slow, leaned in a graceful position against the mantel, crossed his legs, and let his left hand drop in the manner best calculated to show his new amethyst ring to advantage, bestowed a smile, first on the chairman, who was plunging his nose into his handkerchief, and then on the assembled club, and remarked:

"The Thompson Street Polyah Club knows dat I hain't no kickah, 'a the hain't no membah what razzles wif he lock mo' reckerless dan me. Jodd," he continued, addressing the Elder forefinger and shaking it so the amethyst fairly attracted Elder Jubilee Anderson, "dar am a rule passed ter night by de gemman on de kummittee, what I'm willin' ter kiss de Bible ter dat fur me. Dad rule," pursued Mr. Williams, with a fine, high, Ciceronian flourish, "dat yo' mustn't ketch no pa'ds."

"Jodd, tole yo'!" When a membah yo' busted hoss' outen cash he mus' jump up de ladder ter de ceiling, an' yo' mus' say, 'I'm sky fo' chips,' or 'I love yo', ole hoss,' or 'I'm dat glad ter see yo' back,' or 'I'm a-goin' down wif dis chair arter de jigaboo dis' de rule. 'Poke, pa'r, yo' hole, I'm a-fo' yo.'"

"Jesso," assented Reverend Thankful Smith, at whose suggestion the rule had been passed.

"Jodd, tole yo', Mr. Williams, "I hain't 'sputin' dat de rule am a-jaw, 'a dar mo' money in de cards game dan in de Jackson Five Cent Bank."

"Dasso," assented Professor Brick, who had held seven of Mr. Williams' U O's nine months.

"Jodd," said Mr. Williams, fixing a dignified and temporized his pistol at the Professor, "ef de word of a gemman—here he drew himself into his full height, and twiddled the amethyst ring some more—"ef de word of a gemman hain't gwine ter be taken no mo' in dis club, den I hes do honah"—here he traversed the reversed Masonic sign a cruelly low—"I hes de honah to offah my resign." Here the speaker retracted a nickel-plated box of great brilliancy from an inside pocket, drew from a cigar-tube, lighted a fine Havana and with great dexterity blew a dense cloud of smoke, contemplated the Jubilee Anderson, who never used tobacco in any form, and considered cigarettes rank poison.

The reverend Chairman wiped his specs, resolved to continue, as he took a careful survey of Mr. Williams, leaned back, folded his hands, and smiled.

"Toot Williams," he said, "I've allers noticed at pokah dat de man what looks ter lite-prescribed rules an de man dat de rule fits like a plaster."

"Dat's prezecksy," said Mr. Williams, hotly.

"No, dat's not prasonal, Toot," said the reverend gentleman, sweetly; "dat's pokah. Gimme de man what breaks ter pieces de de chips when he busts, but blows in de bref agin money, I'll show yo' dat I'm a-sho I O U's fer ten times mo'n he's worth.

"Dat's a lie!" asserted Mr. Williams, knocking off his cue and leaping into warlike attitude.

"Ef yo' mo'n any man in de room—"

Here Mr. Williams made a pass at the reverend gentleman, who failed to duck. Simultaneously a leg shot out from beneath the table and landed on Mr. Williams' shin bone, and with a skill that he fell heavily to the floor, Mr. Williams was upset by Mr. Smith, who fell on top of Mr. Williams as he fell. The excitement in the club was intense.

"Chew offen the nose," advised Mr. Cyrando Whiffles.

"Bottin in de stummick," counseled the Elder.

"Comb de kinks wif yo' chin," urged Mr. Gin-Johnson.

"Laminate silly," said Professor Brick.

Excellent as these suggestions were, and great as was his evident support by the club, the reserved chairman pursued as even tenor.

Astride of Mr. Williams' digestive organs, he grasped that gentleman firmly by the whiskers, and butted his head against the floor with rhythmical skill and considerable force.

"Jar 'em up," said Mr. Williams, "Am de rule jood? Jar 'em up! Jar Mr. Smith."

"Jodd, tole yo'," said Mr. Williams.

"You votes for de rule?" asked Rev. Mr. Smith, introducing a double butt into his obligato with Mr. Williams' head.

"Jist hammerin' de lid," said Mr. Williams.

"De rule goes?" inquired Rev. Mr. Smith, varying his exercises with a brilliant series of triple butts—"de rule run a-goes?"

"Jist sayin'," said Mr. Williams. "Git offen my stomach."

Rev. Mr. Smith unloaded himself from Mr. Williams' abdomen, but still he kept up a strip on the Bibles. Mr. Williams' head.

"Den—butt—yo' grees—butt—dat wen yo' pokes in dis club—butt—butt—it's agoin' ter git mo' nuffs?—triple butt—'a de new rule goes in fo'ce ter night?"—a butt of tremendous power.

"Yezzah," responded Mr. Williams, "please lemme ketch my breh."

Rev. Mr. Smith arose and resumed his seat at the table. Mr. Williams lay quiet a few moments, breathing heavily, then got up, with the assistance of Mr. Whiffles, and was led to a chair.

The gavel fell.

"I ax hein no yapersition tor de new rule," said the chairman, calmly, "de secretery will write in de minnits dat it am passed unanimous, 'a' de Mr. Whiffles'll jount de kyards 'a de members'll hait in de boodle for de chips de perfesser'll go bline, Brer Tooter'll straggle, 'a de chairman'll parse de aces 'a I'll play de skilter pat."

The club then went into executive session.

The Pope as a Governor.

His ability and administrative capacity soon attracted the attention of the authorities at the Vatican, and, after a short apprenticeship in the room of administration at Rome, he was sent by Gregory XVI. to assume the Governship of the province of Benevento, which was then in a state of great disorder. The petty nobles oppressed the poor, and of them having gangs of brigands in their service.

The new Governor set vigorously to work protecting the peasantry and restoring order, and the insolent nobles had corrupt officials were long in discovering that in the young priest—for Gioacchino Pecci was but 28—they had not only their match but their master. He went personally among the peasantry, in spite of warnings, and, in their grievances, examined their accusations against the landlord and their agents, cited the accusers and the accused to appear, and, on the evidence carefully himself. He had, moreover, a sufficient force of military and police at his command to back up the decisions of the Governor. Hence the "Lion of Benevento" was soon called the "Lion of Rome," and, in the hearts of the oppressed, he became a noble and honored name.

Some persons are prone to consumption, and they should never allow the disease to become seated.

A Rare Tart Paid.

It has been held, here truthfully we cannot say, that a man who is fast becoming a slave to intoxicants can sometimes be cheated in his self-poisoning. Degraded course by causing him to drink what has been adulterated with deliriums tremens, and so making him realize his danger. In the following of even more degraded, and more succeded, although the deception used was not intended.

John A——— was fast going the drunkards path, without the resolution to check his downward career. When remonstrated with his reply was: "Oh, I can stop when I want to, and will stop when I see signs of the d. t."

Two of his companions, on a plan which should make him see signs of the d. t.

One day they called on John, and found him, as they knew he would be, in his same half-stupefied condition, drunk. Each friend had in his pocket a rat, an animal to which John had an aversion.

After a time one of the visitors let a rat, by means of a string, down his back.

The new Governor set vigorously to work reducing the pauperism and the insolent noble to the condition of peasantry, and succeeded in the room of administration at Rome, he was sent by Gregory XVI. to assume the Governship of the province of Benevento, which was then in a state of great disorder. The Fancy Bread.

Prof. Ramsar believes that the particular deficit giving rise to color-blindness lies not in the eye itself, but in the brain. Certain persons, he points out, are incapable of judging which of two colors is the more intense, and when they are more than an octave apart. Yet, on the contrary, when the tone perfectly, the defect is not one of deafness. He accordingly argues that in such persons the fault is in the brain, and thence proceeds to the assumption that the brain is not wanting in the inability to perceive certain colors is not due to a defect in the perceptive or sight by the eye, but to the power of interpreting the impressions conveyed to the brain by the optic nerve.

GIANTS.

Some of the Tall People of History.

The existence of a race of giants far exceeding those exhibited in modern times was fully believed in up to the commencement of the eighteenth century. Millis, baliff was founded partly upon the Old Testament, partly on the discovery of huge bones supposed to be those of human beings, and partly upon the accounts handed down by medieval writers. The Old Testament says: "There were giants in those days," and giant is applied to several races of men, as the Anakim, Zeuzim, Emim, the Zonzemim and others. There are several instances in the Old Testament of individual giants, such as Og (who slept on a bedstead of iron) and Goliath. The height of Og is not mentioned, but Goliath, at most, did not exceed eight and a half feet in stature, other historians (sometimes called profane) also mention giants, but some of their accounts are not worthy of belief. Plutarch states that when the grave of Antaeus was opened by Sertorius the body was found to be sixty cubits long. Pliney also relates that at an earthquake in Crete the bones of a giant forty-six cubits in length were disclosed. Giants play a large part in the mythology of almost all nations of Aryan descent. The Greeks, who represented them as being of monstrous size, with hideous countenances, and having the feet of serpents instead of their abode in volcanic districts, whither they were banished by Jupiter, and buried after three unsuccessful attempts to overthrow the gods, with the assistance of Hercules, represented them under Titan and other volcanoes. The Greek giants were called in the Greek history, was eleven and one-half feet high. The giant Gallus, brought from Arabia to Rome under Claudius Cesar, was about ten feet, and the bones of Scandilla and Gelasia, keepers of the gardens of Salina, were but six inches shorter. We read of a giant Ferragus, slain by Orlando, a nephew of the celebrated Charlemagne, was eighteen feet high. Fumum, a Scotchman, who lived at the time of Fagene II., King of Scotland, measured eleven and a half feet; and Lo-Mare, in his voyage to the Indies, in Magellan, reports that on December 15th he found at Port Desire several graves covered with stones, and, having the curiosity to remove them, he found human skeletons and eleven feet long. Coming to more reliable evidence, it seems certain that a height of even nine feet has not been at any time attained. In the museum of Trinity College, Dublin, there is a skeleton of eight feet six inches in height. In the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, of Edinburgh, there are two skeletons, one of eight feet and two inches in height, and another at Dunn eight feet. The skeleton shown at Rouen 1855 measured eight feet four and a half inches. The skeleton Maximinus was one inch shorter. Skenkna and Platerus, physicians of the last century, say Ascalon, of that stature, and Gorapius saw a girl nineteen years old, who was eight feet high. In 1613 the remains of a supposed giant were found on the Rhone. It was stated that the skeleton had been in a tomb thirty feet long, and the skull was stuffed with long mosses, like old men's gray beards, and dry red-pods, and nucleus of "tuak" for Dora.

He had caught a part of the tune of "Wapping Old Stairs," which in secluded spots he sang with great gusto, and he foolishly kissed the little glove more than once, a thorn in the side no longer.

The week had nearly slipped away, and he was out washing his gun, when she came to watched him.

"You have not kept your promise," she remarked.

"What promise?"

"To help me get cat-tails."

"I'll do it now. Shall I shoot them first?" he asked.

"What do you mean? I'll run in and get my hat and shoes."

"Lake as not they are on the roof of the house," muttered Dick, "and I don't know what Kate will do. But if Dora wants Massepa's fall it shall be out of hire. What queer fancies girls have! To want a cat-tail!"

Under that great furry black hat, with its wealth of soft plumes, any girl would have looked charming. Dora always looked so.

"Come," she said, "they are down on the ice. I want to scramble after them myself. It brings good luck."

"They'll scratch you fearfully."

"Certainly. Why would you not prefer me? I know a fellow who has a claw-cat full. He cuts them off as trophies."

"How awfully cruel!"

"Cat-tails would be worse, as you would have to kill them first." "Indeed, I'm sorry I ever thought of such a mouse-tail of Tabby as she does of me."

Dora looked as completely mystified as she were listening to a foreign remarks in the Hebrew language.

Dick, who was observant, caught the expression, and carried her friend off to the piano.

Was it a shaft at random sent that made Dick remember the Greek boy and girl of the German songs she had spent so much time over?

Come little fairylike creatures know their own footsteps crunching over the stiff, dry flags, and the boss of "The ripple wanting in the reeds,

And the water lapping on the crag,"

are the only sounds he hears.

Yet (Venus and Bacchus!) Pluto was not more startled at "the man's footprint in the sand" than was Dick at a fine game well, cuddling in a bunch of briers, gently, innocently waving in the evening breeze.

A step further there is a spring of scarlet China berries, some small footprints in the mud, and a glove.

Not Dick! Rags make a big, tough old salesman particularly fastidious about "fits," and Dick liked them small hunney, although his own would have done for Hercules. Lady gloves are sometimes prettier than the hands they cover.

This one was a dainty, embroidered little affair, and told a tale of distress lying there among the dried grasses and things girls are for ever reaching after for their winter vases, with scrambling little footprints to the mud all around it.

Beauty bedeggled in its greed for the decorative cat-tail. Dick sighed as he put the pretty trifles in his vest-pocket.

A few more strides on the Seven-league Boots and he was on the high road, where Flirt had stamped hither, while the lived boy held her in, and the young lady "went for" the rushes.

After off he could, through the parlor windows, see the light, "where horse-hoof fires gleamed warm and bright." He called along with remnie of mad ins-ing to his boots, bristling all over with cockle burrs and Spanish needles, hands grimed with gunpowder, and a heavy gun on his shoulder.

But nothing felt so heavy as that bit of green in his pocket, and the dusty glove, with the sylvanite's crumpled rose-leaf, they made a lump that ridiculed and galled him. He was in a fever to be rid of them.

He made a circuit of the stable-lot and garden to prevent the possibility of his being seen from the parlor windows, as if in these days of high art young ladies had nothing better to do than sit moping in a gloomy light like Marius in the moated grange.

Cautiously passing the hasseyacke arbor, looking about and around over his shoulders, he plumped upon what he most wished to avoid.

Sat and the dear boy—and sitting on the stone rising in mystic majesty over the big wooden gate, as Saint and Seldom.

He nearly stepped upon them, but before he had time to swoon or shoot himself, would have to walk around them lovely the situation, was introducing a fairy-like creature, with Indian sunset in her hair, and aurora borealis in her cheeks, was murmuring his name.

He had not the sense to excuse himself and leave, but stood like a great object, blushing, muttering, looking like the poor "Exile of Erin," or a Pennsylvania road-side.

To Dora he appeared more of a beautiful Dryad than ever, for the shock had lit the face his great beard left exposed, and in a pretty fine voice, she began talking to him.

"Oh, Mr. Harrington, Kate and I have been thinking such things about the Pleiades and Orion, and Bernice's Hair. How they must have looked and shone, just as they do now, thousands of years ago, when the Greek boys and girls went tramping over the lofty roads of Arcadia on their way to the Olympic Games; and they talked of them under the same names that we do to-night—don't they, Kate?"

"Indeed they did, Dora."

"And they twinkle now just as they did on the night Alexander stormed Tyre, and Hannibal terrified Rome with his victory at Cannae. Don't you think so, Mr. Harrington?

"Kate did not want to see her brother die right in the prime of life, so she mercifully answered for him in an off-hand kind of way.

"Indeed he does, Dora. Dick has been half over the world, you know."

Then she carried her friend into the parlor, leaving Dick too weak to walk up his steps.

Then she went up to his room later, to see why he did not come down, he told her he had a chip in his eye, his ankle was out of joint, his nose was bleeding.

Katie just went on laying out his best clothes on the bed for him to put on.

"Now, sonny, don't you be a great goose. Dora's the dearest little creature in the world. Don't you mind her talk about the stars and things; it is just a way she has, and she'll get over it in no time. She is all dressed up in her great grandfather's shoe-buckles, playing backgammon with an old Greek.

"Dick! Dick! I hope she will flirt fit half off your hand, you aggravating, good-for-nothing——

A Business-Like Offer.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. This tendered remedy has fairly attained a world-wide reputation. If you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges, dropping in the throat, offensive breath, coughing, sneezing, and snuffing, and, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; if there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed and has a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hopeless feeling, nervous irritability, you are afflicted from nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without mentioning half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians.

A Michigan Central Railroad Employe Was His Case After a Seven Years' Control.

ALMON, Mich., Dec. 20, 1887.

While employed as a gang of the Michigan Central Railroad Company at Augusta, Mich., about seven years ago, I contracted a disease, and I have been a great sufferer since then. Have consulted the ablest physicians of this city and Ann Arbor, and all have pronounced my case Bright's disease, and taking every highly recommended remedy that I had knowledge of, but without avail, while suffering under a very severe attack in October last, began taking Hilbert's Electric Syrup, and am to-day a well man. It cured me after all else had failed. I feel it my duty to recommend this and, on receiving the remedy, allow me to say that it is the greatest medicine of the age for the cure of Chronic Diseases and Bright's Disease.

FARM AND GARDEN.

A CONVENIENT AND SAFE DEVICE FOR HOLDING A BULL.

Southern Exposure and Sunshine for Bees. Live Stock Statistics—The Farmer's Garden—Radish—All About Hotbeds. Safe Device for Handling a Bull.

In this progressive age most farmers grow some of their plants under glass, and in this manner keep space with the regular market gardener. The construction and management of hotbeds is a comparatively simple matter after one has had some practical experience in this direction. Manure beds are the sort that are used, and horse droppings is the preferred manure.

There are two methods in use now by gardeners in forming the manure bed, some digging a pit and filling the manure into it, and others building the manure up into a square bed and setting the frame on it. The first method requires the most labor and the second the most manure, hence in making a choice of methods one must let labor versus manure decide the matter. The first plan is the one most generally employed, and therefore is familiar, having been often described in print. Our here given shows a perspective view of a bed constructed on the manure without a pit, and described by Isaac J. Tringham, of La Plume, Pa., in his "Plant Manual," along with other interesting matter of general and widespread interest.

HOTBED WITHOUT A PIT.

Mr. Tringham advises that the spot selected for the bed be so sheltered as possible on the north and west by some building or high board fence. The sash should slope gently to the south or east. If the manure is fire and contains little or too long straw it will be necessary to put a plank frame around it to keep it in position. After leveling the manure there ought to be three or four narrow boards laid across it on which to rest the hotbed frame, so that after the manure heats all will settle together evenly. Unless the weight of the frame and sash will force it down into the manure, and the center of the bed will appear to raise and displace the plants.

When ready to begin operations the manure needs to be forked over, shaken out finely and thrown into a high conical heap to heat, if dry it should be watered until well dampened throughout the heap. If allowed to stand in this heap about one week it will heat and begin to smoke like a small volcano. A vital point to be observed in making a hot bed is to spread the manure down while hot; it then continues to heat, but if spread down cold it will heat slowly and unevenly. Early in the spring, when considerable cold weather is still anticipated, it is advised to use a common wagon box full of manure to each sash, but later in the season, when forming beds in which to transplant seedlings, one-half that quantity will suffice.

The soil used should be prepared in advance; it must be light, loose and rich. This soil should be placed on the manure to a depth of from four to six inches and the glasses properly adjusted. The most common sashes are 3 by 6 feet. The frame, therefore, should be made 6 feet wide and as long as is necessary to accommodate the number of sashes to be used.

After the soil becomes warm sow the seed in rows about four inches apart and scatter them quite thickly in the rows. Mr. Tringham advises against sowing broadcast, as the labor of keeping free from weeds is greater. When the seedlings are about three inches high he transplants them from 3 by 6 inches, and assures us these require more space he transplants without injuring the growing plants it is advised to get the stem well into the soil. The object sought is plenty of fibrous roots on a short, stocky stem. Closely watch the temperature of the beds, which ought to be from 60 to 65 degrees, suitable for tomatoes, peppers, etc. Cabbage and cauliflower require less heat and ought not to be placed in the same bed with tomatoes. Mr. Tringham thinks that better cabbage plants are produced without bottom heat, and employs for these a frame fitted the same as for a hotbed, except that the manure is omitted and a pit is made. He covers this frame with sash and sows the seed in February or early March.

A Good Radish for Market Gardeners.

Among novelties in vegetables extolled for the first time in the Philadelphia white "box" radish, which is illustrated and described by James Vick in his Guide for 1888, and shown in the accompanying cut. The points of superiority claimed for it are, a short, top, rapid growth, perfect uniform shape, extra fine quality, and showing no disposition to become pithy with age.

PHILADELPHIA BOX RADISH.

Vick says: "It is especially adapted for growing in boxes or frames, hence its name, as well as early sowing on squares or borders in the open ground. Owing to its thick short leaves, it can be sown very thickly in the row without causing the slightly in the row without causing the leaves to "draw." It has been estimated that fully one-half more radishes can be grown in the same space of this sort than most other varieties, hence its value to those engaged in forcing early vegetables under glass."

To the Vegetable Garden.

Cabbage, Irish and sweet potatoes do best on a coarse, sandy loam, the latter, however, attaining size at the expense of quality. Watermelons, cucumbers and sweet potatoes grown for fine quality flourish best on a bank of about 60 per cent. of very fine sand and 40 per cent. of clay.

Plant cauliflower early, five feet apart each way. Make the cabbage plants on one side of the hill; a week later plant the other side, and when well up thin to three of the best plants in the hill. For watermelons furrow eight feet apart each way, and proceed in all respects as above, and cultivate until the vines meet. Sifted coal ashes gives the best satisfaction in preventing the attacks of the melon bug.

In arranging dates for planting vegetables for a succession, it should be noted as the season advances and becomes warmer that peas, and in fact all kinds of vegetables, grow faster and overtake one another. The dates for planting the different sorts does not lead to corresponding intervals in gathering the crops. For instance, though five days' difference in date of planting peas in April will make about as many days' difference in the time of harvesting in June, yet five days difference in planting in May will make hardly any visible difference in ripening in July.

Sunshine for Bees.

Numbered with other queries of general interest sent out among leading apiarists all over the country, by the editor of The American Bee Journal, was the following:

"In wintering bees outdoors, would it be better to have the apiary on the south side of a hill facing south, where the bees get plenty of sunshine; or on the north side of a hill facing north, and no sunshine, as some have contended?"

In the twenty-one replies received all, excepting one, favored the southern slope and the sunshine. J. P. H. Brown said: "I prefer the apiary on the north side of a hill in a warm climate, and on the south side in a cold climate." G. W. Demaree replied: "I would prefer a southeastern slope to any apiary ground. But I have had my apiary on four sites in the past, differing widely from each other, and I have really seen but little difference as to the results." The editor of The Bee Journal concludes the replies with the following advice: "In the northern latitude, place the bees on the south side of the hill. In the south some prefer the hives to face the north, but all desire them to have as much sunshine as possible."

Live Stock of the Country.

A recent report of the department of agriculture shows an increase in horses, mules and cattle, with a decrease in sheep and swine. The largest rate of increase is in horses, amounting to 5 per cent. The increase in cattle is nearly 2 1-2 per cent., comparing closely with the advance in population. The total of cattle shows an aggregate upward of 40,000,000, or 82 per 100 of population. In sheep the decline appears to be between 2 and 3 per cent., the aggregate of flocks being about 43,500,000. Swine have declined in numbers less than 1 per cent., leaving the total upward of 44,000,000. The aggregate value of all farm animals is $8,000,000 more than a year ago, the total for cattle being smaller by about $64,000,000. The horses represent a total valuation of $946,050,000, the mules upward of $75,000,000, cattle $979,000,000, swine $221,000,000 and sheep $89,000,000, a grand aggregate of $2,250,000,000.

Safe Device for Handling a Bull.

A farmer in Rural New Yorker gave recently an illustrated description of a device for holding bulls that has proven convenient, durable and safe. It is simple and any blacksmith can make one. Put it on and let it remain on as long as the bull is being handled. It is not in the way of anything or at any time. It needs no attention. Lead with a rope or staff and hitch in the nose ring or above as you see fit. This farmer had a heavy, stout harness snap put on the end of the chain to hitch in the ring in the nose, and another snap to hitch the ring half way between the horns. Fit a ring on the horns under the nubs. If any bull is too harsh for common brass nubs and tears them off, have a blacksmith make a heavy iron nub with a heavy thread that will stand the racket.

Labels and Outdoor Woodwork.

If wood labels are soaked in a solution of sulphate of iron, dried and then soaked in a strong solution of lime water until the wood is thoroughly saturated, they will last for a long time without rotting. To preserve outdoor woodwork from the effects of the weather, treat it in the following manner: Boil one gallon of coal tar and two and one-half pounds of sulphate of zinc and paint it on while hot.

Onion Notes.

It is probable, says a Pennsylvania correspondent in Orchard and Garden, that the Italian varieties of onions do better south than they do here, as they seem to require a longer season, and do not come to proper maturity here. The most reliable sorts for this section are the Yellow Danvers and Red Wethersfield, by far the greater quantity grown being the former.

STORIES OF MEN.

The Boy Knew Him and Senator Edmunds Knew Him Not.

A young man applied to Senator Edmunds for some money to enable him to go back to his home in Vermont. Being unknown to Mr. Edmunds, the senator addressed him as follows:

"How do I know that you live in Vermont? You might come from Texas, for all I know."

"I can only assure you that I speak the truth, senator. I have no way of proving it. My home is in Vermont."

"Oh, it is, is it?" said the senator, grimly. "Well, I've visited in that place a number of times. I suppose you know everybody there, don't you?"

The boy replied that the people he didn't know were not worth mentioning.

"Well, then," said the senator, "tell me the name of the fat old man who peddles milk about your place."

"He isn't fat and he isn't old," answered the youngster, digging his toe against a Skinny Eccles."

The hottest sort of a smile lit up the Vermont senator's stern features. Turning to his clerk, he said: "Give him some money. There's no doubting the boy's honesty," and then he added with a chuckle, as he turned to re-enter the chamber, "Skinny Eccles! well, well. I haven't thought of him oftener than a dozen times."—Philadelphia Times.

He has the reputation of being given to writing and thinking on paper, and his appearance sometimes is as walks along the avenue is very pensive and absent minded. At one time when he was living at Willard's his friend as he was coming from the senate down by the National hotel.

"Come up and have dinner with me," said Lamar to the gentleman in question, cordially.

The friend accepted the invitation and started to walk up the street with Mr. Lamar. He began the conversation as soon as he arrested in telling about some occurrence at home, but Lamar had fallen into one of his reflective moods, and was not listening to anything the friend said. The space between the National hotel and Willard's was passed over, and, finally arriving on the pavement in front of the latter hotel, Lamar suddenly pulled himself together, and, looking around, he remarked that he had a friend with him. He had not heard a word the gentleman had said, but, turning to him, stretched out his hand and said:

"Well, this is my hotel. I am very much obliged to you for walking up the street with me. Good-by," and turned to go in.

But the man was not so easily shaken. He laughed and said:

"Big pardon, senator; you invited me to dinner, and I am not going to lose it."

"So I did, so I did," cried Lamar quickly, and taking his friend by the arm he went in.—Washington Correspondence Courier-Journal.

Crowding Out at a Small Rate.

"I am usually very good at remembering names," said Senator Davis, of Minnesota, "but I did get stuck once and under the most embarrassing circumstances. I was sitting in my office at St. Paul, when in came a man whom I was delighted to see and who was delighted to see me. We had been raised as boys together, had enlisted in the same company and served through his war together, he being the lieutenant of the company of which I was captain. I knew him as well as my own brother, and as we had not met for many years I was glad to give him a genuine hearty welcome. But for the life of me I couldn't think of his name. He recognized with as all the meaning and I invited him to go to my house to stop. He consented to do so, and as I expected for the first time I commenced to grow very nervous for, of course, I would have to introduce him to my family, and I couldn't ask my old chum and comrade what his name was. Finally I thought of a funny expedient. Getting a pen and a sheet of paper I told him I thought it would be a good idea for us to join in a letter to another of our comrades with whom we were both very intimate during the war. He approved the suggestion and I wrote a couple of pages, telling our friend how pleasant it was to meet again and wishing that he was with us. Then I signed my name and passed the paper over to him. Much to my relief, he signed his full name and I was saved from the impending mortification."—Philadelphia Times.

One of "Nat" Goodwin's Pranks.

"That reminds me of a joke on Nat. I was out with Nat Goodwin," said the tall, board of trade man. "Thirsty, fellow he was, and so was I. We were going down to Kinsley's, and over on Jackson street we passed a thing was quiet, so saw a young couple just ahead of us—going home, probably, from a late afternoon supper.

"If that fellow had any grit in him," said Nat, "I'll make him sort with that girl."

"With this he took me by the arm, and we hurried along and overtook the couple. In passing them Nat gave the young chap a nudge, and then gave a parody at him, said:

"'What are you going to do about it?'

"The young man quickly caught on to Nat, and was going to thrash him, when Nat pulled me by the arm and we both turned and ran.

"'There,' said Nat, 'won't that make him solid with his girl? She thinks he pulled over, and, finally arriving on the pavement in front of the latter hotel, Lamar suddenly pulled himself together, and, looking around, he remembered that he had a friend with him. He had not heard a word the gentleman had said, but, turning to him, stretched out his hand and said:

THE LITTLE PEOPLE.

A Small Boy's Anxiety Not to Know Everything.

A gentleman once saw a boy peeling the bark from one of his lime tree saplings with a hatchet. The gentleman tried to catch the boy, but the latter was too quick for him, so the farmer changed his tactics. "Come here, my little son," he said, in a voice that has wife with counterfeited friendliness, "come here to me a minute. I want to tell you something." The boy came up to the gentleman, "little boys like me don't need to know everything."—Texas Siftings.

The Wiggles of Wakefulness.

Some expressions are all the more notable for having sprung spontaneously into existence without the fostering aid of grammar. Lillian had an uncomfortable way of waking before light, and expecting the family to rise with her at what they considered an unseasonably early hour.

"Lillian, you must lie still and try to sleep," said her mother one morning, when this early bird began to chirp.

"I'll try," said the child, and so she did, but it was to no purpose. In five minutes she was sitting up in bed playing with her pretty fingers among their lands—Ben James S. Brisbin in New York Tribune.

Naval Station in the West Indies.

Professor Stephen O. Williams is of the opinion that the United States should establish a naval station in the West Indies. The United States does not own a foot of ground in the whole stretch of country between Cape Horn and Florida, and in case of war would be at great disadvantage. Professor Williams, from careful observation, has picked out the West Indies as the most suitable place for such a station. Cuba would be too great a load to shoulder, and Haiti and Santo Domingo, because of its size and the unpowerable character of its inhabitants. But there is an island, Professor Williams thinks, which must have been intended for the United States to use for naval reserve purposes. That is St. Thomas.

St. Th nas could not probably be purchased from Denmark without taking also the islands of Santa Cruz and St. Jan. The whole would cost about $3,000,000. The population of the group is about 35,000. In case of a canal being completed, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific, the value of St. Thomas would be increased. England has Jamaica, and France and Spain both have commanding situations. With St. Thomas in its possession, the United States, Professor Williams thinks, would be on an equal footing with the European powers. As Denmark is supposed to be somewhat in need of money, and desirous of selling her West Indian possessions, it is suggested that the United States should step to the front and not let the golden opportunity slip by.—Demorest's Monthly.

Washington's Log Cabin.

Most biographers have given Indiana in their lives of Washington fail to mention an interesting relic of his youth, which might also be called a landmark in America's history. It is the log cabin home to which Washington, at 16 years of age, and George William Fairfax built and occupied while they were laying out Shenandoah valley now embraced in Clark county.

At that time the land upon which she building stood belonged to Lord Fairfax, but was afterward owned by Col. Daniel Morgan.

The Way of the Wise.

"It is greatly to be regretted," was remarked in the hearing of an Illinois farmer, "that farmers' boys do not stick to the farm. It seems as if scarcely any of them do."

"Oh, I dunno," said the farmer. "I've raised eight boys and they're all farmers yept one."

"Is that so? Only one of them caught by the glitter of the city, eh?"

"Yes, that's all. Four Job would go, spite of all I could do—run away to the city when he was 12, and we ain't never seen him since, nothin' to have come over twenty year. Pat I dunno but it's all right; he hadn't no likin' for farm work, nor wouldn't take no interest in it. He jest hankered after the hosses on the farm and didn't know enough about farm work to drive a team to water."

"Yes, I think it was better that he should have taken the hosses, if he wanted bad no taste for it. Is he in the mercantile business?"

"Oh, no, nothin' like that. He's jedged the farmer; 'no,' for the last ten years Job has been editor of an agricultural paper. He writes most all of the 'Hints to Farmers,' 'How to Do Farm Work,' 'Stick to the Farm, Boys,' and such things."—Fred Carrath in Chicago Tribune.

DOLLIE'S CREEK, BLACKBURN'S ARMY.

Personal allusions to myself I will pass by with but one single observation, and that is, exercise of this country in the terms that he has seen fit to employ in a deliberately prepared speech, and coined effort, he (Ingalls) has revealed the presence of a delicately prepared and well-ventilated, but, I should say, not unlike some other, which, if I concede that it is not entitled to be called a cow, yet, in my judgment, is not far from being the same. When the senator from Kansas undertakes to speak of the chief executive of the United States after such a fashion as to do violence to the office, I do not wonder that he should be the unparalleled coward that he has proven himself to be. BADEAU AND THE GRANTS.

Col. Fred Publishes a Long Reply to the General's Address.

COL. F. D. GRANT makes public a long statement in reply to Gen. Adam Badeau's address to the American people upon the controversy which has arisen between Gen. Badeau and the family of the late Gen. U. S. Grant as to the services rendered by Gen. Badeau in connection with the writing of the "Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant."

Colonel Grant says that it was with reluctance that he took up the matter for discussion, feeling that it was not his place to correct the history of the case to outsiders. Under the circumstances, however, he felt that the ground which has already been covered by Gen. Badeau's address, and the facts which have been given to correct the errors contained therein by himself and the lawyers in the case, clearly in the negotiations with a view to the settlement of the case without resort to the courts, to personal denunciation of General Badeau, and he feels that it is due to the memory of his father and love ones of a much less important character than Badeau claims that they were. Colonel Grant then reviews the relations of Gen. Badeau was a source of grief and anguish to his father, and he feels that it was the knowledge that the letters of his father, written in his sleep, days before my father's death, at a time when he was personally weak and when the memory of Gen. Badeau's letter of May 2 made his mental anguish greater than that of the body.

THE ROCK ISLAND'S ANSWER

It Charges the "Q" with Trying to Force All Western Roads Into a Trust.

THE answer of the Rock Island to the bill filed by the Burlington company in Judge Grosham's court to compel the former to haul Burlington freight and cars is highly sensational in character, says a Chicago special.

The charge made by the Rock Island is, in substance, that prior to the trouble with the Burlington the latter had been working in harmony and entered into a contract for the pooling of freight rates with the purpose of forcing all the competing lines great and small, to form a gigantic railway trust, to be managed by three men vested with absolute power to make and alter rates and divide the earnings of the lines entered into the combination. It is also charged that the Burlington foresaw and made use of the disaffection among its own employes for the purpose of covering the other roads into joining the trust, and that it was for the purpose of this latter purpose, attempted to induce the Rock Island trouble with its own employes and firemen. The Burlington officials deny these allegations and characterize them as baseless and absurd.

The Peace of Europe.

THE situation between the Central allies and Russia remains the same. The visit of the King of Roumania to Vienna resulted in a definite treaty under which Austria pledges to resist any violation of Roumanian territory. Leading Roumanian army officers will be replaced by German and Austrian officers. The Emperor's decree of March 21, authorizing Crown Prince Wilhelm to represent him in the transaction of state business, is now recognized as tantamount to the creation of a co-regency. Besides this decree another exists giving to the Prince fuller powers in his capacity as the Emperor's growing worse.

The German Emperor Improving.

A BERLIN dispatch says that "a wooden walk is being constructed in the park at Charlottenburg to enable Emperor Frederick to take outdoor exercise. Dr. Bergmann visits the Emperor every Sunday in order to reassure Germans who are opposed to Dr. Mackenzie. Dr. Mackenzie hopes to be able to pay a short visit to his London patients in a week or two. The Emperor has countermanded the order for the spring review of the guards."

Base-Ball in Australia.

ARRANGEMENTS are in progress for taking a company of at least twenty of the leading ballplayers of America to Australia. Mr. A. G. Spalding, the President of the Chicago Base-Ball Club, is at the head of the undertaking, and will accompany the party. Under his direction the great cities of the antipodes will be afforded a fine exhibition of the game of American base-ball, compared with which cricket is dull and lifeless sport.

The Burlington Road's Trouble.

A CHICAGO dispatch of Monday says: "Not a wheel of a freight car turned in the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy yards yesterday. For the second time within a month the freight business of this road is temporarily paralyzed, this time by the action of the switchmen."

A JUNIATA at Clinton, Iowa, ordered twelve barrels of beer shipped, but this was found in a wholesale notice, in violation of the prohibition law.

A NEW scheme to pipe oil to Toledo, Ohio, and there refine it, has been floated by a syndicate that is determined to compete with the Standard Oil Company.

EMPLOYERS of Chinese labor in California having resolved the conditions that the wages demanded by the Chinese are extortionate, have sent agents to the South to engage negroes to take the place of the Mongolians. The first consignment of negro laborers passed through St. Louis en route to the coast last week.

THE EASTERN STATES.

The purchase of the Mail and Express, the leading Republican afternoon paper of New York City, by Elliott F. Shepard, a son-in-law of the late William H. Vanderbilt, is construed as favorable to the interests of Chauncey M. Depew as a candidate for the Presidential nomination. The paper was bought by Cyrus W. Field, and the price paid is understood to have been $350,000.

THE WESTERN STATES.

The Insurance Commissioners of Missouri are brought and agreed the Ancient Order of United Workmen, which has refused to comply with the law, on the ground that it is not an insurance company.

The United States Supreme Court has rendered a decision in the case of Bowman Bros. vs. The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, which involves the validity of a statute of Iowa forbidding a railroad company to bring intoxicating liquor into the state, unless such company has been furnished with a certificate from the County Auditor of the county to which the liquor is to be transported, showing that the consignee is legally authorized to sell it. The court holds that the power to regulate or forbid the sale of a commodity after it has been brought into the State, does not carry with it the right and power to prevent its introduction by transportation from another State. The action of the Iowa statute of April 5, 1886, which prohibits railroad companies from bringing liquor into the State, is therefore declared to be invalid, and the judgment of the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois is reversed, the Chief Justice, Justices Gray and Harlan dissenting. A Des Moines dispatch says that Prohibitionists at the Iowa capital think the decision will hurt their cause but little, while the liquor dealers are highly elated, and claim that it breaks down Prohibition.

EX-SENATOR TABOR, of Denver, owner of the Vulture Mine, near Phenix, Arizona, has received information that two of his messengers from the mine were murdered near Nugger Wells and robbed of $7,000 in bullion. He offers a reward of $1,000 for the arrest of the murderers and $1,000 for the recovery of the bullion.

A Omaha special says: "There has not been such a flurry for several years as is now observable among the bankers and jobbers of wholesale shoving of counterfeit $5 silver certificates during the last three days. The bunco-steerers are working the new counterfeits."

THE Commercial National Bank of Dubuque, Iowa, has suspended payment.

In the tally-sheet forgery case at Columbus Junction, Iowa, the jury disagreed after being out two days, and was discharged. The ballot had stood six to two for conviction.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

At Frankfort, Ky., on Tuesday, Governor Buckner suspended Treasurer of State James W. Tate. Tate is charged with defalcation in his office, and has fled the State. The defaulting official has been Treasurer for twenty-one years. He was considered the soul of honor, and the news will produce a tremendous sensation throughout the whole. It is thought Tate's shortage will amount to between $200,000 and $300,000. Stock speculations seem to run back eleven years.

A REWARD of $5,000 has been offered for the arrest of Tate, the defaulting Kentucky treasurer. His shortage is between $180,000 and $300,000.

A TERRIBLE wind-storm visited Georgia and East Tennessee Wednesday night, causing immense destruction to property and much loss of life. A Nashville dispatch says:

"The storm seems to have formed in the vicinity of Calhoun, Ga., and pursued a northeast course through Polk county, Tenn., and into and around East Tenessee, bounding across the Chilhowee mountains, and was next heard from near Lenoire, Tenn., on the East Tennessee road, eighty miles northeast of Chattanooga, at about 7 o'clock. At Lenoire, Joe Edmonds, an employe of the road, was killed, thirty minutes. The path of the tornado from Calhoun to Lenoire was through a section remote from railroads and telegraph lines and the accounts are very meagre. Reports say that houses have been blown down, and that many persons have been ground completely of grass, and a forest of timber was strewn as with a great scythe. The cyclone had a rotary motion, leaving a scene of desolation and destruction in its path. Large trees were twisted from their brush and others were torn up by the roots.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

The great event at the national capital on Monday was the decision by the Supreme Court of the telephone cases, which has been so long in coming and has been the source of much anxiety, controversy, and speculation.

The number of people directly interested in this decision, including the stockholders in the various corporations involved, says a Washington special, was probably greater than in any case that has been decided for many years, and the value of the entire telephone property involved, estimated by the parties interested, is the greatest. The full points were reserved, however, as was expected by almost everybody here, for the benefit of the Bell and other companies, in fact, it was a fight of all the telephone companies against one. The decision rendered in the court-room was comparatively large, and the opinion, written and read by Justice Blatchford, although the longest that has been attempted to be read for years, and occupying the entire session of the court, was not intelligible to the interested in the case generally until after the adjournment. This decision settles the entire telephone business of the country, and Justice Blatchford said, that Bell was the original inventor of the telephone, and that patents may be transmitted over long lines, and that the patent of Bell is good and free to adopt the discovery to the wants of his fellow-men, and is entitled to the full value of the invention.

Two hundred and twenty-five cases have been lawyers in the United States have been engaged in the telephone cases, ex-Senator Edmunds, ex-Attorney-General Dickinson, former Postmaster-General Dickinson, Robert G. Ingersoll, and other eminent counsel appeared, and it is estimated that several million dollars have been expended in the prosecution of the cases. The Bell company will now have its own way, and the think that if that company, which has fluctuated widely on account of the contest in litigation, will have a fixed value until the expiration of the patents, which will be shortened in the case for the benefit of the public. The decision was rendered by a large interest in the Bell Company, and Justice Lamar became ill and not hear the argument. The decision was announced by Chief Justice Waite, but was read by Justice Blatchford, owing to the former's indisposition.

LYNCH a storm at Washington lightning struck the Capitol, the flash being especially vivid in the Senate Chamber. All the occupants of the Supreme Court-room—judges, lawyers, and suitors—jumped to their feet, but quickly resumed their seats, thinking balls of blue fire were not cool playing about the corridor, and some members thought the roof was about to tumble. A home could was knocked down, and an engineer in the basement was prostrated.

A BILL is to be reported by the House Committee on Revision of the Laws, at Washington, proving for an amendment to the Constitution which the Senators will be asked by a direct resolution to submit to the Legislatures. A member of the committee is quoted as saying:

We have agreed upon this report only after a careful and painstaking investigation of the matter by the people. It proposes a change in the mode of voting for President and Vice-President, so as to give to the representative character of a majority of the States. The present system under which the senate has long rested on account of the unequitable manner in which states have been used in making up electoral colleges, is not satisfactory to the people, and the committee of a second vice-President, but it does not seem to be in response to any popular demand.

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

THE Iowa Republican Convention met at Des Moines March 21. J. P. Dolliver was chosen temporary Chairman, and, owing to the illness of Gov. Larrabee, was continued permanent Chairman. Congressman Farwell H. Henderson was, by acclamation, selected a Delegate-at-large to the National Convention, the balloting for the other three delegates resulting in the election of J. S. Clarke, George D. Perkins, and J. P. Dolliver. The resolutions set forth the qualifications and attainments of Senator William B. Allison, and recommend him as the fit candidate for the Presidency. These were adopted with cheers; Allison songs were sung, the convention joining in the chorus, and an Allison brigade was formed to go to Chicago in June.

WITHIN a week or ten days a letter from Chauncey M. Depew is to be published stating that he will not accept for the Republican nomination for President, says an Albany (N. Y.), special. The letter will be sufficiently explicit to check all talk of Mr. Depew as a candidate. Mr. Depew has never encouraged the mention of his name in association with the nomination, and has never had an idea of running for the office. The mention of his name has been gratifying to him as a man, who is a little proud of the versatility of his talents. His views on the subject have never been a secret to his personal friends and acquaintances.

THE FOREIGN BUDGET.

THE earthquake shocks in Yunnan China, continued three weeks, destroying several towns and causing great damage to shipping. At Kien-Shin 4,000 persons were killed.

A GAS explosion set fire to a crowded theater in Vienna, Austria, while a play was in progress, and the building was consumed. Upwards of a hundred persons lost their lives.

SENATOR ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, reported back the House bill to reduce the revenue from internal taxation, on March 30. Six pages contain binding bill, which proposes to repeal all taxes on tobacco, small issue in exchange for 4-per-cent. bonds an equal amount of 4-per-cent. bonds issued in 1907, and that in consideration of the reduction of revenue the banks be allowed to tax bankers' capital at the rate of one-half of one per cent. on the present worth of the difference in the circulation of the banks, which the present worth interest should be computed at not less than 4 per cent. The bill also provides for the redemption of the 4-per-cent. bonds shall be paid at the option of the government at any time after the expiration of twenty years. The bill also provides that the surplus in the treasury be used to pay the national debt, and if continued in excess of the amount required for the public purposes, it shall be applied to the payment of the bonds of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase the bonds at the rate of not exceeding $100 for the principal and accrued interest thereon, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purchase of said bonds.

Keep the Stables Light.

Dark stables are an accumulation, and should be avoided. Light is not so necessary to sanitary comfort, either in winter or summer, to secure health. If a horse's eyes are enlarged—the pupil of the eye is made to contract by light, and also a harness put on to him and suddenly brought out into the light, the sudden light, which contracts the pupil so suddenly is so intense excites pain. In the evening in this very foolish and injudicious manner we bring our horses out of the dark, and they become impaired, and if continued long enough, they will become blind. I see how very painful it is to face a bright light, and I know that if I should go out of a dark room day night for a short time, till my eyes became accustomed to the darkness, then drop suddenly into some well-lighted room, I would be so sorely stricken, to see for a few moments in the sudden light that my eyeballs would burn to the point of pain, and I know that if I should put my horse repeatedly into a dark place, and then, when his eyes have dilated, put a light in his face, the pupil of his eye would become impaired, and if continued long enough, he would become blind. I see how very painful it is to face a bright light, and I know that if I should go out of a dark room day night for a short time, till my eyes became accustomed to the darkness, then drop suddenly into some well-lighted room, I would be so sorely stricken, to see for a few moments in the sudden light that my eyeballs would burn to the point of pain, and I know that if I should put my horse repeatedly into a dark place, and then, when his eyes have dilated, put a light in his face, the pupil of his eye would become impaired, and if continued long enough, he would become blind. The one and only right way is to have light stables, and then retire the light when the horse is in them. Let the light shine on the horse's eyes, and let the horse see the light. Light is the great purifier, and the great preservative of health. Light is the great purifier, and the great preservative of health. Light is the great purifier, and the great preservative of health

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids,

WEDNESDAY, MAY, 10TH, 1888,

At 10 o'clock noon,

For the purpose of electing delegates to the Democratic National Convention, called to meet at St. Louis, Missouri, June 5, 1888, the selection of a State Central Committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

The convention will elect four delegates and four alternates at large, twenty-two district delegates from each congressional district and twenty-two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, from each congressional district, and a chairman at large.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the county they represent.

The delegates from each Congressional District will meet in caucus at ten o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: Two district delegates, two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, one vice-president of the convention, and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

All voters who are in accord with the present Democratic administration in its efforts to reduce taxation to the legitimate wants of the national government, economically administered, are invited to participate in the selection of delegates to this convention.

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.
JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four (4) delegates.

We are in receipt of the fifth annual report of the bureau of labor and industrial statistics from A. H. Heath commissioner of labor.

It is hinted that upon the death of the Queen of England the Prince of Wales may be elected president of the new empire.

The friends of Gen. Hancock, who have been active in their efforts to raise sufficient money to purchase a house in Washington for Mrs. Hancock, have met with complete success.

The executive committee of the Minnesota Farmers' alliance comprising members of both political parties in session at St. Paul, March 26, adopted resolutions endorsing President Cleveland's views on the tariff issue, denouncing the protective tariff and calling for its immediate repeal on all raw material and the necessaries of life.

The political complexion of the Tribune, Lansing's new daily, can readily be gathered from the following paragraphs: That long-tailed rodent, Godfrey, says he don't care a d——n for the republican party. * * * Whitelaw Reid, of the N. Y. Tribune, ran a "rat" sheet and James G. Blaine was defeated for the presidency of the United States.

The great state of Texas is mutatis mutandis, in almost as bad a fix as the great United States. It has $1,000,000 surplus in its treasury, and the governor is about to call an extra session of the legislature to determine what shall be done with it. How would it do to lend it to the republican managers who have bankrupted the state treasury of Ohio?—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Texas has now been a total of $2,275,000 recommended by the committees of the two houses for expenditure upon Michigan public buildings and the present status of the several bills is as follows: Detroit, favorably reported by senate committee at $1,500,000; Bay City, passed house at $150,000, and favorably reported in the senate at $200,000; Saginaw, favorably reported in the house at $125,000; Lansing, same, at $100,000; Kalamazoo and Jackson at $75,000 each, and Grand Haven at $50,000. The Muskegon bill is expected to be heard from this week.

The tariff discussion between Judge J. G. Ramsdall, of Traverse City, and Rev. A. Walkley, of Manistee, was concluded last Thursday night before an audience of about 1,000 people. Mr. Walkley opened with a half-hour's speech and reviewed the talk of an hour made by the Judge the previous evening. The position of the Judge that free trade would destroy our factories and turn us into an agricultural country, was handled in a masterly way that drew round after round of applause from the audience. He reviewed the assertion of the Judge about the so-called bad effects of the low tariff of 1850-60, and after showing by census figures that the interval referred to was the most prosperous one in an increase of national wealth, he turned the Judge's point on him by charging him with now desiring to lower the present tariff so as to nearer approach that much abused tariff of 1850-60. Mr. Walkley's half hour was packed with just such ringing points—every one of which fell like a sledge hammer on the protection advocate. Mr. Walkley's reply was loudly applauded, and the free traders are heartily elated over the result.

Morrison R. Waite was the seventh chief justice of the supreme court the United States. John Jay, the first one, was appointed by George Washington in 1789. He resigned in 1795, and John Rutledge was appointed, but presided over only one term of the court, the senate not confirming his appointment. Oliver Ellsworth was then chosen and served until 1800, when he resigned. He was the third chief justice named by "the Father of his Country." John Marshall was appointed by President John Adams, in 1801, and served until his death in 1835—a period of thirty-four years. Next came Roger B. Taney, who was appointed by Andrew Jackson. He died in 1864. Salmon P. Chase, was appointed by Lincoln in that year, and Waite received his appointment from Grant in 1874.

People of Manistique are often told their duty about contributing money for the purpose of educating the heathen; but very little is ever said about getting the Indian children of Schoolcraft county into schools.—Manistique Pioneer.

The pine barren experimental farm, which the state board of agriculture is starting, has been located a mile from Grayling. If the pine barrens can be made half as rich as the pine barons, it will be a great thing for Michigan.—Frankfort Express.

Some of the leading citizens of Harbor Springs and Cross Village are making a strong effort to secure a change of the survey made for the Charlevoix railroad, so that it will pass through Harbor Springs and Cross Village.—Independent-Democrat.

The Michigan state agricultural college has furnished the president for agricultural colleges of Kansas, Colorado and Dakota, and professors for similar institutions in seventeen different states of the union, besides contributing educators in specialties for Japan.

The propellor City of Grand Rapids, of Traverse City & Mackinac line, will be given speed wheel this season. Her machinery has been thoroughly overhauled and other repairs made at total expense of nearly $3,000. She will run same as last season, touching at Northport, Charlevoix, Petoskey and Harbor Springs.—Elk Rapids Progress.

C. W. Caskey begins carrying the Cross Village and St. James mail Monday on his steamboat contract. We understand the schedule will be Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, the same as last year. The mail will go overland to Cross Village, and overice to St. James until the opening of navigation.—Independent Democrat.

After receiving offers of bonus from nearly every large city in southern Michigan, the Gale Plow Works have decided to stay at Albion. It is not clear just how much they are to get, but they have bought a farm of about 200 acres, will erect new buildings, enlarge the work's capacity, and and do just what the newspapers said they would—stay in Albion.

The Morning Tribune is the name of a daily paper just published at Lansing, by the Lansing Typographical Union, and the first number was issued last Monday morning. The necessity for this paper seems to to have grown out of the late trouble in the state printing office. The Tribune starts out with a good appearance and we hope it may prove a success to its projectors.

In the river and harbor bill which the committee have agreed upon, the "Soo" is down for a million dollars, and Hay Lake channel for $500,000. The other appropriations for Michigan are as follows: Saginaw river, $65,000; Clinton river, $10,000; Black river, $10,000; Rouge river, $10,000; Ludington, $60,000; Grand Marais, $50,000; Grand Haven, $25,000; Marquette, $25,000; Muskegon, $45,000; Sand Beach, $70,000; Charlevoix, $12,500; Cheboygan, $15,000; Frankfort $8,000; Manistee, $10,000; Monroe, $5,500; Ontonagon, $12,500; Pentwater, $8,000; Portage Lake, $10,000; St. Joseph, $10,000; Saugatuck, $5,000; South Haven, $10,000; White River, $10,000; Black Lake, $5,000; St. Joseph river, $2,500; Menominee, $9,000; Au Sable, $4,800; Thunder Bay, $4,500. This aggregates $2,550,000, or one-ninth of the total appropriation. Congressman Fisher, who is on the committee, has got in some big work for Michigan, and if the items are not cut down the "Soo" folks will feel called upon to get up another banquet.

A. T. Washburne & Co. have placed three convenient cash-carriers in their store, which will save many steps and much time,—an item of considerable importance on busy days.

While the people are wading around in mud in southern Michigan we have snow right over the tops of our front gates. Our gardens will be planted, however, about as soon as theirs. When our snow once starts it does not stand upon the order of its going but goes with a right smart git.—Enterprise.

Capt. Huime is thoroughly rebuilding the schooner Peoria. From the water line planking up she is entirely new, with new timbers and stays. Capt. Joseph Swails has charge of the work. While Capt. Swails has no ship yard he has facilities for ship building and is kept busy all winter.

Last Saturday was the 41st anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Barnard Burns. In the evening they were very agreeably surprised, when thirty-one of their children, grand-children and great grand-children gathered around them and seemed to take complete possession of the premises. It is needless to say that this was one of the most enjoyable events of their married life. Mr. and Mrs. Burns were the recipients of many handsome and valuable gifts. Nineteen of their lineage were unable to be present.

Mrs. W. P. Brown yesterday celebrated her fifty-sixth birthday, and last evening about thirty intimate friends gathered in their parlors, and participated in a general good time. Quite a number of mementoes were received by Mrs. Brown.

At the election Monday Henry Cunningham was chosen overseer of the highway in district number one and A. B. Upright in district number two. Horace Hull and Joseph Pappin were elected pound masters. The highway tax was fixed at ½ of one per cent, the contingent fund at $1000, the library fund at $200, and the bridge fund at $800.

In another column will be found an advertisement of J. Milo Eaton's abstracts of title, which have been completed, and are now in good shape for a prompt response to all who want to know the condition of their title. Mr. Eaton's long acquaintance with the real estate business of this county gives him an excellent advantage in this matter.

When the steamer Joseph Gordon comes out this spring it will be a new boat. She is now at Campbell's yard being rebuilt, and will be lengthened twelve feet and raised two feet, a commodious cabin will be built aft, but forward will be left open, which will fit her for the freight trade as well as for passengers. Capt. Guard is superintending the work personally.

The prize gold pen offered for the greatest improvement in penmanship in the fifth department grammar grades during the last half of the winter term, was won by Bertie Brown, of the eighth grade. The prize was offered by one of our citizens and the award was made by a committee composed of Miss Nelson and Mrs. Upright. The contest was so close that the ladies named called in a third party to decide between two specimens which were very nearly alike in merit.

An Open Letter.

A. T. Washburne & Co. are in receipt of a letter from their Mr. Gow, who is in New York, of which the following is an extract: "I have been very busy for the past week making my selections of staple and fancy dry goods from the superb stocks which the wholesale houses carry in this great metropolis of the east. I think New York is the finest dry goods market in the world, and I have been in London and Paris, which are next best. I will be through next week. Tell your customers and the public of Charlevoix that it is our purpose to give them this year the very latest fashions and the choicest goods that can be procured in this country at the price; and they will be brought, as it were, to their doors as cheap as if they had bought them in Chicago or Detroit."

Historical Society

The closing meeting of the historical society was held last Friday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Wood. The attendance was large, the parlors being well filled. Music seemed to be the prevailing feature, there being seven selections on the program. Two instrumental duets, one by Maggie Enos and Maggie Green, and one by Mrs. Kane and Miss Cochran. Vocal solos by Mrs. Mayne, Mills Kanagy and R. W. Kane, and a vocal duet by Mrs. Kane and Mayne. The readings by Misses Phila and Mary Wood were well rendered. These sisters possess elocutionary talents decidedly gratifying, and promise well for the future. The origin of the society, and its subsequent history written in verse was rendered by A. T. Washburne. Some of the personal hits were apt. Mr. Washburne expected to accompany his paper with charcoal caricatures but had not the time to prepare them. He promises them, however, next winter with a revision of the paper During intermission the society was agreeably surprised by being served with ice cream and cake. At the close of the business session a vote of thanks was given Mrs. Wood for so pleasantly entertaining the society. Following this a vote of thanks was tendered to the president, secretary, and the executive committee for their faithful and efficient work for the society during the winter. President Green then asked that the vice president be accorded the same recognition which seemed to be a signal, as a member facetiously remarked, to turn the meeting into a mutual admiration society, and a vote of thanks was tendered to the first and second vice presidents, the treasurer, and finally to all who had attended during the winter, not forgetting Mrs. Dougherty and Mrs. Ingalls, of Elk Rapids, who were present. With much mirth and good will the society adjourned to meet on the first Tuesday in October next.

Railroad Prospects Encouraging.

In a conversation with Mr. R. M. Cherrie, president of the D., C. & E. R. R. Co., since his last visit to New York, he gave assurances that all the negotiations were progressing as favorably as could be expected, and that there was no possible doubt about the early completion of the road. He said: "The road is just as sure to be built as that night follows day, but of course I cannot now state what day the work of grading and track-laying will begin." Further statements indicated the belief that the road could be completed ready to operate before the close of the summer. Mr. Cherrie's own personal interests are sufficient to induce him to push the matter as fast as possible, for when the road is completed it will not be necessary for him to pile up so much ore before the close of navigation, it will not be necessary to hold the product till the opening of navigation in the spring, and the furnace can be made to run the entire year if he so desires. With him as with all other retail merchants in Charlevoix, it will not be necessary to carry such large stocks over winter to save cartage. For these and other reasons, we think Mr. Cherrie is as much interested in the early completion of the road as anyone else can be, and that his assurances that everything is progressing as fast as possible, can be relied on as the facts and truth of the matter. While the other officers of the road share in the same or similar expressions, we all have reason to feel encouraged, and can safely prepare for the good times so near at hand.

The Cows to Run at Large.

At the township meeting last Monday, it was decided by a vote of 134 to 37 to allow milch cows to run at large from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m., from April 15 to November 15, this year. The most effective argument used to accomplish this was that the commons adjacent to the village could not be used for pasturage until the owners fenced them, and that there is not sufficient pasturage ready to receive the cattle as soon as grass starts, and as a consequence the owners would be compelled to keep their cows stabled at a loss. It was generally admitted, however, that the principle of keeping cattle out of the street is right,—which gives us reason to believe that if owners of commons will enclose them with substantial fences, it will not only give these owners a good money rent, but make it possible to carry the issue another year.

CHILDREN FOR THE BALLET.

Drilling Young Dancers' Limbs for the Footlight Performance.

The Little Girls Class—An Incessant Daily Labor—Examination Days.

The Stage Rehearsals—Trained Feet and Uneducated Brains.

Paris is, of course, the nerve center of the ballet, writes Theodore Childs, in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Children begin training for the ballet when 7 or 8 years of age. Mme. Theodore, the professor of the opera, first examines the candidate, and then she passes on to the doctor, who in turn his examines and pronounces her to be fit or unfit for the profession. The verdict being favorable, the child henceforward belongs to the opera; if she works hard she will become a passable danseuse in about ten or twelve years. The first stage is the little girl's class, in classe des petites. Winter and summer, day after day, every morning at 10 o'clock, Mme. Theodore awaits her pupils, who come accompanied by their mothers, each one carrying a little bag that contains a regular Noah's ark full of miscellaneous objects necessary for the studies or the happiness of a pupil of the petite classe, such as stockings, dancing shoes, a box of poudre de riz, a comb, a button-hook, some bread, a bottle of wine and water, some cold veal, hard-boiled eggs, sardines, apples, and what not.

Let us look at the room: It is a large, bare room, with bars fixed parallel to the walls on three sides, and a sloping floor, to accustom the pupil to the sloping stage of the theater. Along the free wall are benches, and two cane-seated chairs accommodate the professor and her assistant, who plays a fiddle, or sometimes a sort of harmonium. The girls, of whom the oldest is perhaps 15, wear low-necked corsages, leaving their arms bare, white muslin skirts, broad sashes of blue or red ribbon, pink tights, and gray canvas shoes. They are a lean, scraggy lot, not lovely to look upon individually, but full of good-humor and vivacity, for all these little people are conscious of the glory of belonging to the opera, and they adore that grand abstraction, which is at once an art, a career, and an institution, namely le danse.

"Allons, mesdemoiselles, a vos places," cries the Professor, and the girls run to the bars, and the fiddle gives the word of command just as the bugle calls direct the soldier. There is no melody, but simply a series of andante, allegro, pizzicato and trill movements, each followed by a tremolo, so that the musical part of the solo, so that the musical part of the sounds suggest the confusion of the tuning of an or bestra. But the dancers understand that such and such notes indicate such and such a posture or step of the bar, which must be held as long as the Professor keeps up the tremolo; other notes followed by a tremolo indicate another posture. Such are the general exercises, the object of which is to dislocate the dancers, namely, to develope, sur le barre, the developpe, a la quatrieme devant, the grand developpe a la barre, the petite battements a terre and the pointes, gymnastic exercises that can better be understood from M. Paul Hennequin's sketches than from verbal description. And at every moment during the lesson the Professor interspersed her remarks with the words, "Smile! Won't you smile?" To the mind of the most difficult and torturing dislocations the ballet girl must smile, and the art of smiling has to be learned just like a step or developpe.

DEVELOPPE A LA QUATRIEME DEVANT.

After half an hour of these general exercises at the bar there comes a real, and the little girls begin once more to chatter and flutter. Then follows the adage, or second part of the lesson, which consists of an ensemble and composed steps. The dancers take place in the middle of the room in rows; Mme. Theodore holds up her skirts and indicates the step, and the little ones hop a to hound, whirl, pirouette, from groups by twos, smile in unison, while the fiddle scrapes out tunes and the Professor cries in strange terms to do this and that.

The experience of almost all observers that have had the privilege of seeing the dancing class at work is the same. At first you feel inclined to laugh. Almost all these children are ugly and common-looking. The visitor remarks their turn-up noses, their slender stature, their spindle legs. But the moment the group is formed for the ensemble, the moment the Professor gives the word of command, all that is vulgar vanishes; the discipline of the movements communicates to the whole quadrille a certain air of nobleness and majesty; the result is something poetic, rhythmic, harmonious and unexpected.

At intervals there are concerts of rest, but the seasons pupils do not rest; they run to the bar and work their knees and loins, multiplying their efforts to gain the suppleness and lightness that the public often seem to regard as natural and innate.

The third part of the lesson is the variation. The girls gather in a group around the Professor, who, with her fingers, dictates the steps that are to be executed, one finger of each hand representing the two legs of the dancer. Suddenly the fiddle stops. There is a rest, and then the girls go through another course of dislocation at the bar, and then, with their sweetest smiles, they salute first to the right and then to the left, as if thanking an idolizing public for a deserved ovation. Then, "Au revoir, Mme. Theodore." In a second the class-room is empty; the little girls, panting and worn out, don their patty robes of poverty and return under their mothers' wings to their homes.

Such is in outline a sketch of the daily work of the petite classe and of the apprentice dancer in the first stage of the career. The higher the dancer mounts the greater are her labors and fatigues. In the upper class, the class des grandes, the dancer, in addition to the fatigue of the daily lessons, which are the same for all, has to dance at the opera at night, or at least to take part in the processions and groups, and, of course, to work in rehearsals. On representation nights the dancer must be at the opera at 8 o'clock; in the morning her lessons begin at 9:30 or 10; in the afternoon she is rarely free before 6 o'clock; so that it may be easily imagined that she has not much time left for getting into mischief. And yet many of them do get into all sorts of mischief, and in spite of all the coquette, form groups by twos, smile in unison, while the fiddle scrapes out tunes and the Professor cries in strange terms to do this and that.

"SMILE! SMILE—WON'T YOU SMILE?"

physical torture that they constantly undergo the young dancers seem always happy and chatty.

So then for the work of the grande classe we shall not need to go into the details of it. The biz girls, like the little girls, all come to the opera with bags in which you will invariably find, among other things, a piece of cold veal and a pack of cards for the purpose of fortune telling. Like the little girls, the big ones work at the bar, execute at the word of command various steps, such as jetes, balances, pirouettes, gargouilles, entrechats, fouettes, ronds de jambes, assemblies, pointes, pareours, petits temps. Like the little ones, too, they learn variations on their fingers. However great a dancer may be, she must go through her lesson; not even a Taglioni is exempt from the torture of the bar; nay, more, above all a Taglioni can not escape it, for a danseuse must always remain in training. A week's rest for a dancer implies a month's extra hard training to recover her lithe ness and agility.

The examinations are naturally great days in the existence of the aspiring ballet girls. A stage rehearsal of a ballet is less ceremonious than an examination. The dancers wear flannel or pique corsages, low necked and without sleeves, drawers coming down to the knees, long stockings, tarlatan skirts, and dirty old dancing shoes, both examinations and rehearsals are long, tiresome, and exhausting.

Having now seen something of the dancers in training and in the undress, let us take a glimpse of a ballet as seen at night from behind the scenes. But before looking at the dancers on the stage, let us pay a discreet visit to a dressing-room. At the opera the divertissements and ballets rarely begin before 10, but the dancer must be at the theater at 8 o'clock in order to prepare her person. The dressing-rooms of the opera are airy and commodious, abundantly provided with gas, hot and cold water, looking glasses and other civilized conveniences. After passing through the hands of her coiffeur, the dancer performs one of the most important operations in her toilet, namely, her make-up, or mastic, to use the slang term. The danseuse who is about to fare son mastic sits before her looking-glass, and over face, arms, neck, shoulders and bosom she spreads a coat of liquid white, which dries and forms a sort of varnish. In plain words, she, as it were, kalsomines herself. The first coat she greases with a little cold cream, and perfumes it with a dash of poudre de riz. Then she touches upon her cheeks with vermilion; heightens the red of her lips with carmine; magnifies the contour of the eyes with kohl; paints her eyebrows with Indian ink; picks out a few veins and the mastic is complete. This operation requires at least half an hour. Next the dancer draws on her silk tights and next she dons her underskirt; then follow the corsage, the dancing. I speak, of course, of the real dancers, and not of the mere figurantes and marcheuses.

BEN BUTLER.

He Writes a Remarkable Letter to Capt. W. P. Black, of Chicago.

In Which He Refers to the Execution of the Anarchists as a Judicial Murder.

(Chicago special.)

The following letter from Gen. B. F. Butler to Capt. W. P. Black is given to the public through the columns of the local press:

"I am very much obliged to you for your letter, and I am also thankful for the court and your argument to the jury in the case of Spies and others, which I have read from the time to time as the "exercises" came.

"Our personal acquaintance under the most unpleasant circumstances—the most unsuccessful advocacy of life for men who were unfairly convicted and unjustly sentenced—has given me an insight into your position which I should not have had if I had not been in labor myself, at least on my side.

"I had not believed it possible that palpable judicial murders could again be done in our country. They once did in which we have been ashamed of them ever since. But in the early days of the Union, it has been two generations since seven men of the highest standing, a majority of whom were judges of the supreme court, as good and pious men as ever lived, were hanged on Boston neck for what it was popular to call a crime, such meeting seemed to them to be, namely, a violation of the divine source of all knowledge, grace, and love, namely, the Quaker, and yet I have seen the judges of that court, and the descendants of those who were their prosecutors, stand before Governor Andrew and beg his children up for the association that they had commenced with their fathers, and I have seen as a means of spite upon their neighbors, and revenge upon the Governor, the Legislature became there the devil has upon them their proper retaliation to the of common force pass their children, by which they were cruelly afflicted. But, as I said, that was in the early days, and we, as a nation, have grown old, God, our protector, was not disgraced, because of Quakers and witches. In the middle ages, detailed creatures sometimes pleaded guilty, and were hanged, and yet it is well known that they were found guilty and hanged, the evidence, on which they were convicted, was given to them by the court-house of the county of Essex, Massachusetts.

"And beyond all this that court settled down to the business of hanging, and accordingly hanged seven men who were tried for their life on this conviction. Giles Corey was an old man, 80 years of age, of the highest standing, of the years of age, simple minded, not able to earn his own living, but living on his farm, with his wife, by the grace of God, he was allowed to leave to his daughter at his time impending death, the property of which he was seized.

"His life had been blameless in everything except his supposed connection with the witch. Upon ex parte testimony he was indicted for the crime of witchcraft, and was found guilty, and in either case he is said to be pressed to the king. But, if he did not plead at all—such was the law—time he would not be tried at all, and his property could not be forfeited to the king, and he was pressed to death, and it was on account of that the court ad dictum—that the court of pleas of oyer and terminer—agreed to a constitutional law that pressed witch had not been in practice in England for two hundred years, and never before or since Giles was taken and laid on the ground, his clothes were stripped off, and a board was laid on him, and he moaning in his agony, was given a cup of water from the ditch of the jail with a crust of bread, and was twice given, one on Tuesday, one hours, and weights were placed upon his body until his ribs were broken and his eyes, as he lay upon his back, were forced out of his head, but not until his parched tongue protruded from the old man's mouth and he died. It was tried back by the Chief Justice with his case. The prisoner's counsel argued that

A DANGEROUS COUNTERFEIT.

Spurious $5 Silver Certificates in Circulation in the West.

(Chicago special.)

Dangerous $5 silver certificates are in circulation in Chicago. Many merchants have received them in the past week, and some of them have been passed at the banks. They are well executed and calculated to deceive the unwary, but a little care will enable one to distinguish them from the genuine. The lathe scroll work in the counterfeit is far from good, while the quality of ink appears to be better than that used by the Government. The very best means of detecting the new counterfeit is by the printed imitation of the silk threads, which are entirely wanting in the bills. In some of the original bills there are two of these silk threads, while others have but one. On the back of the counterfeit is printed a small vignette in the lower left hand corner, which is not on the genuine. FARM AND GARDEN.

A VERY DESIRABLE VARIETY OF EARLY SWEET CORN.

Making Poultry One of a Series of Rotations—How Farmers Feel About Dehorning Cattle—One Way to Layer the Grape.

Numbered with experienced southern horticulturists is Mr. T. V. Munson, of Denison, Tex. In an article on "Horticultural Survey," in Texas Farm and Ranch, occurs the following:

FIG. 1—LAYERING THE GRAPE.

In Fig. 1 it is desired to produce new individuals by layering. We must first partly stop, by a wound, the food supply from the parent, cause the layer to heal the wound, and at the same time secure its food from mother earth itself. We do this by cutting the branch partly in two from wing tips, as at "a," so as to get all the young roots on your layer, and not as at "b," by cutting on lower side, causing generally weak roots to start both from the layer we wish to move and the old stock, which damages both the mother plant and the young sought, with no advantage otherwise. Another quicker, and about equally safe way is to bend the branch a quick twist, as though intending to make a wither, but twisting only at one point, then bend down in trench and cover, leaving top out with leaves on. In fall, cut away from old plant, take up and transplant. That is for layering, in summer time, young growing wood.

FIG 2—LAYERING THE GRAPE.

For spring layering the grape, proceed as shown in Fig. 2. A trench some four or five inches deep along row is made so as to be out of way of cultivation. A good strong cane is selected, pinned down as at "c, c, c" in the trench while yet dormant, and left uncovered till buds expand and grow branches, "b, b, b," reaching several inches above surface of ground, then begin gradually filling in fine soil along trench till level. By fall nearly every shoot will have taken root near the old vine when it spring. Then cut apart at "a, a," and "c", remove and plant as a separate vine. Some varieties, very hard or impossible to grow from cuttings, can be quite readily grown in this way.

Dehorning Cattle.

The practice of dehorning cattle is rapidly increasing, not only in the west but in many sections of the middle and eastern states. The chief objection urged against dehorning has been the cruelty of the operation, least one is that it detracts from the appearance of the animal. The second objection, remains, but the great majority of those who have practiced dehorning contend that it is no more painful, if as painful, as other operations generally practiced. However this may be, it is fairly safe to conclude that dehorning, carefully performed, is not a painful operation.

The arguments advanced in favor of dehorning are: First, the prevention of terrible accidents in handling vicious cattle, especially bulls; second, that the dehorned cattle can be turned loose in sheds and stalls without fear of their injuring each other, even if they are more or less crowded.

The subject has received considerable attention this season at the farmers' institutes and clubs, and if reports of these meetings may be relied upon the farmers and breeders who have experimented in dehorning their cattle almost with one accord favor the practice. From these and other sources it appears that the preferred age at which to dehorn is in the second year of the animal's life, and spring is the season favored. The operation, it is averred, is more successful in moderate weather, then in either extreme of heat or cold.

Preparatory to the operation the animal's head is made fast; then the horns are sawed off with a suitable saw close to the hair, where a soft place occurs in the horns.

Double Runs for Poultry.

The importance of double runs for poultry is not appreciated by the majority of amateurs who are growing poultry on a comparatively small scale, and yet these double runs are of untold value. The object of the double run is to supply the birds with fresh ground, and thus prevent any tainting of it, so prolific a cause of disease in small yards.

Only one run at a time ought to be occupied by the fowls, and the other may be profitably employed with growing vegetables, which will be found to thrive astonishingly in such a place. One not only gets the profits of some quick growing crops by this practice, but the soil has at the same time been purified and brought into good condition for the poultry. If such run is alternated by fowls and crops, say every four months, the disease so common in confined poultry runs will be few and far between.

The efficacy of this plan has been proven to the writer's own satisfaction, and is well worth a trial. There appears no reason why farmers should not make poultry one of a series in a rotation of crops as by this means the land occupied by the fowls is well manured, and before being used again by the birds is purified by the crops grown thereon.

It may happen that the small poultry keeper cannot give these double runs. In that case a good plan would be to lay down the one run he has in gravel, as that can be more easily removed and renewed than earth, and then it is not so readily contaminated by the droppings as is soil.

Preparing Compost.

Contrary to a prevailing opinion, says The Southern Cultivator, it is not in practice a matter of great importance to determine and adhere to fixed proportions of ingredients in compounding a mixture of fertilizing materials, or compost, for a particular crop. Where home materials are to be utilized, it is generally safe to use a good deal of latitude in the relative proportions according to the respective quantities of each ingredient that may be available. By a sort of common consent, to some extent suggested by the fertilizer laws of the state, the ingredients of a fertilizer for cotton, and most other crops, should contain the three valuable elements in about the proportions of ammonia, 2 to 3 per cent.; phosphoric acid 8 to 12 per cent., and potash 1 1-2 to 2 per cent., and this is about the average of the commercial fertilizers sold in Georgia. If these proportions are approximated within wide limits in mixing a compost, its practical maximum value will be realized. Stable manure being one of the principal ingredients in point of bulk usually employed in composting, and varying greatly in composition, it is manifestly impracticable to formulate any near approach to accuracy.

P. ductiveness of Fruit Trees.

"It is curious to note," says James Fitz, of Virginia, "the difference in the productiveness of fruit trees, caused by soil and climate. For instance, the North-ern Spy apple, the Esopus Spitzenburg and the Baldwin, three of the most popular varieties of the northern and some of the middle states, are perfectly worthless in most parts of Virginia and states further south. On the other hand our best sorts, such as the Nicks Jack, Winesap, Limbertwig, Grimes' golden, Buckingham, Hawle's Great and many others are worthless at the north. It is true that some European varieties, and a few that originated in the northern and middle states, are at home in southern and southwestern soil. It is for the amateur to grow and test such and introduce new varieties. The farmer has not time to attempt discoveries in this line, except in a small way."

The Treatment of Colts.

The treatment which colts receive has a lasting effect upon them when they are grown up. Injuries and blemishes are like the leaves on trees—they increase in size as the body increases. It is an unfavored fact that the condition of the feet of a horse is more or less affected by the condition of the ground on which the feet are treated in any kind of soil. If they are kept confined to stables and compelled to stand continually upon hard, plank floor, the feet will be more or less injured by it; or if they are constantly kept on soft, loamy ground the feet will be soft and spongy, and in about as bad condition as if bruised up by being stabled continually.—Southern Cultivator.

Utilizing Coal Ashes.

It is the general understanding that coal ashes are not of enough value as fertilizer to pay for hauling them out for that purpose, but when sifted the fine ashes will be useful on stiff clay soils, lightening them up and making them more friable, but the cinders should be kept off from any land you intend to cultivate. Many persons consider a few shovefuls of fine ashes useful around their fruit trees and use them for that purpose, and the sifted ashes have given excellent satisfaction when used in the garden to prevent the attacks of the melon and cucumber bugs.

Best Milk Producing Food.

Professor Stewart, authority on such matters, says: "Neither corn meal nor bran is the best milk producing food. With the best clover hay, corn meal should be added as a part of the ration—but with corn fodder, straw or poor hay, good wheat bran should be added instead of corn meal. Bran will balance poor fodder better than corn meal. But in making up the milk ration the fodder should seek variety in food. Corn meal and bran together, are better than either alone. The kinds of food best in a milk ration depend upon how the foods balance each other."

Sowing Oats.

Undoubtedly the Burt oat is the safest for spring sowing, as it will mature in 100 to 120 days when sown in February or March, according to latitude. Sow plenty of seed; the later the sowing the heavier should be the seeding. Allow for yield of twenty-fold is a pretty safe general rule, unless the expected yield or quality of the land is small, in such case the seeding should be somewhat heavier than this rule would indicate, and vice versa.—Southern Cultivator.

Earliest of All Sweet Corn.

Repeated tests of the new extra early varieties of sweet corn from these and other sources it appears that the preferred age at which to dehorn is in the second year of the animal's life, and spring is the season favored. The operation, it is averred, is more successful in moderate weather, then in either extreme of heat or cold.

Preparatory to the operation the animal's head is made fast; then the horns are sawed off with a suitable saw close to the hair, where a soft place occurs in the horns.

THE STORY OF A SLAVER.

Heartless Experiments of a Man Now Living in Boston.

The other day I heard a story from a man who says he has been all over the world and finally settled near Atlanta, the best place, he says, he has ever found. Among the amusing men he has met before the war was a captain that had been a slaver. Once he had a cargo of 300 slaves, sailing with them from off the coast of Africa to Cuba. After a few days sail he saw he was chased by a United States man of war. If he was caught with the slaves the penalty was death for him and his crew, and his cargo was worth $200,000. So he had two incentives to get away, and made his preparations for either event—escape or capture. He hung the heavy iron cable or chain that holds the anchor all around the hull of his vessel, on the outside, just below the edge of the deck. It was held by some cleats. These cables are so heavy that a man can lift only about two feet of one. Then he had the 300 naked negroes brought on deck and each one's wrists crossed and tied fast. They were then placed along the gunwales, facing outward and leaning over, and a strong cord fastened the hands of each one to the heavy iron cable just below them on the outside.

Then the captain awaited the result of the race. He had on every stitch of canvas his poles could carry. If he could run till dark he hoped to dodge the steamer and be out of sight before another day. But the man of war was a fast enough, and the steamer came on too fast. Then was at that hope for escape. The crew stood ready with axes; the captain raised his hand, and in an instant every arm of every slave fell down. There was a sudden jerk, over went the disposed fact that ten the condition of the feet of a horse is more or less affected by the condition of the ground on which the feet are treated in any kind of soil. If they are kept confined to stables and compelled to stand continually upon hard, plank floor, the feet will be more or less injured by it; or if they are constantly kept on soft, loamy ground the feet will be soft and spongy, and in about as bad condition as if bruised up by being stabled continually.—Southern Cultivator.

THE CRY CONS.

Yorkshire, and Early Jersey Wakefield are among the earliest of all sweet corn. It originated in Rhode Island with Joseph Cory. Gradually a few of his neighbors began obtained some of the seed, and from this it became gradually known to the needmen. In 1883 it was introduced to the public by Mr. Gregory, of Marblehead, the well known Massachusetts seedsman. To this gentleman we are indebted for the representation of this corn here given. Mr. Gregory claims that it has proved on his grounds to be earlier and larger kernelled than the Marblehead. The agricultural editor of The New York World, who tested it along with other early sorts in sandy New Jersey soil, has reported it as not only the earliest, but the sweetest and tenderest of all.

Facts Farmers Ought to Know.

Lettuce gives best results when grown in a moist soil and in comparatively cool weather.

The radish will thrive in any good soil, but to be crisp and tender must be grown quickly.

The black walnut tree will ent a figure on our farms in the future. It can be made as profitable as the apple tree in localities where it will thrive at all.

Two new lettuces are the Ohio and the Golden Apple.

In view of the fact that the potato crop was short in many sections last year, and that much of the crop was not well ripened, greater care than usual should be taken with this season's seed potatoes. Try and get seed from healthy well matured tubers.

According to a recent announcement the next convention of the American Horticultural society will be held in Texas two years hence.

Composition of an Aerolite.

There was on exhibition at the Texas state fair a large aerolite which was found among the Comanche Indians by Lieut. Geological Raester in 1858. The Indians had known of the stone for generations by tradition as the "thunder stone," and said it had fallen from the sky. They were accustomed to visit it when there by partially buried in the earth, to whet their knives and arrow points upon it, which they believed that they were greatly acquired magic power. The stone is of considerable size, being to consist in parts: Iron 88.78, nickel 10.78, cobalt 10.54, and the remainder graphite, which contains some aluminum, protoxide of iron, protoxide of manganese, and traces of magnesia, soda, potash and chromium. The Surplus revenue—Where Is It?

It is known to our readers and the people generally that our government is under our tariff and internal revenue laws, is drawing from the pockets of the people $10,000,000 every month in excess of the needs of the government.

What disposition is made of this surplus? Many doubtless suppose that this money is piled into the subtreasuries of New York, Cincinnati and other cities. This would be the natural conclusion of the unsophisticated. The withdrawal from circulation of $10,000,000 which is being increased $10,000,000 per month would result in a financial panic, a stagnation of business and a paralysis of trade. This would never do, and relief must be found in some other quarter.

President Cleveland has urged upon congress such modification of the revenue laws as would leave the money in the pockets of the people and in the channels of trade. Thus far congress has failed to heed the advice of the executive, and the surplus continues to increase. The fact is not generally known, but the tax payers should be informed, that their money is divided up among the national banks. There are now $60,000,000 of the surplus revenue in the banks without interest, and they are loaning it to their customers upon such terms as dealers in money prescribe. True, the banks hold it subject to the call of the government, but so long as the receipts exceed the disbursements, no call is likely to be made, and the banks are reaping a large profit by handling the surplus revenue. It is to whom that the Sherman school of politicians denounce Cleveland as a free trader for urging upon congress the reduction of the revenue, so that our own revenues would be diminished. Nearly three hundred of the national banks have been selected as depositories of the surplus revenue, and they are amassing large fortunes for their stockholders by loaning out the money which has been surreptitiously taken from the people. Secretary Sherman was secretary of the treasury the first national of New York, in which he was personally interested with a capital of $250,000 was the custodian of $45,000,000 of the government funds. Some of these favorite institutions are allowed to hold fixed balances, which enable them to loan all the surplus revenue in their agency. The surplus in the banks is nominally subject to call, but a money panic would be precipitated upon the country if a call for any considerable amount was unexpectedly made. The whole business world, as well as the government, are at the mercy of this organic and infamous money trust. The individual example we have given, using the article of sugar as an illustration, applies as well to every other necessary of life which is subjected to a heavy duty. The tariff bill now before congress in accordance with the recommendation of the president, proposes to take off $11,000,000 from the $60,000,000 now collected from the article of sugar.

The duties upon the other necessaries of life are scaled down to the actual needs of an economical government, so that there shall be no surplus to distribute among the banks to be used for their private gain. The president has been censured for not directing the secretary of the treasury to go into the market, buy up and cancel the unmatured bonds with the surplus revenue. By a strained construction of the law he might do this, paying the enormous premium demanded for them. The President says he will exercise no such power without express act of congress authorizing it. As the government requires a deposit of its bonds as security for the safety of deposits, the banks availing themselves of the surplus revenue can afford to pay a large premium for bonds. They would be competitors with government in the bond market and the premium would be thus greatly advanced. The "moneyed trust" has the ear of hedged about, that, no matter whether it gets the deposits of the surplus revenue or it is appropriated to the purchase of unmatured bonds, the combination will get the benefit.

The president says let the homes of the people be blessed with the necessaries of life without the imposition of a tax; the high tariff men say "No! if you would reduce the revenue let the people have their tobacco, beer and whiskey." Assuming that congress will not disturb our revenue laws, which, from present appearances is most probable, and that the surplus will continue at the rate of ten millions per month, it will be an easy mathematical problem to determine how long it will be before every dollar of the circulating volume of money will be yielding a revenue to the bank syndicate!

Every citizen should determine for himself, independent of all party dictation, whether the recommendation of President Cleveland is wise, just and patriotic.

The charge that he is a free trader as all can see, is false and malicious, and is only made to deceive the people in order that "the money trust" may continue to grow rich by robbing the producers of wealth.

The current expenses of the government are very large, and the debt we owe to our patriotic soldiers is great, rendering enormous tax levies indespensible for years to come. It is cruel, oppressive, dishonest and unjust to ask of a patriotic and generous people to contribute a surplus beyond the needs of the government. We have no language with which to denounce the infamy of placing this surplus in the hands of bankers to be used for their private gain. We heartily agree with the president that in the revision of our tariff schedule care should be taken to foster and encourage our domestic manufactures on the same time that the articles of necessaries of life should not be burdened with heavy taxes. The taxes upon pernicious luxuries like tobacco, beer and whiskey should be retained until every soldier who is entitled to a pension for patriotic service is in his grave. The consumers of these luxuries will cheerfully submit to this levy. When the money thus derived is no longer needed and there is a surplus revenue to distribute among the bankers, we will advocate untaxed whiskey.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Wise Mercantile Maxim.

A thoroughly honest clerk can always command a better salary than one of equivocal habits.

He who has trusted out his neighbor's good opinion is pretty sure to die a poor man, however high the price for which he sold it.

When business is attended with minuteness of detail, strict punctuality, it runs evenly, without jar or friction, and leads to success.

It is statistical truth that no single cause leads to more disastrous results than the use of liquors, not necessarily through drunkenness, but the enfeebling of the judgment. In dress, be neat and unobtrusive. The perfection of dress is to be so perfectly in keeping with your occupation that the attention of an observer is not directed to it at all.

Daily shall a man hope to live and thrive by buying and selling after his neighbors and customers have learned by sad experience that his word is not reliable, that his representations of the cost or quality of his wares are not to be trusted.

Planing and fretting in and around a store, flinging fault with clerks and employes, denotes a lack of order and business tact, and exposes the merchant to ridicule and unpleasant comments from those from whom he should have respect and confidence.—New York Mail and Express.

The government, having no use for this money, deposited in the national bank of Cincinnati without interest. The Dudebr Watch Company is conducting four immense business, would doubtless require bank accommodations. They offer to this bank, good commercial paper and it is discounted at the moderate rate of six per cent.
The company uses the proceeds in conducting their business purchasing supplies, paying for labor. It will be conceded without argument that in any venture where capital and labor are employed the interest paid upon the capital must be deducted from the earnings before labor can demand its share. It must be readily seen that the workingmen are paying interest on their own money, which has been drawn from them unnecessarily under the pretext that it was needed to meet the wants of the government.

PROHIBITION IN MISSOURI.

Forty-nine Counties Vote "Wet" and Thirty-three Have Banished Liquor.

OWING to the political excitement in Missouri over the approaching National Democratic Convention, the Prohibition leaders have decided to take a rest, and no more elections will be held for two years, says a St. Louis dispatch. Eighty-two counties and twenty towns of more than 2,000 inhabitants have voted. Forty-nine counties have voted "wet" and thirty-three "dry." The total vote cast in these same counties and towns was 251,417. The total vote this year on the prohibition question was 176,76. The Democratic counties voting "dry" were 26; Republican, 15; Democratic counties voting "wet," 32; Republican, 14. Thirteen of the twenty towns went "dry," 7 "wet." Of the 13 "dry" towns 4 are Republican and 9 Democratic; of the 7 "wet" towns 5 are Democratic and 2 Republican. The aggregate "dry" majority is 18,091; aggregate "wet," 14,672. Thirty counties have not voted.

AVALANCHES LOSS OF LIFE.

Destructiveness of the Recent Earthquake in China—Fifteen Thousand Persons Killed and Many Towns in Utter Ruin.

RECENT cable dispatches bring some further particulars of the great earthquake in China last before Christmas, which proves to have been of appalling magnitude.

Fifteen thousand people perished in the course of four days, during which at uncertain intervals the earth continued to be convulsed to its core, to such extremities, because it was scarcely possible to ascertain the exact loss of life. How many have been injured appears by dry communication yet. The capital district of Yunnan is absolutely one heap of ruins. Many towns and villages were killed by the fall of houses at the first shock, other Chinese towns the effect on buildings was most as fatal, with the additional horror of the earth yawning till a frightful chasm was opened, into which houses, with a red color was reported, the sides of the earth seems to have been following the example of the houses of the unlucky inhabitants. Further north, at Lo Chan, where 10,000 met their doom, the aspect of the country has been completely changed. Large tracts of land suddenly disappeared, and in some places the Yiulaison and the Yiaor pieces lake formed.

CRISIS OF THE STRIKE.

The Burlington Becomes Aggressive—A General Tie-up Apprehended.

THE phases of the great railroad strike have materially changed during the last forty-eight hours, says a Chicago telegram of Monday.

Instead of being the attacked party the Burlington Company has assumed the aggressive and is bringing the trouble to a crisis by demanding an interchange of business with other roads. This policy, if continued, is almost certain to precipitate strikes in more of the local labor unions. The Knights of Labor, Trades Assembly, Most strikes will be ordered on Northern Pacific, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, Chicago and Northwestern and Illinois Central through the Southern Ute Indian reservation in Colorado, abolishing the office of Indian Agent, Charles Adams, the Cleveland appointee, has resigned, and Colonel Pratt, of the Carlisle Indian School, has been appointed in his place. Pratt is a strong advocate of the allotment system and a firm believer in the assimilation of the Indians with the white people.

THE WESTERN STATES.

A TORNADO passed over Nimescah, Kansas, and left but three houses standing. Two churches, five stores, and fifteen dwellings were destroyed. Three persons were killed and seventeen wounded.

DANE ELIMINTER FORBE reports the assets of the Commercial Bank of Dubuque, Iowa, to be $524,000, only $250,000 of which are good; liabilities to depositors, $127,000.

JOHN R. DE CAMP, the judicial cashier of the late Metropolitan Bank at Cincinnati, has been sentenced by one of his bondsmen.

AT Kearney, Neb., Albert Murrish killed his wife and shot and fatally wounded his hired man, Thomas Patterson.

A DISPATCH from Rich Hill, Mo., a mining town on the Missouri Pacific Railroad, 100 miles south of Kansas City, gives the following brief account of a horrible colliery disaster:

About 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon there was a rumbling sound in mine No. 3 at this place, and a minute afterward a fearful explosion occurred that entirely wrecked the mine and buried in its debris over a hundred miners, who were out of 2 from all means of escape. Up to 10 o'clock Thursday night forty bodies have been taken out, and at least fifteen more are expected to have met a similar fate. The superintendent of the mine was taken out badly injured, but will survive. In the mine at the time of the explosion 150 men were employed. The cause of the disaster is claimed to be the fire damp, but it is now thought that over sixty men were killed.

A LARGE five-story building on the corner of Lake and Peoria streets, Chicago, was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $20,000. Several firemen were seriously injured by an explosion of heated air.

THE Supreme Court of Illinois, says a Chicago special, has just affirmed a judgment for $20,000 recovered in May, 1885, by Isaac Bolland against the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company. Bolland was a conductor on the road, and was injured in a collision between a drunken engineer and a freight train of the Eastern Illinois. He will never recover from the effects of the accident, and is now bedridden, and will probably always remain so. With costs and interest, the amount is $20,000, and this sum has just been paid to the attorneys for Bolland by the railroad. The verdict is the largest one for personal injuries ever sustained in Illinois.

THE Northwestern Railroader, of Minneapolis, publishes a summary of the entire cost of the Western rate war now ending to the railroad companies involved. There have been just fifty working days since the first cut was made, and the loss is shown to have been $15,000,000 in that time.

IT is stated that in thirty counties in Illinois the winter wheat crop will fall of about 30 per cent; and that in eighteen counties in Missouri the reduction will be 20 per cent.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

SILVER has been discovered near Georgetown, Ky., the assay showing that the silver deposit is to thirty per cent. of the ore. A shaft is being sunk, and the company intend extensive operations.

A DISPATCH from Raleigh, N. C., says the announcement that the doors of the State Treasurer's vault would be closed created an immense excitement. Charles E. Cross, the President, and Samuel C. White, Cashier, left on the train for New York three days before. The vault of the bank was $70,000, and the concern was established in 1867. The last statement of the bank showed deposits of $200,000. All of this money is gone except $15,000 in silver and $5,000 in currency. The loss falls heavily on many people. William R. Poe, 91 years old, loses $50,000, and W. S. Primrose $20,000, mostly in trust funds. The Industrial School loses $20,000, and this will stop the erection of the buildings. The State loses $30,000, the Sheriff of this county $12,000, a Mr. Avera $16,000, and there are several hundred small depositors who lose from $100 to $500, which was all they had.

EX-LIEUT. GOV. WILLIAM DUBOSTHEIS, the publisher of the New York Star, died at Savannah, Ga., whither he had gone on a pleasure trip. His death was sudden and unexpected.

AT Mobile, Ala., Thomas P. Miller & Co., private bankers, failed for $130,000, with assets of about $70,000.

THE number of hogs packed in the West during the winter season is estimated by the Cincinnati Price Current at 5,900,000, a decrease from last year of about 520,000 head. The prospective hog supply points to a decrease of 15 per cent.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

THE river and harbor bill, as completed and reported to the House, makes an aggregate appropriation of $18,618,268, as is the largest bill of the kind ever brought in. That of 1882, which was the largest up to that time, appropriated $18,743,000. The largest appropriations for Western water-ways and harbors are as follows:

New Orleans, $200,000; Arkansas Pass, $100,000; Galveston, $50,000; Sabine Pass, $50,000; Cleveland, $70,000; Toledo, $100,000; Chicago, $50,000; Duluth, $60,000; Hunnibolt, Cal., $100,000; Oakland, Cal., $175,000; Washington, Cal., $100,000; Yaquina Bay, Oregon, $100,000; Portland, Oregon, $100,000; Columbia River, $50,000; Harbor Bay, $50,000; Sandusky City, Ohio, $80,000; Ashtabula, Ohio, $80,000; Saint Croix harbor of refuge, $50,000; Milwaukee, $60,000; Superior and St. Louis Bay, Wis., $50,000; Ashland, $50,000; Grenville, Miss., $25,000; Vicksburg, Miss., $40,000; Arkansas, Ohio, $80,000; Saginaw, Mich., $50,000; Calumet and Keweenaw, Mich., $50,000; Lake Superior, Grand Marais, Mich., $50,000; Ludington, Mich., $50,000; Grand Haven, Mich., $50,000; Muskegon, Mich., $50,000; Columbia, Ky., $50,000.

The larger appropriations for rivers in the West are:

The Mississippi from the mouth of the Missouri to the Gulf, $1,500,000; Saint Mary's River at the falls and Bay Lake channel, $100,000; Missouri River, $600,000; Ohio River, $600,000; Columbia, $50,000; Tennessee River, $250,000; Cumberland River, $200,000; Red River of Louisiana and Atchafalaya, $100,000; Red River above Shreveport, Arkansas River, $100,000; Cape Fear River, $150,000; Great Kanawha River, $200,000.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has sent the following nominations to the Senate: J. H. Walworth, to be Register of the Land Office at Omaha, Wm. R. Nelson Pitch, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Gregory, Dak. Also these postmasters: Illinois, Nicholas Murphy, South Evanston; Ohio, Allen O. Sprague, Mansfield; William E. Jones, Salem; Michigan, Paul W. Gleason, Calumet; Wisconsin, James Tierman, Fort Howard; Minnesota, James C. Frost, Anoka; Alonzo Cornwell, Chatanooga; Iowa, John B. Jenkins, McGregor; Nebraska, James D. Hubble, Fairmont; Missouri, Burton J. Morrow, Sedalia; Kansas, William E. Huttmann, Elinwood.

THE funeral of the late Chief Justice Waite, in the House of Representatives at Washington, called together as distinguished an assemblage of men and women as could be gathered in any city of the world. Every man of note in Washington was present, and the galleries of the House of Representatives were filled with the wives of officials, statesmen, diplomats, and the social leaders of the city. The services were of an impressive nature. The nation's respect for the memory of its highest judicial officer and its sorrow for his death were expressed in the presence of the President and his Cabinet, the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, the heads of the Army, the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and the members of the House and Senate. There was no address delivered, the services being wholly made up of the reading of the beautiful burial service of the Episcopal Church by Bishop Paret. The remains were placed upon a special train and taken to Toledo, accompanied by the relatives of the late Chief Justice.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has sent a letter to Mr. Cockrane, from Gettysburg, recommending an extension of the limits of the classified service. He says:

Competitive examinations are the exceptions to the plan of the act, and the rules prescribed by the Commission for the guidance of the boards sitting under the exception above recited should be very low, and when presented to the appointing officer only the requirements specified and should be supported by the certificate of the board that the applicant has the qualifications of a fair average, upon which will commend them to the judgment of the commission and the President. The sole purpose of the provision is to benefit the public service, and it should not be perverted to the benefit of any examination the main features of the law which it is to be hoped will remain. As the cases will first be presented to the committee for recommendation, I have to request that you will bring to the attention of the Commission the matter of the extension of the rule above quoted, and that it be made to apply to all cases of the kind.

THE United States warship Lancaster, which left Portsmouth Navy Yard, Me., for Chili, Peru, etc., has not been heard from, and anxiety as to her safety is felt in some quarters.

THE Superintendent of the mints has taken out badly injured, but will survive. In the mine at the time of the explosion 150 men were employed. The cause of the disaster is claimed to be the fire damp, but it is now thought that over sixty men were killed.

THE funeral of the late Chief Justice Waite, in the House of Representatives at Washington, called together as distinguished an assemblage of men and women as could be gathered in any city of the world. Every man of note in Washington was present, and the galleries of the House of Representatives were filled with the wives of officials, statesmen, diplomats, and the social leaders of the city. The services were of an impressive nature. The nation's respect for the memory of its highest judicial officer and its sorrow for his death were expressed in the presence of the President and his Cabinet, the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, the heads of the Army, the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and the members of the House and Senate. There was no address delivered, the services being wholly made up of the reading of the beautiful burial service of the Episcopal Church by Bishop Paret. The remains were placed upon a special train and taken to Toledo, accompanied by the relatives of the late Chief Justice.

THE WORLD AT LARGE.

UNITED STATES Marshal W. R. Meade, who was in Denver to take possession of the Territory of Jarnes, Mexico, while in pursuit of a gang of train robbers, left for Santa Fe in the case in a letter to Secretary Bayard. He says he and his men were treated with the greatest courtesy.

The United States warship Lancaster, which left Portsmouth Navy Yard, Me., for Chili, Peru, etc., has not been heard from, and anxiety as to her safety is felt in some quarters.

The Superintendent of the mints has taken out badly injured, but will survive. In the mine at the time of the explosion 150 men were employed. The cause of the disaster is claimed to be the fire damp, but it is now thought that over sixty men were killed.

A LARGE five-story building on the corner of Lake and Peoria streets, Chicago, was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $20,000. Several firemen were seriously injured by an explosion of heated air.

THE Supreme Court of Illinois, says a Chicago special, has just affirmed a judgment for $20,000 recovered in May, 1885, by Isaac Bolland against the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company. Bolland was a conductor on the road, and was injured in a collision between a drunken engineer and a freight train of the Eastern Illinois. He will never recover from the effects of the accident, and is now bedridden, and will probably always remain so. With costs and interest, the amount is $20,000, and this sum has just been paid to the attorneys for Bolland by the railroad. The verdict is the largest one for personal injuries ever sustained in Illinois.

THE Northwestern Railroader, of Minneapolis, publishes a summary of the entire cost of the Western rate war now ending to the railroad companies involved. There have been just fifty working days since the first cut was made, and the loss is shown to have been $15,000,000 in that time.

IT is stated that in thirty counties in Illinois the winter wheat crop will fall of about 30 per cent; and that in eighteen counties in Missouri the reduction will be 20 per cent.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

SILVER has been discovered near Georgetown, Ky., the assay showing that the silver deposit is to thirty per cent. of the ore. A shaft is being sunk, and the company intend extensive operations.

A DISPATCH from Raleigh, N. C., says the announcement that the doors of the State Treasurer's vault would be closed created an immense excitement. Charles E. Cross, the President, and Samuel C. White, Cashier, left on the train for New York three days before. The vault of the bank was $70,000, and the concern was established in 1867. The last statement of the bank showed deposits of $200,000. All of this money is gone except $15,000 in silver and $5,000 in currency. The loss falls heavily on many people. William R. Poe, 91 years old, loses $50,000, and W. S. Primrose $20,000, mostly in trust funds. The Industrial School loses $20,000, and this will stop the erection of the buildings. The State loses $30,000, the Sheriff of this county $12,000, a Mr. Avera $16,000, and there are several hundred small depositors who lose from $100 to $500, which was all they had.

EX-LIEUT. GOV. WILLIAM DUBOSTHEIS, the publisher of the New York Star, died at Savannah, Ga., whither he had gone on a pleasure trip. His death was sudden and unexpected.

AT Mobile, Ala., Thomas P. Miller & Co., private bankers, failed for $130,000, with assets of about $70,000.

THE number of hogs packed in the West during the winter season is estimated by the Cincinnati Price Current at 5,900,000, a decrease from last year of about 520,000 head. The prospective hog supply points to a decrease of 15 per cent.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

THE river and harbor bill, as completed and reported to the House, makes an aggregate appropriation of $18,618,268, as is the largest bill of the kind ever brought in. That of 1882, which was the largest up to that time, appropriated $18,743,000. The largest appropriations for Western water-ways and harbors are as follows:

New Orleans, $200,000; Arkansas Pass, $100,000; Galveston, $50,000; Sabine Pass, $50,000; Cleveland, $70,000; Toledo, $100,000; Chicago, $50,000; Duluth, $60,000; Humboldt, Cal., $100,000; Oakland, Cal., $175,000; Washington, Cal., $100,000; Yaquina Bay, Oregon, $100,000; Portland, Oregon, $100,000; Columbia River, $50,000; Harbor Bay, $50,000; Sandusky City, Ohio, $80,000; Ashtabula, Ohio, $80,000; Saint Croix harbor of refuge, $50,000; Milwaukee, $60,000; Superior and St. Louis Bay, Wis., $50,000; Ashland, $50,000; Grenville, Miss., $25,000; Vicksburg, Miss., $40,000; Arkansas, Ohio, $80,000; Saginaw, Mich., $50,000; Calumet and Keweenaw, Mich., $50,000; Lake Superior, Grand Marais, Mich., $50,000; Ludington, Mich., $50,000; Grand Haven, Mich., $50,000; Muskegon, Mich., $50,000; Columbia, Ky., $50,000.

The larger appropriations for rivers in the West are:

The Mississippi from the mouth of the Missouri to the Gulf, $1,500,000; Saint Mary's River at the falls and Bay Lake channel, $100,000; Missouri River, $600,000; Ohio River, $600,000; Columbia, $50,000; Tennessee River, $250,000; Cumberland River, $200,000; Red River of Louisiana and Atchafalaya, $100,000; Red River above Shreveport, Arkansas River, $100,000; Cape Fear River, $150,000; Great Kanawha River, $200,000.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has sent the following nominations to the Senate: J. H. Walworth, to be Register of the Land Office at Omaha, Wm. R. Nelson Pitch, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Gregory, Dak. Also these postmasters: Illinois, Nicholas Murphy, South Evanston; Ohio, Allen O. Sprague, Mansfield; William E. Jones, Salem; Michigan, Paul W. Gleason, Calumet; Wisconsin, James Tierman, Fort Howard; Minnesota, James C. Frost, Anoka; Alonzo Cornwell, Chatanooga; Iowa, John B. Jenkins, McGregor; Nebraska, James D. Hubble, Fairmont; Missouri, Burton J. Morrow, Sedalia; Kansas, William E. Huttmann, Elinwood.

Charlevoix, Mich., April 12, 1888.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids, WEDNESDAY, MAY, 16TH, 1888, At 12 o'clock noon,

For the purpose of electing delegates to the Democratic National Convention, called to meet at St Louis, Missouri, June 5, 1888, the selection of a State Central Committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

The convention will elect four delegates and four alternates at large, twenty-two district delegates(two from each congressional district,and twenty-two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, from each congressional district, and a chairman at large.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the county they represent.

The delegates from each Congressional District will meet in caucus at ten o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: Two district delegates, two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, one vice-president of the convention, and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

All voters who are in accord with the present Democratic administration in its efforts to reduce taxation to the legitimate wants of the national government, economically administered, are invited to participate in the selection of delegates to this convention.

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.
* JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four (4) delegates.

ROSCOE CONKLING is reported to be dying.

GOV. LUCE has appointed Friday, April 20, as Arbor Day.

R. A. ALGER has declared himself a candidate for the presidency.

CASS county made interesting democratic gains in township elections last week.

The postmaster general has decided to give Detroit three suburban postoffices,

PROBABLY the highest and most important position to be filled during President Cleveland's administration is the appointment of Chief Justice.

THE Butchers Protective Association is a new organization in Detroit, and roasts will probably advance in price. They claim, however, to protect the consumers as well as butchers.

TWENTY-SIX states will elect governors this year. Two of these will occur in April, one in June, two in August, three in September and one in October. All others take place in November.

SATURDAY's Chicago Herald states that president Cleveland has expressed a desire to appoint Chief Justice Schofield, of Illinois, to the vacant place in the U. S. supreme court in case he will accept.

THE Oregon democratic convention indorsed Cleveland and his tariff reform policy and instructed delegates to the national convention to vote for Cleveland for president, and Gov. Pennoyer, of Oregon, for vice president.

CAPT. D. W. LOCKWOOD, engineer in charge at Grand Rapids, has been transferred to duty at Cincinnati, in charge of certain river and harbor improvements. His place will be filled at Grand Rapids by Maj. S. M. Mansfield.

At the state election in Rhode Island last week the democrats made some substantial gains. The issue of the canvass were much the same as those embodied in the president's message, and will become the issue this fall. For that reason the result is considered very encouraging for Mr. Cleveland's chances next fall.

THE recent democratic victory in Petoskey is but another proof of the principle that if democrats and all naturally in sympathy with democratic principles will settle their differences in the caucus, and will go to the polls united, they can win every time. That is the principle that held the republican party together so long, and one the democrats must heed if they would control the elections.

THE farmers alliance of Minnesota at its recent meeting in St. Paul put itself on record with a "demand" for radical reduction in the tariff, and passed resolutions approving President Cleveland's views and denouncing the protective tariff, so-called as "an iniquitous tax on the people for the benefit of the monopolists and trusts." This was not in a republican gathering. It was a gathering of farmers. But it was a gathering of farmers from all sections of a strongly republican state, and its action shows that the party lash with the protection:at snapper can no longer be used to whip the republican farmer into line on election day.

Michigan's Farm Mortgages.

Some most interesting and useful information is furnished by the report of the Michigan bureau of labor regarding the number of farm mortgages in the state. The work has been carried out faithfully in the face of many discouragements and difficulties, but the result is certain to be productive of some remedial legislation respecting the taxation of mortgages.

The commissioner of labor says that he has reports from 90,803 farms or 58 per cent of all the farms in the state. The assessed valuation of all farms reported is $194,854,633, upon which there is a mortgage indebtedness of $37,456,272, or a little more than 19 per cent of the total assessed valuation, and nearly 47 per cent on that of the farms mortgaged. An average interest charge of 7.2 per cent gives an annual interest charge upon 58 per cent of the farms of Michigan of $2,701,923. The assessed valuation of all the farms in the state is $335,378,025, upon which the estimated mortgage indebtedness is $64,392,580, with an annual interest charge of $4,636,255 on farms alone. The mortgage indebtedness on the entire real estate of Michigan is estimated at $129,229,553, with an annual interest charge of $9,451,851.

An interesting revelation of the commissioner of labor's investigation is that so far as it extended 63,579 farmers were American whose farms were assessed at $153,777,813, carrying a mortgaged indebtedness of $25,313,153; while 31,570 farmers were foreigners who brought $4,633,188 with them to Michigan and now own farms assessed at $52,537,871, carrying a mortgaged indebtedness of $11,191,714. From this it appears that the farms of Americans are mortgaged for 17 per cent of their assessed value while those of foreigners are mortgaged for over 21 per cent.

Against an estimated mortgaged indebtedness on real estate in Michigan of $129,229,553 the amount of capital invested in manufacturing institutions in the state is $136,697,397. One of these amounts is an investment for the benefit of the whole community; the other represents, as the commissioner of labor says, "a mammoth sponge, constantly and unceasingly absorbing the labor of the farmer." But it should not be forgotten that much of the value of the farms of Michigan is due to the fertilizing influence of the mortgages plastered so thickly over its surface.

Ingalls and the Soldiers.

Senator Ingalls' recent picturesque filistic assault upon President Cleveland and Gens. Hancock and McClellan, has not only entirely retired him from the list of possible presidential candidates, but it has exposed him to the very emphatic resentment of the gallant soldiers of the country regardless of their political faith.

Senator Ingalls was an applicant for admission to the Loyal Legion, one of the most dignified and respected of the various soldier organizations, when he delivered his recent disgraceful assault upon the president and Hancock and McClellan. He had attempted to gain admission to the first class in the legion, which requires actual service or commission in the army during the war, on the strained pretext that he had served as judge advocate in the Kansas militia. The commandery of the Legion in Washington has just rejected his application on the ground of want of military qualification, and it is not conceded that, even if qualified, he would have been rejected solely because of his infamous partisan defamation of gallant soldiers in his late speech.

Determined to retrieve his fallen condition, he is now an applicant for admission to the third class of the Legion, in which civilians are admitted who rendered conspicuous service to the country during the war; but it is an open secret that if his admission shall be pressed, he will be rejected as a scurrilous defamer of leading soldiers of the country.

It goes without saying that if Senator Ingalls could have his speech yet to make, with the light he now has on the subject, he would make it clearly within the lines of public courtesy and common decency; but unfortunately the speech is made and cannot be recalled, and the Kansas senator will have a protracted season of repentance and humiliation as the only substantial fruits of his fall market rhetoric. —Philadelphia Times.

A Severe Scoring.

We are sadly disappointed in Senator Ingalls' long advertised speech. He is conceded to be a man of great parts, and a very happy user of the English language, but it is passing strange that the presiding officer of the upper house of the federal congress should descend to such unwarrantable abuse of the president of the United states and of one of its greatest generals—simply because they were of opposing political faith. He richly deserves the scoring that he received from Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, and all the evidences go to show that it was about as severe a scoring as any man ever received under the restraining influences of parliamentary law.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Singular Ignorance.

Senator Ingalls showed a singular ignorance of recent events in his mud machine speech delivered in the senate. For instance, he declared that as far as he knew, no Union soldier had ever been sent congress by Democratic votes; and Senator Blackburn called his attention to the fact that such a thing had been done in Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky and Virginia.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

The extensive state library at Lansing is taken care of by five persons. Mrs. Harriet Tenney, librarian, who succeeded her husband in 1869, gets $1,200 a year, Mrs. Mary C. Spencer gets $1,000, James W. Tyrate $900, William Clark $700, and Jesse Coryell $600.

Canadian currency is an object of suspicion at the best, but there are issues from two Dominion banks which should be refused on sight. They are those issued by the Federal and Central banks. Both have suspended and the latter is considered worthless, while the former may pay bill holders sometime.

Spencer Creek is after a stave and heading factory with some little degree of success. Just as soon as it is decided that the D., C. & E. railroad will touch there,men with money are ready to snap up a site. The factory will consume $30,000 worth of timber per year and employ about 30 men.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Remember, girls, this is leap year. Don't approach a young man in that uncouth, unladylike and unbecoming style common among some girls, and say: "Jack, may I go home with you to-night?" but in a kind yet winning way, say: "will you be so condescending as to sacrifice your convenience and allow me the pleasure of accompanying you to your destination?" In nine case out of ten the young man will say "yes."

There are now in the northern asylum at this place 534 patients,—289 males, and 245 females. The male wing and small cottage are full to overflowing, and long before the new cottage can be completed, it will be a serious question how to care for new cases. There are still 25 or 30 beds on female side, but these will soon be filled. Work will begin on the new male cottage as soon as the weather will permit. This cottage will accommodate 50 patients.—Traverse Herald.

Railroad men are laughing at the project now "incoming" at St. Ignace and the Soo to build a railroad between these two points. The list of alleged stockholders in the company is a curiosity; some men are put down for fifty or a hundred shares that could not buy a peck of turnips when they were selling at 20 cents a bushel and pay cash for them with out borrowing. There is no traffic between the two places, and it is the old scheme for a railroad from Nowhere to Nowhere.—Cheboygan Democrat.

The Weekly Evening Post.

The New York Evening Post will begin, on the third of May, to issue a weekly edition, having for its principal aim the promotion of Revenue Reform, which has become the paramount issue in national politics. The existence of an actual surplus in the Treasury estimated at $140,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1888, and the further increase thereof under present laws, are a menace to all business interests, and a direct incentive to wastefulness and corruption in the appropriations of public money. The attention of the Post will be largely and strongly drawn to this subject by the President in his last annual message, the need of information and popular enlightenment on questions of revenue and taxation has been increasingly felt in all parts of the country.

It is the intention of the management to make a first-class weekly newspaper of 12 pages. Subscription price $1 per year. A free copy of the first number will be mailed anywhere on request. Send address on a postal card to The Evening Post, New York.

The tug Campbell is being repaired at Washburn's yard, and when she comes out she will look like a new boat. She is almost entirely new from the keel line. Capt. J. E. Carter will command the tug Campbell this season.

"Yes Clarence I can feel your heart beat; and it beats for me alone" she said, as her cards read, "I guess you're next pattern (one of Geo. W. Miller's spring styles) "That," gasped the poor fellow, "is not my heart; it is my Waubury watch."

Tay Lansing business men have recognized the cause of the striking printers to the extent of giving them eleven and one-half columns of advertising in the daily Morning Tribune, the very best kind of recognition that could be given.

Some new books are soon to be ordered for the township library, and if anyone has a desire for any new book not now in the library they will do the board a favor by leaving the title of such books with J. B. Allen, H. S. Hayden, or F. G. Hines.

There is success in persistency. The man who keeps pegging away, keeping his expenses below his receipts is a successful man. A man need not have a large business in order to make the most money. A small business well managed is better than many a good large business we know of. The size of a man's store is no index to his income.

Persistency pays in advertising. Every day and at all times, a man's name and business are liable to be turned to in his trade paper. The indirect influence, which makes itself felt through the introduction it secures to every new firm; the easy entrance it makes for traveling salesmen; the constant association in the mind of a firm's name with his line of goods; in all these and many more ways, a persistent, year is and year out, advertisement works directly or indirectly for the good of a firm.

S. H. Beardslee, engineer of the D. C. & E. R. R. R. Co., arrived home from Chicago on Tuesday.

Gen. John H. King, of Detroit, well known at the Charlevoix Resort, died at Washington, last Saturday the bridges of the line from Kalkaska to Mackinac, for turn-tables, and for the depot building at Charlevoix. The turn tables will accommodate the largest size locomotive, and Mr. B. has information that there will be at at least four Mogul freight engines on the road as soon as it is ready to operate. This does not look much as if the enterprise had collapsed, notwithstanding the croakers would have it so.

While our citizens are rejoicing at the change of name of the steamboat propeller "Champlain" to the "City of Charlevoix" and recounting the many benefits to be had from the change, we trust they will not forget to whom we are indebted for the change. We personally know that to J. Milo Eaton more than to any other one man in Charlevoix, is due the credit for the change, we having seen the letter from the treasury department to Hon. Don M. Dickinson, stating that the change had been ordered after having once been refused by that department, and quoting the letters of Mr. Eaton to Mr. Dickinson as giving the reasons for such change.

Purely Personal.

J. A. Hawkins returned to Chicago last Friday.

G. J. Grier went to Chicago, Monday, on business.

F. D. Phillips sold 15,000 cigars in one day last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Y. Cook returned from Fort Orange Friday.

Mrs. J. E. Wood returned Tuesday from her trip to Grand Rapids.

G. W. Beaman is at Williamston Ingham county this week.

Mrs. C. H. Ball is visiting her parents and friends in Carlevoix this week.

Joe Hallet begins to-day as shipping clerk for the Charlevoix Cigar Company.

S. H. Beardslee, engineer of the D. C. & E. R. R. Co., arrived home from Chicago on Tuesday.

Gen. John H. King, of Detroit, well known at the Charlevoix Resort, died at Washington, last Saturday night, of pneumonia.

P. B. Wachtel, of Petoskey, recently elected supervisor of Bear Lake township, will return from Washington in a few days to assume the duties of his office.

Dr. O. S. Wood left last Thursday for his trip in the west. After visiting Cheboygan and Manistique he will go to Minneapolis, and from thence to Washington territory.

Mrs. Wm. Joyce has had the misfortune to break one of her legs last last week. While riding with her husband on a sawlog, the sleigh ran very close to a high stump, and he thought he could get around out of the way she was dragged to the ground, with the result above stated.

W. H. Jarman, for a long time correspondent of the Journal from Eveline, has taken a step higher up, and is now struggling with the mysteries of the typographic art in the office of the Boyne Citizen. In his work for the JOURNAL Mr. Jarman has exhibited many of the elements which go to make up a successful newspaper man, and if his physical health permits the necessary close application to business, we have no doubt of his ultimate success.

Coming Events.

"CITY OF CHARLEVOIX."

The Name Given to the New Passenger Steamer of the Northern Michigan Line.

No event for months past has given our people such a thrill of pleasure as the following telegram received last Friday afternoon:

Washington, D. C., April 6.

J. MILO EATON, Charlevoix,
Collector at Milwaukee has been directed to grant papers to City of Charlevoix.

DON M. DICKINSON.

From the moment work was begun on the rebuilding of the Champlain, frequent desire has been expressed to have the new boat carry the name and become a living and moving advertisement for our ambitious village. All the influence possible was brought to bear on the owners of the line and the authorities at Washington, but every request was without success. The agents and owners of the line were persuaded, but they seemed to be unable to bring the necessary influence on the powers at Washington.

Several weeks ago, when the matter seemed utterly hopeless, Mr. Eaton wrote to Hon. Don M. Dickinson at Washington, reciting the history of the transaction from the beginning, quoting facts concerning the amount of new material in the boat, and the proportion of new to old, and asked his assistance. The result of that assistance is given in the above telegram. And for this our people have reason to be rejoice.

The following extract from a letter from Mr. Burke to Emrey Bros., agents in Charlevoix, (written, however, before the change of name was authorized) give the details of capacity of the new boat, list of offices, schedule, etc. for the season of 1888:

"No expense has been spared to make her first class in every way She will have cabin capacity for 96 first class passengers, and freight capacity for 800 tons. The name will be the only familiar thing about her. She will be ready to leave here at the opening of navigation through the straits, and will be officered as follows: Captain, Ira Bishop; Mate, Thos. Woods; Clerk, Jno. Murry; Steward, Ed. Dassel; Engineer, Jno. McAffery.

"The sailing days and route of our boats will be about the same during the excursion season; boats leaving Chicago Tuesdays and Fridays same as in seasons past. And everything shall be done on our part in the future same as if the part to take care of the business at Charlevoix. We shall not expect to make schedule time until after June 15th, but from the opening up to June 15, the boats will run and make as near schedule time as weather and business will permit.

"We shall commence receiving freight at this point on the 11th, inst, and if there is a fair prospect that a boat can reach 'your place we may start the Lawrence Saturday, the 14th. She will be officered as follows: Captain, Wm. Finnemay; Mate, Jos. Boyd; Clerk, Geo. E. Bond; Steward, Thos. Healy; Engineer, Wm. Burns."

Business Change.

On Monday of this week the Progressive Cigar Co., under the management of F. D. Phillips, passed into other hands, with sufficient capital to push it of all there is in it, and it will hereafter be known as the Charlevoix Cigar Co. Mr. Phillips has not entirely severed his connection with the shop, however, as he will take the road and introduce the goods among new dealers. Already large orders are being received from him daily.

Commencing less than a year ago with small capital, the business has grown beyond all anticipation, chiefly because of the excellent quality of goods sent out. Fourteen hands are now employed, and more will soon be needed to keep up with the increasing demand.

The factory is under the general supervision of Mr. L. W. Kirby a practical cigar maker of considerable experience, and no depreciation in quality from present high standard will be permitted.

With this assurance, our retail dealers will find it to their advantage to encourage the use of Charlevoix goods by consumers, as the money so paid circulates at home instead of going out of town.

Teacher's Association.

The spring meeting of the Charlevoix Teacher's Association will be held at the high school room in this village on Friday evening, May 11th, and Saturday, May 12th. The program will be published in full next week. It will include the following subjects: Teachers' Institutes; their value, how to use, and how to improve them. A plan for composition exercises with language work. Exercises outside the textbook; how much, and why necessary. How much time does the the teacher owe to the school? Advanced reading; objects and how most profitably taught. Free discussions will follow each paper. On Friday evening a spelling contest will be held, open to all. Also a pronouncing contest, likewise open to all. Books to the value of $2.25 are offered as a prize to the winner in each contest. These prizes are offered by Mr. D. E. McClure, representing Harper & Bros. Full particulars next week. This is to be the best meeting of the association thus far.

ROMANCE OF A CITY.

St. Petersburg, the Magnificent Capital of Russia, and How It Was Built.

A Swamp Transformed in a Few Years Into a City of Grand Palaces.

No Such Work Ever Prosecuted Before or Since in the World's History.

The Most Conspicuous Instance of the Power of Human Will in Existence.

A Graphic Description of the Czar's Winter Palace, the Finest Building on the Planet.

[WILLIAM ELEROY CURTIS, IN THE CHICAGO NEWS.]

Whether he comes from the east, or west, or southward, every traveler who visits Russia for the first time, and travels by rail, approaches the capital of Russia by the same route, through a dreary waste of sand, with occasional patches of swamps, which offer few traces of human habitation or industry. Therefore, the first impression of Petersburg is an exaggerated one, for it seems like an oasis in the desert. Within a few miles, as the train approaches the city, one notices an improvement in the landscape, and the habitations of the people. More of the forest plain is cleared of the fire and brambles that infest it; there are larger patches of cultivated ground, and fence are seen here and there. The highways are in better order, and occasionally one sees a country house, the peasants but the signs of poverty and desolation are more marked than the eye. There are glimpses of towers in the distance, showing where some noble or wealthy merchant has a country place, and occasionally the gilded or gaudily colored dome of a church or chapel enamelled with some so-questered convent or monastery, but there is not enough to prepare the eye for the panorama that is brought into view when the train takes a wide curve and brings the spires and domes of the capital before it. It is a city of palaces and churches, but the first glance fascinates the greatest.

Much has been written about the glories of Petersburg. Many writers have given it the highest place on the list of the world's capitals; but while it is grand it has not the stately commercial buildings of New York and Chicago and can never have, because it is built upon a swamp, nor has it the cleanly, artistic beauty of Paris, nor the modern and noble magnificence of London. The Russian architecture is much more elaborate, and the picturesque residences, vindicating grades, and shaded avenues of Washington, are far more pleasing to the eye. Still when one sees the Winter Palace, the most magnificent one that was built, and (as one frenzy succeeds another of the grandest and most luxurious palaces in the world, the mind is awakened by a succession of wonders and finds enough, too much, to admire.

The Romance of a City.

The history of Petersburg is a romance. Makowicka, a popular poet, wrote, "Illusions bands built Rome; divine hands created Venice, but he who sees Petersburg, will say, 'This town is the work of the devil.'"

The romance was in the genius of a tsar, at the character of Peter the Great, the most religious of his city. As I have said, the boasted glories of the Russian capital are exaggerated, and those who are familiar with the other great cities of the world will agree with me, but the most conspicuous triumph of the power of the human will in existence. There are a multitude of shabby buildings, and neither or granite. Most of the structures are of brick, the only building material available in a climate where the extremes of cold and heat follow each other, for Petersburg is at one season of the year one of the coldest places of human abode, and often in the summer as hot as Cairo or Naples. The bricks used are cheap and porous, and are invariably stucco'ed on the outside in grandiosity designs. The architectural effect is often ruined, by painting the exterior in hideous colors. The winter palace, one of the largest and most magnificent buildings in the world—I believe that only the Vatican and the palaces at Versailles come in greater area—is painted a dark crossing orange, while other mile structures are painted green, yellow, and white. But the prevailing hue is an imitation of sandstone, like Paris.

The Origin of Petersburg.

Ivan the Terrible conceived the idea of erecting a city on the Gulf of Finland, but it remained for Peter the Great, the most enterprising and progressive of all the Russian Czars, to carry it into effect, and he did it because he "wanted a window to look out upon Europe."

When Peter went to England in his youth, he was one of the sovereigns to leave the beaten path of travel. He not only studied shipbuilding in Holland, but he got a fair idea of the world's progress and the enterprise of other nations, and he saw, on his accession to power, that he owed his main defense on the northern boundary against the aggressive Swedes. He began by conquering Finland, and then selecting the most available site near the mouth of the Neva River, called an army of 60,000 men into service to subdue the swamps. Every year 40,000 workmen were drafted from different parts of the dominions, and they built a city on piles, made streets, and built walls, and the same, like Rome, disaster by blar, experienced, conquering everything, cleaning all the debris, and carrying out the plans of architects that were brought from all the other great cities of Europe.

Every boat upon the Neva or the Gulf of Finland, every cart upon the highway, had to bring to Petersburg a certain amount of building material, at certain intervals, as a tax, and every noble and property-owner in the empire had to contribute something to aid the construction of the palaces. All the nobles of the district were required to erect palaces for themselves, and the price they paid for the land was taken from them, from which the foundations of buildings were paid for. All the palaces in the Russian capital are built in the same style as St. Petersburg; to labor on the building of the town, and there was not a man, woman, or child in all the dominion of Peter but did something toward carrying out the Czar's great plan.

How the Work Was Done.

Peter has left to posterity, in a series of sketches, which show a great grand during the construction of his capital, a fair idea of the motives and the methods of a remarkable man and a remarkable work—the most important project that in this age would seem absurd. A monarch without technical knowledge, with none but rude ideas in his poor mind, and no skilled workmen, was about undertake at this era to erect a city of palaces in a swamp, would be considered as crazy as King Ludwig of Bavaria. That poor fellow never undertook anything half so insane. It was an unfortunate, but a great and a noble work of Peter, and, as he was an autocrat could execute; but, with the exception of some less enthusiasm, he commanded and directed the work; but his instruments were constantly breaking in his hands; his walls crumbled, and his foundations sunk in the mud, yet he toiled on with a persistence and a courage that has never been equaled, recognizing his failures, and seeing his mistakes soon enough to correct them, never allowing a word of despondency to escape himself, or permitting an expression of discouragement from others, and never ceasing his efforts, till he saw the ideal of his half-doubting eye.

Everything was on the most colossal scale, and every plan was approved by Peter before it could be executed. He determined how much land each noble should improve, and how much money he should invest in his residence, their extravagance, but contributing to the general grandeur. There is no record of people who rent so much upon external appearance, and who lived in such a manner as to make wonderfully extravagant than the Russian nobles of the time of Peter the Great, and the system of tax on made them so, and their love of luxury is as strong a passion as the opposite is non for strong drink or gambling. Therefore in Petersburg one finds more wealth and more extravagance than in any other useless gratification of the taste for display, and more wealth and extravagance, but anywhere else in the entire world. The visitor who has been educated in the thrift and economy of the Anglo-Saxon, who has been taught that the idle expenditure of wealth in the long run will be most impressed or all things by the extravagance displayed in every one of the original cities, places from so too or more, for, and when he stops to think that the money that have cost has been wrung from the degraded, desolate, and starving poor, he can scarcely restrain his indignant remonstrance. It speaks the pleasure of visiting a palace to see how the millions of which the poor have been deprived are thrown away.

ON THE WAY FROM MARKET.

The Winter Palace.

Take the Winter Palace, for instance, which I have said is the finest building in the world. It is about 1000 in the size of the Capitol at Washington, an square structure, fronting on the Neva, contains 1,700 rooms, and, it is said, that in olden times as many as 6,000 people, including a guard of soldiers, have been sheltered and fed under its roof. The roof itself used to be the dwelling place of a large colony when it was necessary to keep watchmen against fire there, and the Czar and Czarina were wont to present the reservoir from freezing by casting red hot cannon balls into the bath. These built into between the chimneys of the great palace, and their families there, and even raised chickens and pigs and goats merry feed above ground. But such guards are unnecessary now in the age of water works and fire engines.

The palaces of the Louis at Versailles, and of the German Emperor at Potsdam, are much more elegant and perfect specimens of architecture. The Queen's castle at Windsor is by far more picturesque, the new State, War and Navy Departments at Washington surpasses the Winter Palace in beauty and simple elegance, while the new Palais of Justice at Brussels, the finest architectural work of this century, is grander, more graceful, and pleasing in every respect, yet in none of them has so great an attempt at display been made or so much money expended. The Winter Palace is a mixture of splendor and shabbiness, and one finds it difficult to determine which dominate him most.

ST. GEORGE.

Interior Decorations.

The present building was erected upon the site of one occupied by the high admiral in the time of Peter the Great and bequeathed by him to Peter's son. In 1754 that was pulled down, and the present one, which was completed in 1762. Much of the interior was destroyed by fire in 1837, but was rebuilt, and the whole was restored to its present form in 1839, at a cost of about 5,000,000 rubles. The palace has been occupied by the Czars, and by all the czars till the present one, who will not live there, but has built a far grander palace, while he resides in the much smaller and less imposing house which he occupied when Czarina Prince on the Neva's Prospect, the finest of all the streets.

The visitor enters, which, however, is used only on occasions of ceremony, down from the landing of the carriage porte through a vestibule of marble, with wide stairways leading to the second floor and to the grand opulent rooms above. A stairway is adorned by giving of malachite, and it is said that this, 200 feet by 60, presents an array of dead figures in marble, as well as a portrait the heroes of Russian history. The throne-room is a magnificent hall of white and gold, so large that the entire White House at Washington could be placed in it and lost to view, but it is not overdone with gilding, for the eye rests on the colossal proportions of the room, and the ceiling is so high

FARM AND GARDEN.

NEW VARIETIES OF AN OLD FASHIONED FLOWER.

Care of Cows During the Spring and Summer—A Novelty in Pepper—Value of Safe and Gentle Horses—How to Fertilize Crops.

Incorporated in the report of the transactions of the Massachusetts Horticultural society is an essay by Dr. C. A. Geneesman on "The Rational Fertilization of Garden Crops and Fruits." Following are some useful extracts from the same:

A, RYE; B, TURNIP; C, BEET; D, CARROT; E, LUCERNE.

One of the first requirements for a healthy condition and a subsequent successful propagation of any plant consists in adopting a well devised system of fertilization. An indifferent system of manuring is at the root of a great many failures. A system of manuring is rational when it is based upon the results of a careful examination into the composition of the plant under cultivation and on a due consideration of its natural qualifications for availing itself of the needed plant food, both from the atmosphere and the soil. Plants well well developed and extensive root system may prosper where those with a compact one will fail, and the same statement applies with equal force to the character of their leaf system. (See illustrations in which "A" represents rye, "B" turnip, "C" sugar beet, "D" carrot, "E" lucerne and "F" potato.)

To determine with certainty the composition of a plant, especially with reference to its soil constituents, requires repeated examinations in different stages of its growth, and when raised upon different kinds of soil. The good effects of barnyard manure and wood ashes rest on their complex character and on their influence over various physical and chemical qualities of the soil. Experience proves that barnyard manure is most efficient when used for the reproduction of those crops which have contributed materially to its manufacture, and the same proposition may be maintained with reference to the manurial value of vegetable compost and ashes.

To raise plants rationally implies information of two kinds, a knowledge of the special wants of the plant as regards the absolute amounts and relative proportions of the various plant foods, and a familiarity with the composition of the different kinds of manurial matter at our disposal.

POTATO PLANT.

It ought to be borne in mind: 1. All cultivated plants contain the same elementary constituents, yet no two of them in the same absolute amounts and relative proportions. 2. These plant constituents are furnished in part by the surrounding atmosphere, in part by the soil and some in varying proportions by both. 3. The essential plant constituents are not wanted in different plants in the same proportions at the various successive stages of growth, but are wanted at different stages of growth in different absolute amounts and relative proportions. Each plant has its especial wants at different stages of its development. Grain crops require much nitrogen in an available form during their later period of growth, when blooming and forming seeds; large vines need a large amount of potash during the growing and maturing of the grapes. 4. The absolute amount of essential mineral constituents may vary in the same plant without affecting, as a rule, the general character of that plant; yet not one of the essential elementary mineral constituents can serve in place of another one to any marked extent without altering, in many instances in a serious way, the relative proportion of the organic constituents of plants. 5. The particular form in which we apply various articles of plant food, as well as the special circumstances in which they may be applied, exerts quite frequently a decided influence, not only on the quantity of the crop, but also on its quality. 6. The natural resources of the soil in available plant food have proved, as a rule, ultimately insufficient for a remunerative management of the farm, the garden and the orchard.

Care ought to be exercised to secure within certain limits a liberal supply of every essential food constituent of the plant under cultivat'on, so as to meet promptly its periodical wants when called for. The heavier the crop the larger should be the return of the constituents carried off from the soil. Manure we must bear in mind that success does not depend on any exceptionally large amount of one or the other, prominent article of plant food, such as phosphoric acid, potash or nitrogen, but on a liberal supply of every essential plant constituent; for of the essential articles of plant food that one which is present in the soil in the most limited proportion controls the ultimate result.

Value of Safe Well Trained Horses.

The value of a gentle and safe horse is difficult to estimate. Dollars and cents, says National Stockman, do not always express it. Without any trouble in the way of upsets or runaways the true value of a sturdy and reliable horse is often lost sight of. This matter presents itself in its strongest light, perhaps, when driving and carriage horses of a high order are placed upon the market. Such horses find the best buyers, people who are willing to pay the most money for them, among the wealthier class of the citizens of our great cities. These buyers are generally obliged to trust the handling of their team to servants and the drivers, and to them safety means a great deal, something that has an absolute market value.

People who are able to afford the luxury of carriages and horses are in a position to pay for what suits them, and when they find combined in the same animal style, size, action, endurance and a gentle disposition they are generally willing to pay a good round sum for it, the disposition playing no small part in the makeup of the value. When a wealthy man has to trust his own life and the lives of his family behind a team which he does not need to be ashamed of as far as spirit and mettle are concerned, with the reins in the hands of some coachman who he is not positive is entirely trustworthy in the way of handling horses, it is not to be wondered at that he looks toward the disposition and gentleness of the horses when he is estimating their value.

The moral then to be drawn from all this is that thorough training is the only kind that it pays to give to good horses. There are but few horses that cannot be made gentle and quiet by the proper kind of treatment, and if the owner of a horse is not capable of giving this kind of training it will pay to employ some one who is.

Varieties of the Iris.

Among the first flowers brought to this country by our flower loving ancestors was the sort known at the present time under the various names of iris, fleur de lis and flag. The pioneer in this country was the old English iris in two colors, dark blue and pure white.

The irises are hardy perennials, showy, beautiful, easy to grow and general favorites. There is a large assortment of species and varieties, and of recent years many new and worthy sorts have been introduced.

Nothing among hardy herbaceous plants, says a writer in The American Garden, from which Journal the accompanying is reproduced, has created a sensation for a long time like that produced by the iris kaempferi, which is daily gaining favor with the public. They are natives of Siberia and Japan. But we are indebted to hybridization by those clever gardeners, Mr. Joye, for upward of a hundred varieties. They are often cultivated as sub-aquatics, and like plenty of water during the growing season. They do well in tubs, a small one placed in another containing a few inches of water. Some of the flowers measure ten inches across, and, if less veined than others, are spotted, striated, splashed and dotted with vivid colors in a true Oriental style. The flowers are flat in form, distinct, beautiful and large, and in ease of cultivation seem to equal the old German iris.

Cure of Milk Cows.

When cows are first turned to grass in the spring, if feed is abundant, they ought to be allowed to be pasture but a few hours each day for several days; in a word, the change of food should be gradual. Carelessness on this really important point has resulted often in serious consequences.

To the oft repeated question, "Shall grain be fed to cows in summer?" the general answer is, "No, not if the animals have an abundance of good grass." The most natural, and at the same time healthful, food for milk cows in summer is the green grass of a good pasture. When shorts and bran are obtainable at cheap rates, and grass begins to fail, these may be used to excellent effect in supplementing the grass. Mingled with the hay and fed to cows, the milk gives a larger percentage of cream, while the quantity of milk is also increased.

It often happens that when cows are giving an extra quantity of milk they incline to become thin and weak. This condition should be prevented by the judicious use of concentrated food. The strength and condition of the animal must be kept up at all times for best results.

A New Pepper from China.

The new pepper from China, which has been christened "Celestial pepper," is one of the most ornamental varieties grown. In our cuts are represented two peppers of natural size, but no idea of the color is, of course, given. Up to the time these are fully ripe they are of a delicate creamy yellow hue, and when fully grown change to a vivid scarlet. This striking contrast in colors renders the plant a beautiful object as well as a useful one.

THE CELESTIAL PEPPER.

Seedmen who have grown this pepper on their own grounds have catalogued it this year with their novelties and specialties. Burpee says of it: "The plant sets its peppers very early and continues until frost, branching freely and bearing profusely. It is wonderfully productive. The peppers are all carried upright, are of superior quality and of fine sharp flavor."

Things Farmers Tell One Another.

Mr. E. S. Carman names the "telephone" as one of the best of the intermediate pens.

Sweet corn, generally speaking, thrives better when planted in rows than in hills; this to about eight inches apart in the row.

Sweet potatoes are a good crop for a light soil, and are a valuable addition to a farm, if there is a market value.

Ashes are a good fertilizer for potatoes, and should be applied in the hill.

Bone dust is a large assortment of species and varieties, and of recent years many new and worthy sorts have been introduced.

Nothing among hardy herbaceous plants, says a writer in The American Garden, from which Journal the accompanying is reproduced, has created a sensation for a long time like that produced by the iris kaempferi, which is daily gain-

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

How Judge Gary Revenged Himself on a Friend.

One day while the Anarchist trial was going on in Judge Gary's court, Mr. William King, who is upward of 80 years old, sought admission, but was told he could not go in. Going to the state attorney's office, Mr. King expressed that he was the friend of Judge Gary, and he was sure the judge would let him in if he knew he was there. The old man told him the court room was full, but that he would try to find a place within the bar. In a few moments the two entered the court room, and started to walk down the aisle.

"Sit down," said Judge Gary, sternly.

"Your honor," explained Mr. Furthman, "this is an old friend of years."

"Sit down," said Judge Gary, louder and more sternly.

Mr. King looked as if he would like to have a big hole come up through the floor and swallow him. There was no place for him to sit down, and still the judge kept calling for him to do so. He looked appealingly at his old friend, but the old friend only glared on him savagely and repeated the awful command, "Sit down."

When the old gentleman had succeeded in reaching the bar Mr. Grinnell got up and gave him his seat. When court was adjourned Judge Gary came down from the bench, rubbing his hands together gleefully and laughing close to his face.

"I made him sit down, didn't I?" said he to Mr. Grinnell in Mr. King's presence. "I'd teach him not to beat me at whist as he did last night. I wish I had half a chance, I would have gotten rid of him." and grabbing Mr. King by the arm he took his old crony out to lunch with him.—Chicago News.

Ben Butler's Big Appetite.

The gastronomical peculiarities of great men are frequently mentioned in the press. Of all the public characters who visit Washington, I am told that Ben Butler heads the list as far as his ability for stowing away food is concerned. He literally "takes the cake." As for the cleaning process, his weakness, and it is the testimony here that has most ado cook in the house and turn the farinaceous flapjack fast enough to meet the demands of "Ben's" appetite. In the lower part of Pennsylvania avenue there stands a little hotel, an unpretentious little caravansary, noted for the correctness of its cuisine and its excellent service. It is a quiet resort, with all the comforts of an old English tavern and the seclusion so dear to the average government clerk. Ben Butler frequently comes to this place to order his favorite dish.

"I have heard of appetites," said an attendant to me the other day, "but I never have exactly what we call a great appetite. I saw Mr. Butler. I remember the first time he came here he ordered two porterhouse steaks, a dozen fried eggs, with fried onions, raw fried potatoes and pancakes to suit. I thought it was for a party of four, and I fixed plates, napkins, knives and forks accordingly.

"'What the —— are you bringing all these dishes in here for? Do you suppose I've invited a regiment to dine with me? Take them away, should say the waiter.

"While I cleared away the dock Mr. Butler was then impatiently with a fork in one hand and a knife in the other, waiting for me to set the orders on the table. There was no waiting for the coffee. The man he sliced through at one blow, cut out a section and apparently swallowed it in one mouthful. The average man does an oyster after giving it two bites. Ben swallows a biscuit in the same way, and before I could turn around he thundered out:

"'Bring in some more pancakes.'

"I rushed back to the kitchen and detailed the situation to the head cook.

"'Why, dat must be Mr. Butler,' said the cook, knowingly, and, calling to an assistant, he told him to make up a big panful of pancakes faster and to be mighty quick about it, for dar is a man in de dinin' room wid an appetite like a rat hole.' When I got back to the dining room one of the porterhouse steaks was missing. It had disappeared so quickly that I began to doubt whether I had brought it or not, when my mind was settled by Mr. Butler, who said, as he wiped his mouth and chin:

"'That steak was just right, but this one is not quite rare enough.'

"But he fell in it all the same and destroyed it in large sections, supplemented by mouthfuls of egg, potatoes and onions, and an occasional sip of coffee.

"'Where the —— are those pancakes?' he shouted, while glaring at me with one good eye, and then he turned as if to the cook:

"'Bring in those pancakes!'

"Well, sir, you may believe me or not, but Mr. Butler ate up the entire dish, was pancakes, and as for the steak, eggs and potatoes, there wasn't enough left to feed a cat. And then he got up and walked down the avenue as briskly as if he had only lunched on half a dozen raw oysters."—New York Sun.

Not Likely to Forget It.

Maj. Thacher, of Portland, Me., is one of the few veterans who know that Virginia was the state in which were fought the twelve cavalry regiments into the war. He got his information this way: He went out with his regiment from Warrenton, Va., on a raid. When he returned at night he rode to the place whence he had set out and came upon a cavalry camp asleep.

"What regiment is this?" he shouted.

"The Twelfth," was the answer.

"The Twelfth what?" he asked.

"Twelfth Virginia, you —— fool!" was the answer from one who was surprised that any one shouldn't know that there was but one Twelfth cavalry regiment in the service.

Maj. Thacher didn't wait for further information, but got away. He afterward learned that the Union troops had fallen back and the Confederates taken their place.—New York Sun.

THE Evolution of a Poet.

"We are always glad to note the result of close application, determination to succeed, and true American grit. Peter Funks, Dunman, of Ovona, sent us a poem about a year ago, which, while bristling with gems of literary acumen, was not exactly suited to the requirements of this paper. We returned it with the advice that he persevere in his efforts, and that he be down, so, with magnificent determination at the same time not allowing his brain to run away with the practical affairs of life, is evidenced by his coming in today with a forty-four thousand pamphlet, to which he has added the following beautiful sentiment exquisitely engrossed in purple ink:

"When this you eat,
Remember Pete.

Bold Western Hyperbole.

"Did it rain?" exclaimed the western man, in the course of a thrilling recital of border life. "Stay, it rained so hard that afternoon that the water stood three feet on a slant roof.—Buffalo Courier.

Newspapers in 1888.

From the edition of Geo. P. Rowell & Co.'s "American Newspaper Directory," just issued, we learn that in its twenty-sixth year, it appears that the newspapers and periodicals of all kinds now issued in the United States are 15,104 in 1888, now number 16,310, showing a growth of 950 in one year, but 22 months and of 7,186 in 10 years.

The publishers of the directory assert that the statement made by them that the proprietor of a newspaper undertakes to state what has been his exact circulation, has been quite generally told the truth is an erroneous one. And they conspicuously offer a reward of $100 for every instance in their book for this year, where it can be proven that the detailed report received from a publisher was untrue.

Indians Fifty Years Ago.

"What kind of people were the Indians in those days?" was asked.

"The best people I ever knew," was the prompt reply. "They never knew any more except what the whites taught them. They naturally taught each other all the evil they knew. They were honest as the day and faithful into death when they had professed a friendship for you. I have known Indians who professed friendship for me to kill other Indians who wanted to do me harm. Brother would kill brother. No book ever written or anything else ever published has done more to debauch the Indian character. The vice and devilry of the whites have made them what they are.—Omaha Herald.

A Wonderful Grapevine.

Mr. A. F. Tift has upon his place in Key West, Fla., a wonderful grapevine covering a great trellis. This vine bears four crops every year. The grapes grow in exceedingly compact clusters, many of them weighing as much as eight pounds, and the vine is literally loaded with bunches. It is a native of the West India islands, probably of Jamaica. As an illustration of the dense nature of the bunches, the grapes grow so thick upon them that the center grapes frequently cannot reach the sunlight to mature. The outside grapes can be picked off as needed, but the center grapes remain until the outside layer left to ripen.—Chicago Times.

Students Trick a Spectator.

At one of the city colleges, last week, while a class was busy anatomizing the body of a colored pauper, a visitor made himself disgusted by his inquisitiveness. To get even with him one of the students cut off an ear and surreptitiously placed it in the visitor's pocket. A few minutes later the bell signaled the close of the exercises for the day, and as the victim of the joke put his hand in his pocket for his gloves he pressed, instead, the cold, clammy ear of the subject he had been watching. With a look of horror he flung it on the dissecting table and broke for the door amid the laughter of the class.—Indianapolis Journal.

Making the Most of It.

"You seem to be enjoying yourself, Bobby," remarked one of the guests at dinner party.

"Yes," assented Bobby, with his mouth full, "I am makin' the most of it, 'cause I don't get no pies at home. At dinner like this, it's always cold pickin' for the next thirty days."—Harper's Bazar.

The Force of Habit.

Wong Chin Foo says that in China, when a highway robber is caught, his head is chopped off. When he becomes an author it seems odd, at this distance, that a little thing like decapitation should prevent a man from pursuing the profession of highwayman; but a human will be a human.—Rochestown Herald.

Keep Your Eyes Peeled.

The Democratic masses cannot be too anxious in watching every scheme to defeat and defeat them in their choice for next President. When the Democrats shall have become aroused intrigue and conspiracy will fee from their presence.—Philadelphia Record.

A Long Training.

Brown—Do you know how long Robinson has been keeping house?

Smith—No; but it must be a good many years. I took dinner with him the other day, and he carved a duck without spilling it on the floor.—Harper's Bazar.

A Paradox.

In a newspaper office the truth is well known,
And the people will oft of the paradox speak,
Although signs of labor he never thus shows,
Yet the devil's to pay at the end of each week.
—Boston Budget.

DEMOCRATS IN THE PAST.

HOW, WHEN AND WHERE CERTAIN FAMOUS CONVENTIONS WERE HELD.

Origin of Democracy—The Greek Demos, Roman Plebeians, Etc. —"Jac-bins." Jefferson—The First National Convention, 1832—Succeeding Conventions.

ANDREW JACKSON.

In one of the facts of history that ever since constitutional government began has been one party advocating more power and special privileges, and another party advocating more liberty and a more equitable share of the good things of life. The first party has been variously claimed for its self most of the virtue and learning, and for the various countries, the 2,500 years, stigmatized as the "aristocracy," "the few," "the nobles," "the patricians," "the rich," "the wealthy," "the aristocrats," "aristocrats," "the plebeians," "Jacobins," and finally "Democrats." It has been the delight of the luxurious rich in all ages to make fun of the "ignorant Democrats," and the "greasy and sweaty Democrats," and the comic poets and satirists, who lived by pandering to the patricians, have left us some very funny sketches of them as "Clown, the Democrat," in Plautus; the "agrarian Gracchi" and other democrats. Similarly in the United States from Jefferson to Cleveland, the party of the laboring man, the advocate of personal freedom and low taxes, has been sneered at and laughed at as "ignorant Jacobins." But all the same, this much abused party has ruled those United States for nearly two-thirds of their national nationality; and on the 5th of June, at St. Louis, it will name the president for four years more.

It is a good time, therefore, to review the national conventions of this curious party, which, in the elegant language of Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, "knows brains enough to run a country," and yet has somehow ruled the original area of the United States, paid two national debts, and lived by two-thirds of that Efforts to Hold Proclaimed Meetings Frustrated by Police—Many Persons Injured.

SUNDAY last was an exciting day in Ireland by a Dublin dispatch. Mr. Balfour's assertion that it proclaimed districts the National League was a thing of the past had a palpable refutation in numerous meetings, which in Clare, Galway, and Cork were of a character demonstrating that the league was anything at all but a thing of the past. The meetings were everywhere large, and were marked by the greatest enthusiasm. They were in most instances dispersed by the police and military, but the organizers were of opinion that they effectually accomplished the object they had in view. In Kilrush, County Clare, where John Redmond, M. P., and Dillon, M. P., attended, the police attacked the people with bayonets. A priest was assaulted and several persons were wounded. There were violent scenes at Ennis, where Michael Davitt attended. The Longford meeting, at which William O'Brien, M. P., attended, was disturbed, but the meeting came off nevertheless. In Macroom, County Cork, there were scenes of violence. Dr. Tanner, M. P., and the authorities had a disagreeable time which ended in Dr. Tanner being arrested.

BISMARCK.

The Chancellor Consents to Retain Office to Preserve the Unity of Germany.

A CABLE dispatch from Berlin states that Prince Bismarck was without any resignation, but solely from the consideration that the domination of Empress Victoria would speedily lead to the breaking-up of German unity. Nothing since the accession of Emperor Frederick has occurred that has so strongly animated the Prussian conservatives against the Empress as the marriage question. It now becomes known that the Empress will impel her helpless husband to urge Prince Bismarck, without regard to the respect due to the late Emperor or to the national safety. The National Zeitung says that the betrothal is postponed, but that circumstances may arise under which Prince Bismarck will no longer oppose the union."

Gen. Quincy A. Gillmore Dead.

GEN. QUINCY A. GILLMORE, who became famous during the civil war while directing the siege operations against Charleston, died at his residence in Brooklyn. He was born in Lorain County, Ohio, was graduated at West Point, graduating high in his class in 1849 at the age of 23, and was assigned to the engineer corps. He was 68 years old.

Cooking Had a Narrow Escape.

A NEW YORK special says that Senator Conkling's condition is much improved, but his physicians will not yet pronounce him out of danger. Mr. Conkling has been very ill indeed, and it was thought at one time that he was dying. His illness is directly attributable to the blizzard. It is now hoped that he will soon be all right again."

Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

A WASHINGTON special to the Chicago Tribune of Monday says: "The Illinois politicians are saying in Washington that Judge Schofield, of the State Supreme Bench, will be selected to succeed the late Chief Justice Waite. Their confidence is apparently well founded."

A Female Smuggler.

CUSTOMS inspectors at New York searched Mrs. Frank De Goss, a Chicago boardinghouse keeper, just arrived from Antwerp on the steamer Belgenland, and found a pair of gold earrings in her hat and three watches, several rings and other jewelry in her pockets. The jewelry was sent to the assistant treasurer.

THE negro boy Zephyr Davis, who murdered little Maggie Gaughan in Chicago, five weeks ago, has been sentenced to hang on the 12th of May.

THE is officially announced that Prince Jesus in Colosa, numbering 10,000 families, chiefly natives of Austria and Roumania, will be expelled shortly.

CONGRESS.

Another Day of Filibustering in the House of Representatives.

THE opponents of the direct-tax bill continued their obstructive tactics in the House on the 7th inst., and the day was consumed in calling the roll on dilatory motions. In answer to a roll-call a maximum Cox about 150 of the Democratic members of the House met in response to the evening session, which was held pursuant to a resolution adopted Saturday, providing for the payment of the Territories of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico should be passed at this session providing for Constitutional amendments for the purpose of the enfranchisement of these Territories for the election or rejection at an election in November, 1888, of such amendments as may be reported by the Committee on Territories.

THE EASTERN STATES.

AT the recent annual conference of the Methodist Church in Philadelphia resolutions were adopted deprecating the exclusion of the native Indian language in the Government schools. President Cleveland was written a reply to the letter, inclosing the resolutions, in which he expresses surprise at the conclusions reached by the signatories. He defends the exclusion of the native vernacular from the regular course of instruction and has substitutions of the English language as best calculated to prepare the Indians for their struggle for existence, and thinks the use of the Indian tongue in religious instruction will answer every purpose.

Mrs. Grover Cleveland has been elected President of the Eastern Alumnæ Association of Wells College. The lady of the White House, who is a graduate of the college, has written a letter accepting the tendered Presidency.

ARTHUR SHAFFER, aged 32, was hanged at Lock Haven, Pa., for the murder of Isaiah Colby and his wife last August.

AFTER an illness of several months, Benjamin Harry Brewster, United States Attorney General during President Arthur's administration, died in Philadelphia, aged 72 years.

JACOB SHARP, notorious for his connection with New York street railway schemes, who was convicted of bribery, died in Albany.

A WILKESBARRE (Pa.) dispatch says that "Mrs. Mary Stacey, of Wasonia, Pa., was engaged in the manufacture of whisky, when the pot containing the same toppled over into a hot fire. The fluid blazed up, setting fire to her clothing, and she was burned to death in a few moments. Three of her children who tried to save her were also burned, and will die. The husband and father, John Sharp, who was at work at the time, is reported to have become insane."

THE adoption of the Rhode Island earthquake amendment to the constitution is being vigorously discussed in all quarters, says a Providence dispatch. There can be found hardly a three intelligent men who agree as to the meaning of its provisions, and it is certain to come before the Supreme court for construction. The Democrats expect that 5,000 of the 6,000 naturalized citizens of the State will become qualified voters next fall for the election of 1888. The total number of aliens who will eventually come in under this law is upward of 30,000; there being 20,000 who will become naturalized as soon as possible. The correct-ness of this vote on the amendment is: Approved, 29,167; rejected, 12,657.

THE Italian band, the Panza Avellinese, at No. 72 Thompson street, New York, is broken and the manager, Aurelio de Tommis, has deposited with $20,000. All the deserters are poor and ignorant Italians. The whereabouts of the manager is unknown.

FRANK L. WILSON, a clerk in the Boston and Providence freight office at Boston, has confessed to embezzlements of the company's funds. His savings may reach $10,000.

REV. M. KOCHMAN, the evangelist, better known to the theater-going public as Doctor Bob Hart of the minstrel stage, which he quit to preach the gospel, was found dead in bed at New York. He had been on a spree.

ELEPHANTINE BORDEN CONNARD is confined to his room in New York with an abscess in his right ear.

THE WESTERN STATES.

AN account over in Michigan has unexpectedly demonstrated that for the sake of a parade a man may safely jump out of a balloon ten thousand feet above the earth. The trial was a daring one, but its utility is not very clear, as very few people ever find it necessary to jump from a balloon when it is ten thousand feet from the ground.

One of the worst accidents that have ever happened on the Iowa and Dakota Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Road occurred on Thursday, near New Hampton, Iowa.

The west-bound passenger train plunged over a bridge into the Wapsie River, swollen to a raging torrent by the recent rains. The cars were piled together in the river where the water was ten feet deep, the two passenger coaches following. Five persons were killed and over twenty injured, many of them so severely that they will not recover. Immediately the shrieks of men, women, and children were heard above the roar of the rushing waters. In less than thirty minutes not a person remained in either of these coaches. Following are the names of the dead: William Andersen, Lemont, Wis.; Gene Martin, Christiansen, Denmark; Mrs. Ole Iverson, Lake Prairie, Minn.; Christopher Kimball, St. Paul; James Kimball, Minneapolis, Minn.; Mary, his daughter of Mr. Hornbacker.

A WIND and hail storm raged at Faribault, Minn., for fifteen minutes, during which time the roofs of several store buildings were torn off, telegraph and telephone poles blown down, and a total loss of about $100,000 caused. A tornado demolished several buildings in Sioux City, Iowa, and another died an hour later too up the Illinois Central track at Marion, fifty miles distant.

A MAN accident is reported by telegraph from Palmyra, Mo., in which a score of school children had a narrow escape from death.

IT was Arbor or Tree-Planting Day in Michigan, and fifty forty little ones started out with their teachers to dig trees in a neighboring grove and plant them in the school-yard. Twenty of the children were in a sleigh when the team took a runaway course on a frozen creek. The rotten planks covering the well gave way and fifteen children were precipitated to the bottom. It was twenty feet to the water, and the creek was full of ice. Two of the children, Arthur Little and May Dolan, were drowned before any help could be rendered. Help was summoned and the little one were hauled up as fast as possible. Three of the rescued are not expected to live.

ADMIRAL WHITE, recently Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce at Cincinnati, has been indicted for embezzlement and for receiving goods under false pretenses.

A PATIENT and sick man who attempted to row across the St. Clair River from Port Huron to Sarnia, Mich., had their boat capsized by a mass of ice and both were drowned.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

A MEMPHIS dispatch says that just before daylight Wednesday morning the jail at Trout's Point, Miss., was discovered on fire. Desperate efforts were made to release the five prisoners it contained, but without success, and they perished in the flames. They were William Gray (white), Fred. Powers (white), Brown, another white man, John Brown (colored), and a negro boy, aged 15, whose name Gray set the jail on fire in order to be had threatened to do, rather than go to the penitentiary.

IN a saloon fight at El Paso, Tex., between Bert Penn and William Owens, colored desperadoes, Penn was killed, and Sander Oliver and Lillie St. Clair, white women in the saloon, were shot, the former fatally.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "The House Democrats on Saturday unanimously confirmed the decision of the sub-committee in favor of Gen. Post's title to the seat as Representative of the Tenth District of Illinois. Before beginning the tedious examination of the ninety pages of printed record it was agreed by the sub-committee that their guide upon disputed points of law should be the statutes of Illinois, as construed by the Supreme Court of the State. The disputed votes were taken up one by one, and it was found that irregular and illegal votes had been cast for both parties to the contest, but after giving Mr. Worthington the benefit of all doubts the net result of the sifting was about fifty-nine majority for Gen. Post.

THE Public Lands Committee of the House has decided to report bills forfeiting about 40,000,000 acres of the Northern and Southern Pacific Railroad land grants and the Oregon land grant.

THE President has made the following appointments: George J. Bangs, United States Attorney for the Southern District of California; Ezekel R. Smith, of North Carolina, to be Minister Resident and Consul General to Liberia.

A STRONG protest is entered by Secretary Bayard against Germany's high-handed proceedings in the Samoan Islands. Minister Pendleton is authorized to convey to Prince Bismarck the impression that the United States Government is quite put out about the matter.

TO FIND a man who doesn't want an office has astonished President Cleveland enormously. He had sent to the Senate the nomination of J. Marion Brooks as District Attorney for the Southern District of California, but before the nomination could be acted upon along came a letter from Mr. Brooks stating that since being tendered the appointment he has made over a million dollars in real estate and doesn't care for the office now. Accordingly another man was nominated.

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

A DISPATCH from Wichita (Kans) says: "Assistant Attorney General Hollowell, is conspicuous for his futile attempts to enforce prohibition, is employed by a recent move of the State. He has gone to Washington as the Oklahoma Band, with power to do business in Wichita, has been directed, others were duly elected, the Republicans for the election of Mr. Hinkle, and also elected Mr. Hinkle, and also elected Mr. Hinkle, and also elected

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids, WEDNESDAY, MAY, 10TH, 1888, At 12 o'clock noon,

For the purpose of electing delegates to the Democratic National Convention, called to meet at St Louis, Missouri, June 5, 1888, the selection of a State Central Committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

The convention will elect four delegates and four alternates at large, twenty-two district delegates from each congressional district and twenty-two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, from each congressional district, and a chairman at large.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the county they represent.

The delegates from each Congressional District will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: Two district delegates, two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, one vice-president of the convention, and one member each for the committee on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

All voters who are in accord with the present Democratic administration in its efforts to reduce taxation to the legitimate wants of the national government, economically administered, are invited to participate in the selection of delegates to this convention.

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.
JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four (4) delegates.

ROSCOE CONKLING died Tuesday evening April 17, in New York, after a brief illness. In his death the people lose a gentleman, a lawyer, and a statesman.

THE death of the oldest printer in the world occurred at Dublin, Ireland, recently. His name was Partkess Jolly. He was one hundred and four years old, and pulled the first sheet of the Edinburgh Journal, more than seventy-five years ago.

PUBLIC PRINTER BENEDICT is now strictly enforcing the eight hour law in every department of the Government Printing Office. The force is divided into two sections, one beginning work at 8 a. m. and continuing until 5 p. m. with an hour for dinner, the other beginning at 5 p. m., and working until 1 a. m.

THE governor-general of Canada will shortly issue a proclamation placing upon the free list certain natural products, the equivalent of which has been placed on the United States free list. This action is taken at the request of the United States government, and is in accord with the Canadian government's expressed policy of reciprocity.

THE CHICAGO GLOBE is the name of a new democratic paper established in Chicago, last week, designed as an unflinching supporter of the administration of Grover Cleveland. It is edited and managed by four of the leading writers of the Chicago Times when that paper was in the zenith of its glory as the strongest and best democratic newspaper in the west. What the Times was then, the projectors intend to make the Globe now.

THE house committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has authorized a favorable report on the Dunn bill making it lawful for citizens of the United States to buy vessels, built in whole or in part in any foreign country, import free of duty or other charges and have them registered as vessels of the United states; and to be entitled to all the rights and subject only to the same regulations as vessels built wholly in the United States.

THE envelope "trust" having succeeded in monopolizing the business and putting up prices 50 per cent, is now engaged in sending out circulars calling upon dealers to do all in their power to boycott the government and its stamped envelopes because the government has a five-year contract for all the envelopes it wants, and the trust dare not put up the price of envelopes further for fear of driving business to the government supply. We fancy that these consumers will have a lively time of it boycotting Uncle Sam. Why not put envelopes on the free list and knock the trust out.—Cheboygan Democrat.

CHARLEVOIX people have reasons to appreciate the following praise from a republican paper, the Detroit Tribune, to a democratic congressman, the Hon. S. O. Fisher. The Tribune says: "Congressman Fisher has done excellent service for his state in the matter of securing appropriations for the Michigan rivers and harbors. The total amount appropriated by the bill, which is now almost ready to be reported to the house is $19,432,783. Of this, Michigan secures about $2,250,000 all told. The greener portion of this goes to the "Soo," and the Hay Lake channel of course, but the other harbors of the state are well provided for, and it is a long time since Michigan claims have been so well considered as well as they have this year. The member from Bay City has been indefatigable in working for the interest of his state, and he is entitled to all the credit that accrued to the passage of such a bill. He has of course been materially aided in his arguments by all the members of the delegation who had interests at stake, and without a worker on the committee, arguments would not have carried so much weight."

The Copper Trust.

The duty on copper ores is 2½ cents a pound. The imposition of this duty was supposed to be for the purpose of developing the rich mines of copper in this country, and thus building up a great industry, with a view of cheapening the price of that metal by stimulating competition. For years the people of the United States have been purchasing this copper in the hope that it would, under the stimulating influences of the tariff, be cheaper. But what is the result? A French syndicate controls the produce of our copper mines for the next three years, and in this syndicate is placed the direction of the Calumet and Hecla, Tamarack Quincy, Franklin, Osceola, Atlantic, Huron, Central, Copper Falls, and Algomez mines. The owners of these mines, to which the people of the United States have for many years paid tribute to help them as "infant industries," consent to put the price of copper at 18 cents a pound, and to take a share in the profits of all sold above that price. In order that the price may be enhanced, the production of copper is to be limited, the Calumet and Hecla being limited to 150,000,000 pounds in three years, the Tamarack to 55,000 in the same time, and so on. The world's production of copper last year was about four hundred and twenty million pounds, and as this syndicate, of which our "pauper" industry forms an important part, controls mines that last year produced 400,000,000 pounds of that copper, it is easy to see what a death-grip the syndicate has on all who use copper and on every industry into which that material enters. The price of copper in New York is usually between 10 and 11 cents a pound, and, with a bottom price of 13 and a limited production, together with the tariff imposed, it is easy to see that the United States end of this gigantic fraud is not likely to prove "a dead-head in the enterprise." To such ends does our protective tariff now contribute.—Chicago News.

The Mills Tariff Bill

The most effective and meritorious provisions of the bill are those which place tin plates and raw wool on the free list, and reduce the duties on woolen goods. The revenue now collected from tin plates is about $5,000,000. In these two items more than half the reduction by transfers to the free list is accounted for. The reduction on woolen manufactures is estimated at $12,000,000. The freeing of tin plates will relieve the canning industries of a burden, and favor the export trade in canned goods, which is exposed without the possibility of protection to foreign competition.

The new woollen schedule is really the best feature of the measure. It is so framed as to relieve the people of a tax of $8,000,000 a year now paid to the government, and of a further protective tax of at least $7,000,000. At the same time, it favors, rather than endangers, the interest of our wool growers. This schedule is strictly in line with the president's suggestions, excepting in that it provides for ad valorem instead of specific duties. The hottest of the fight will be on this schedule. The tariff reformers must defend it and hold it at all hazards. If they loose it, they lose the battle. If they are wise they will stop their filibustering on a side issue, and force the fighting right here.—Chicago Globe.

Webster on Tariff Reform

Daniel Webster is one of the idols of the war tariff defenders. But this is what the immortal Daniel said about tariff reform fifty years ago, when the Treasury had a big surplus to get rid of:

"I have no hesitation in declaring that the income from customs must be reduced. It need be reduced at the hazard of injury to some branches of manufacturing industry, because this, in my opinion, would be a less evil than that extraordinary and dangerous state of things in which the United States should be found laying and collecting taxes for the purpose of distributing them."

What do the protectionists think of that "at the hazard of injury to some branches of manufacturing industry?"—Free Press.

The Duty on Steel Rails.

The protectionists now claim that the present exorbitant duty on pig iron should be retained because cheap freights from England to the Pacific coast make it cheaper to ship rails from England and pay the duty than to ship American rails across the continent. The idea that Michigan ought to pay $8 a ton more for rails in order that the steel rail trust may control the California market is an admirable one for the trust. But have Michigan and California nothing to say at out it?—Democrat.

MICHIGAN MENTION.

Sunday Gleanings From Our State Exchanges.

The net tonnage of the new propeller, City of Petoskey is 244.

The Cadillac telephone exchange is to be made an all night office in a few days.

"Soo City" is the name of a new boat on the route between Cheboygan, Mackinac and Sault Ste. Marie. The model is like the Minnie M., and the arrangement like the Ossifrage.

The jury in the suit against G. R. & I. railway company, for recovering damages for the death of H. B. Balch, who was killed on the company's track is this city, about two and a half years ago, returned a verdict of $3,500 in favor of plaintiff. The case will probably be appealed.—Cadillac News.

Mayor Weston, of Grand Rapids, polled the biggest vote ever given a candidate for that office in Grand Rapids though the total vote was less than it was a year ago. He is the first democratic Mayor elected in the city in ten years, and with a single exception, the first, democrat who has pulled through a Presidential year for six teen years.

Thirty million whitefish eggs will be deposited in Lake Michigan at various points by the state fish commission this spring. This week 3,500,000 have been deposited in the lake at South Haven. The car in use by the commission is loaned free by the G. R. & I. railway, and is transported gratuitously by all the roads in the state. At ports where the fry is deposited tug owners also donate the use of their boats.

Michigan has over 1,700 miles of lake coast, and it may not be generally known, and can scarcely be believed that the tonnage of her shipping exceeds that of the American shipping on the Atlantic sea-board. Such, however is the fact, and a few days will see this immense fleet teeming with its freightage of valuable products, busy traders and happy tourists in motion. Ice breaking has commenced even in the most sheltered bays and in the extreme north.

A reduction in freight rates will take effect on the line of the G. R. & I. railroad on or about April 15. After that date the rates will be as follows: First class, 25 cents per 100 pounds, second class, 20 cents per 100 pounds, third class, 16 cents per 100 pounds, fourth class, 12 cents per 100 pounds, fifth class, 10 cents per 100 pounds. Arrangements have also been made whereby Chicago freights will reach Petoskey inside of two days after shipment via Michigan Central.—Independant Democrat.

The Ice Crusher at Work.

ST. IGNACE, April 11.—The much talked of and long looked for ice crusher St. Ignace arrived here last night at 10 o'clock, and was met at her new dock by nearly the entire population of the city. The gallant boat was at once boarded and inspected by everybody, and all are proud of the namesake of their city.

Capt. Boynton says: "We had only 25 miles of clear water since leaving the river, and the St. Ignace walked through the entire distance of ice, which varied from 2 feet in thickness to windrows nearly 20. Only once was the boat stopped by the ice and that was when we struck a windrow as high as her bow, but I backed the forward wheel and she went through it like a steer through a corn field. The entire run could have been made without a stop but for the heating of the machinery, which made it necessary to stop several times to let it cool. I have expected a good deal from the boat from the start, but she more than meets my expectations, and I am satisfied that there can't get ice enough in the straits to stop her."

The ice her is as solid as it was last January, and varies in thickness from 31 inches up, so that the St. Ignace has had a severe test, probably as great as she will have in years to come. People here are jubilant, as all are satisfied that the passage of the straits in winter, on which the future of our growing city has depended to a certain extent, is a settled question. The Algomah became fast in the ice last night and the St. Ignace has gone to her relief.

History a la Ignatius Donelly.

Will Shakespeare—Please, sir, the manager of the Globe theatre wants his new play.

Lord Bacon—How soon?

"Next once, sir, for to-night."

"To-night! Great St. George! how does he expect me to finish my Cyclopean, write my public speech, get ready for that trial and write him a play all in one night?"

"If I don't know, sir, but he wants the little right away so he can put it on the bills."

"Well, I'll do it. Let—me—see. Tell him the title will be 'Hamlet.'"—Omaha World.

A Few Gratuitous Suggestions.

The grand old Republican party appears to be put so easily to its trumps for a ticket that we cannot forbear throwing out the following suggestions, gratuitously:

For president—J. B. Foraker, of Ohio.
For vice president—J. J. Ingalls, of Kansas.
Platform—The rebel flags and John Brown.
For president—George Frisbie Hoar, of Massachusetts.
For vice president—R. G. Horr, of Michigan.
Platform—Piousness and bad grammar.
For president—J. Sherman, of Ohio.
For vice president—W. M. Evarts, of New York.
Platform—Hayesian trapped.
For president—C. B. Depew, of New York.
For vice president—M. A. Hanna, of Ohio.
Platform—Anti-monopoly.
For president—Jay Hubbell, of Michigan.
For vice president—Powell Clayton, of Arkansas.
Platform—Civil service reform.
For president—R. G. Ingersoll, of New York.
For vice president—Carl Schurz, of Missouri.
Platform—God in the constitution.—Chicago News.

A Total Wreck.

Senator Ingalls is being denounced in every state of the Union for his slanders of Blaine and McClellan, and though he has the secret sympathy of the bigoted element of his party, even Republicans celebrated for bigotry have repudiated party responsibility for his unpovered tongue. The exposure of his "war record" in Kansas has followed to his confusion and discomfiture, and for the good of the party" it will be necessary to keep his lies in the background until the incident is forgotten. A more crumpled and frowzy member of the Brahmin caste than he is politically at present it would be hard to find anywhere.—St. Louis Republican.

Look Out for Fun.

There promises to be a fun fest and fortuna in the forthcoming Republican national convention. Mr. Blaine's letter has left his great following in a state of anxiety not easily to be relieved. It would seem that the natural result should be the presentation of a large list of "favorite sons," whose state following will have no faith in the success of their nominal candidates, and who will be ready to jump for the winner the moment that they can form an intelligent opinion of who he is likely to be. In the search for such an one is afforded every opportunity for a free fight of portentous proportions.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Unnecessary.

Mr. Henry Grady's reply to Senator Ingalls is manly and dignified. But it seems to us that Mr. Grady put himself to unnecessary trouble in adopting an argumentative style. It is like a gentleman arguing with a street Arab.—Kansas City Times.

Helping the Cause.

Ingalls assists on Mississippi and Hancock makes New Jersey surely Democratic and Pennsylvania a doubtful state. The Democrats should encourage the Jayhawker to speak often.—St. Louis Republican.

With Silence, Probably.

Senator Ingalls may deny that he was ever a Democrat, but how will he meet the charge that he was once a lieutenant governor?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Let Him Rest in Peace.

Now that Ingalls has put his foot in it so deeply, it is to be hoped that the Republican organs will give poor old Burchard a rest.—St. Louis Republican.

A Pressing Need.

Cold storage for presidential aspirations. Apply to J. Sherman, Washington, D. C.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

But He Won't.

John Sherman is 65 years old, but he still hopes to live long enough to see the war ended.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

This Is too Much.

Mr. Ingalls might divert public wrath a little by writing a spring poem.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Beauty Versus Cosmetics.

One afternoon I got mixed up in the holiday crowd which intends Broadway between Twenty-third and Fourteenth streets after the matinees. The weather was mild enough, so there was no physical cause for the profusion of pink cheeks which the women wore. It was plain enough that nine-tenths of them had dashed their faces with some of these beastly washes or powders which are so extensively advertised. Some had done it with art, others with the rough hand of ignorance. Enough a majority of the faces were pretty and the costumes were irreproachable, there was a general look of uncleanness and vulgarity about these women which they never suspected and was certainly very far from their intention. The few shop girls who hurried through the throng with pale but natural complexions seemed actually beautiful by comparison.—New York Star "Tattler."

Standing in a Street Car.

Dear sister, the next time you find yourself suspended from a strap try this experiment. Catch the eye of some you please in your immediate neighborhood, and this in itself is no easy matter, for they are all ashamed of the ouslves, and will follow the thorough-fare as humble behind their newspapers—but persevere, and when he at last unwarily glances toward you, impress upon your countenance an air of utter and wistful weariness, a sort of sweet, uncomplaining martyrdom, that has resigned itself to bear all that human nature can endure, but finds itself fast approaching the limit, and pensively considering on whose lap it will presently be necessary to fall in a dead faint.

Just get all that on your face without looking at any one, and the chances are largely in favor of your having one seat offered—perhaps a choice of them.—Mrs. Frank Leslie in Chicago Times.

Utterly Worthless.

It will be remembered that three years ago Senator Ingalls wrote a letter in which he declared, in substance, that Cleveland was a good president, was doing his duty, and would probably make a successful administration. This, viewed in connection with his recent vile and treasonable assaults on the president, shows how worthless are the statements of this cheap and windy demagogue.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

☞A wonderful interest has been shown throughout the West in Prof. Baldwin's paper, "The Centre of the Republic," in Scribner's Magazine for April. It is an inspiring account of the rise and progress of the Ohio Valley, suggested by the Centennial celebration soon to take place at Cincinnati. Prof. Baldwin's account of what has been accomplished produced a glow of patriotism and makes his readers proud of their birthright.

Bring in the news. An editor taught go through the street and ask a humored people, "what's the news?" ninety out of the lot would say, "Nothing special." And yet fifty out that mines know something which if it is not in the next paper will astonish them greatly and disappoint them more, and perhaps make them madder than honests. Dont be afraid to spit out your information. If you are going away don't wait until you have been and come back, but let the editor know it, and thus help make a good newsy paper.

Referring to the paragraph in the last Enterprise about Mr. Dan Jerrue's "representative party organ," not publishing a certain letter, we have to say that Mr. Jerrue's treatment of that "party organ" after his election two years ago, was not such as would encourage it to give him further consideration at any time. It is generally considered that when a newspaper stands alone in support of a candidate before election, it is entitled to all his official printing after election. Mr. Jerrue did not so consider it; he must now get his "hearing" where he put his business.

Is it not about time that the driving park matters was with drawn from obscurity and made a living reality? The snow is gone, and our fast horses need exercise. The business street is not the best place to do this exercising. If a track could be laid out at once, the travel which would be done on it would fit it for summer and fall races. Some of our people have exhibited a disposition to encourage the raising of fine horses. We should like to see this disposition appreciated by the building of a track now, and the offering of premiums at some convenient time, later in the season.

To test the sincerity of those people who cry out against personality in news papers, Frank Hamilton makes the following proposition in the last issue of the Independant Democrat: "Next week we shall not say a word against Mr. Bontecou, no matter how wildly he raves, and if two of his subscribers stop their paper and transfer patronage to the Independent Democrat we will continue to refrain from reply to him as long as there is on average, two men a week who back op their pretensions with cash. Now here is a chance for you people who have been complaining because the newspapers indulge in so much controversy."

Purely Personal.

C. J. Grier returned from Chicago Saturday.

Ben Weaver, of Boyne, Sundayed in Charlevoix.

Mrs. Byron See returned yesterday from Chicago.

Elmore Mudge returned from Port Orange to-day.

Florence, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hinsbaugh, of Marion, died Tuesday evening, April 17, at the age of 30 years. The funeral occurred yesterday at the home.

F. D. Phillips returned Sunday from a trip outside, bringing with him a handsome chestnut horse, which looks to be able to throw dust in the eyes of anything in this vicinity.

Mrs. A. Gaylord returned Friday from Covert, Van Buren county, where she attended the sickness, death, and burial of her brother, Mr. Edwin Gillard. He was formerly a resident of Charlevoix, and was quite well known to our older residents, having lived about fifteen years in or near this village.

Coming Events.

"What to Glory In" is the subject at the Congregational Church Sunday morning. In the evening the subject will be "Three One Things."

EPISCOPAL.—Rev. J. W. Bancroft, general missionary expects to hold service with holy communion and service in Odd Fellow's hall, Sunday next at 10:30 a. m and meet the Sunday school at 3 p. m. in Green's hall with service, address and the sacrament of baptism. Will receive calls from the Sunday school and all candidates for baptism or confirmation, their parents and friends, at the residence of W. P. Brown Saturday, at 7:30 p. m., for instruction and rehersal of music. All are invited. The Bishops visitation for confirmation, March 7, in Green's hall at 7:30 p. m.

Teacher's Association.

Teachers and all interested in the school work should remember the coming meeting of the Teacher's Association at this place, May 11th and 12th.

The spelling and pronouncing contest on Friday evening will be alone worth the trouble of attending. Fifty words will be pronounced to the contestants and written by them on lists which will be carefully examined by competent critics. The one making the highest percentage of correct words will receive the prize of books noticed in last week's issue. Should two or more have the highest percentage, an additional twenty-five words will be pronounced to them to decide the contest, words will be spelled by the one in charge, and pronounced successively by the member of the class, those missing to withdraw until all but one are down. Common words only will be used in either exercise. Teachers and friends of education, attend the meeting.

Eveline.

BOYNTON, April 16.—Oscar Maze, who was badly hurt by the falling of a tree a short time ago died Thursday, and was buried Friday, Elder Grover preaching the funeral sermon.

Delbert Crooks, of this place, who has been cutting wood for Mrs. Trombal for some time cut his foot very badly Saturday.

Farming will commence soon.

The Peterson camp broke up about two weeks ago; and the family of E. G. Jarman, who have done the cooking for the camp during the winter, moved back on their farm last Thursday. During the winter Mr. Peterson has beached about eight hundred cords of furnace wood; a large quantity of cedar ties and posts, cedar bolts and logs. He contemplates running the camp during the summer, getting out bark and more wood.

Mrs. Jas McKee has been very sick.

Hayes.

BENZONIA, April 17th.—Mr. Brown has made engagements with the Pine Lake Iron Co. to take all the wood off his west 80 acres this season, and they will commence at it right away. They talk some of putting up kilns on it and burning their coal on this side of Pine Lake.

We hear the whistle of of Whitford mill, and it sounds like spring.

Mr. Chas. Hamlin who left for Washington Territory some time ago, wrote home from Kansas City, where he made a short stop, but will continue his journey soon.

The many friends of Mr. Wm. McNally will be pained to hear that he is dangerously ill.

Mrs. Joseph Lewis has been very sick but is slowly recovering.

Mr. John Brown has two very sick children.

One day last week the population of Hayes was increased by one, by the arrival of a little one at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lewis, Jr.

Barnard.

Our pastor failed to make his appearance on Sunday last.

Mr. Gornell, who came from Canada recently, has purchased Mr. West's farm and will take possession this week.

George Williams, of Ironton visited friends here Sunday.

Mr. David Francis has so far recovered from his late illness as to be about the house again.

Rob Gregory has moved back on his farm again. His wife is very ill.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. And Mrs. G. S. Washburn Entertain a Few of Their Friends.

"Orange S. Washburn, Maggie L. Smith, married April 17, 1868. At home Tuesday evening, April 17, 1888, at seven o'clock; Charlevoix, Mich." So read the card which called together a houseful of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Washburn, to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of their married life.

The evening was devoted principally to recounting the pleasant features of life during the twenty years just ended. The supper prepared by Mrs. Washburn and served by attentive waiters was one to tempt a person to over-eating by its great variety and exceeding richness.

Mr. and Mrs. Washburn are among the pioneers of Charlevoix, having lived here more than twenty years; and have accumulated a competence in business, a comfortable home, with pleasant surroundings, and have three children to make them happy.—Miss Luna, and Masters Ralph and Roy.

The following list of presents has been furnished: China tea set: From Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew, Mr. and Mrs. Levi Blanchard, Prof. and Mrs. H. M. Enos, Rev. and Mrs. W. H. W. C. T. U. Convention.

The second convention of Charlevoix county W. C. T. U. will be held in Boyne City, Commencing Tuesday evening, May 8, and closing Thursday noon, May 10.

Each union is entitled to five delegates. General officers are delegates by virtue of office.

Superintendents of departments in local unions are expected to give a summary of work done, followed by plans of work, plain and practical.

Reports to be followed by questions and discussions.

Each union will please furnish full report of work done during the year.

Entertainment will be furnished to delegates and visitors. Clergymen and their wives are especially invited.

Dear sisters of Charlevoix county, spare no effort to make this gathering a grand success, and an inspiration to greater work in the future.

MRS. FRANC J. W. STONE, Pres.
MRS. ELLEN F. EMPEY, Cor. Sec.

A New Landlord.

On May 1st the Fountain City House will pass to the management of Mr. C. H. Ball, late a commercial traveler for Root, Strong & Co., of Detroit. Mr. Ball's long experience on the road gives him an excellent knowledge of the wants of the traveling public, and we have no doubt that his personal popularity will insure the house a good business.

The house will be refurnished, and will be given a thorough renovation, with new paper, paint, etc., in abundance.

Mr. Cooper will move his family to rooms in the Ingleside, and will take a much-needed rest from the burdens of business.

"When springtime sunbeams call again to life
Pale violets from their cold, damp, mossy bed,
Will I return to claim their sweet perfume?
And naught but death shall part us two again.

"O, my true love let these the token be.
These Easter flowers, dear, of faith's own hue;
When sense between us rill they'll breathe to thee,
My changeless love, from fragrant petals blue."

She took the blossoms from her lover's hand—
Alas for trusting love that casts out fear!
While he stained pleasure's cup in foreign land,
Nestled in her heart she wore his gift so dear.

But when another springtime's Easter flowers Hailed the glad sunshine from their mossy bed,
Summer days and dreamy autumn hours
And dreary winter once again had fled

And brought him not, the maiden drooped and died,
Like the frail flowers her faithless lover slighted.
On her cold breast his cherished gift they laid,
With pale, blue Easter flowers they decked her grave.

SHE'S SO GIDDY.

BY ABBIE C. MCKEEVE.

"Papa, I want some money."

"So do I, my pet, a good deal."

"I know, but I am in sober earnest, Pug—is's a bad doggie, a dreadful fellow, and he quite spoiled my best hat, and I do need a new one so much."

"Where was your best hat, pet, that naughty Pug found it?"

"On the floor," said Susan, her elder sister, "she keeps her things there generally."

"Now Susan, what a fib! But it must have rolled off the bed where I'd laid it, and it wasn't a very nice one, papa, because Susan, as my elder, hands down her old things to me and calls them new—for me."

"Ruby, my child, how can you?"

"But mamma, you know it is true in this instance. Wasn't my best hat, that Pug chewed up, one of Susan's old ones on a new frame?"

"It was a lovely hat, and you are a dreadful girl to talk so to papa," exclaimed Susan, a little hotly.

"Now Susan, dear, don't! You're old enough to know better than to quarrel with me, and I'm young enough to wear your old things, and look lovely—at least Harry Fane says so," smiled Ruby, roguishly.

"Harry Fane is—oh, as dreadful in his manners as you are. I do wonder that papa encourages his attentions."

"Do you, papa?" laughed Ruby, "Cause if you do I can guess why. His father's rich, and—and, he's a splendid fellow. But, papa, you know I cannot attend Easter service without a new bonnet. I'll make five dollars answer."

"Five dollars! don't grow on bushes, pet; but here it is, and I do wish you'd stop fussing and quibbling with your sister."

"She ought to have got married long ago, and she would been only me to have dressed then."

"Ruby!"

But her mother's horrified exclamations and reproofs were quite lost, as the girl, with a merry, teasing laugh, ran out of the room, the five-dollar bill held fast in her hand.

"She's only in fun," said the father.

"Susan, you are too old to mind such teasing. It's a pity you couldn't take it differently."

With which comforting (?) remark the old gentleman took up his newspaper and began to read, while Susan, aged twenty-eight, and anything but handsome, bent her head over her sewing to hide her silly tears.

Suddenly her father lowered his paper and said:

"Susan, my dear, don't you want a new Easter bonnet? Here is a five for you. I don't like to appear partial."

"But my best hat was not turn up, papa."

"Never mind; keep the money. I dare say you've none too plenty."

They were practicing for the service on the morrow, and the grand anthem scored and left; the organ seemed full of a hundred-voiced sweet songsters when the skillful touch of Susan's slender hands

"Flow grandly she plays, and, oh, what a voice!" whispered one of those who lingered at the door.

"She does such good work, too, among the parish. Nearly all her wages as music teacher go for charity. But, oh! isn't that little sister a beauty?"

"A badly spoiled one, I should say, from the way that she snapped at her sister a moment ago."

The night set in darkly, and a slow rain was falling. Dr. Rupert Fane could with difficulty see the way in the dense woodland through which ran a country road.

Slush, slush, and splash, splash.

"Goodness me!" he said, ruefully, "why can't folks be skin is pleasant weather? Old Granny Simpson's no worse, I dare say; for fear she is, however, I could not refuse. What's the matter, Bobbin?"

"It's only I, Susan Clare, Doctor."

"In the name of Moses! child, what are you doing here at this time of night? Goodness! get in my gig, at once—there's plenty of room. Now, tell me what it means?"

"I have been at Granny Simpson's, and—and—she will not need you now, for she is dead."

"Dead! you don't say so! Dead! Well, I knew she was liable to go at any moment. Poor old lady! Why did you leave with the little grand-daughter?"

"Mrs. Smith and her son Joe. Everything is arranged for the funeral day after to-morrow.

"Indeed! Did she have any money I thought—"

"She had a little, and we took up a small collection so she can have a resting place that is paid for."

"You are very kind and brave, Miss Susan."

"Oh, no. I made no sacrifice; don't mistake me. It was only an Easter bonnet went in as my share."

"Some women folks would call that a good deal; but here we are at your gate! Your feet and skirts must be wet. You'll be sick; go in and change at once."

The doctor's prophecy was correct. Susan was ill on the morrow and could only speak in a whisper.

"I'm sorry," she said to Ruby, who was bowing and smiling at a lovely image in the mirror, "but you will certainly have to take my place in the choir.

"Oh Susan. I can't! Harry is to be there, and I know I'll make a mess of it. You must go."

"No; it is impossible. Come and go over it in the parlor, there is plenty of time."

Ruby managed to do passably, but Susan saw them depart with dread.

"She's so giddy—oh, dear, how my head aches!"

Doctor Fane looked up when the notes of the opening anthem first began. He was a music lover as well as his son who sat beside him.

"What's the matter with the music?" he said to Harry in much surprise. "That's not Miss Clare?"

The boy merely shook his head and tried not to hear the discords, musing: "I thought she could do better than that, and with such splendid opportunities how careless she must have been.

But when all was over, the bad music was soon forgotten at sight of the beautiful face under the "killing" bonnet at least by Harry Fane.

While the doctor made it a special point to call that very afternoon, for he knew Miss Susan must be ill.

"Oh, no, I'm not," croaked Susan, blushing; "it's only a—a little cold."

"Serious things come from colds frequently; but, Susan, my dear, I didn't come altogether profes onally—that is—oh, pshaw! I want you to be my wife, that's all."

Susan regarded him in extreme astonishment, and had indeed lost even her hoarse voice.

"I've admired you always, and—and last night when you told about your Easter bonnet, my poor lost Easter bonnet, I knew then that I loved you and had loved you a long time."

"Susan, are you going to be my stepmother?" laughed little Ruby, pinching her sister's hot cheek. "Do you think I'll mind you a bit better than I do now? I won't, either, unless Harry makes me; but I'm awfully proud of you since you have made up your mind to marry that nice, rich doctor. I don't admire old maids, though, of course, I always loved you. But the future Mrs. Rupert Fane's a somebody, indeed."

"Children," said the father, laying down his newspaper, "you'll never change your natures, and it's only an old story after all, that from what I can learn, came of two Easter bonnets—one that was purchased and one that was not, eh?"

Ruby clasped her hands in delight.

"Yes, papa, you are correct; but which one was the prettiest?"

Her father answers, sir only, "Susan's, my pet."

IT WAS ALL A DREAM.

BY JEFFIE FORNUSH HANAFORD.

The holidays were over, and the large dry-goods establishment of "Tompkins Powell & Co." was fast assuming its general every-day appearance.

Business was very quiet, compared with the great rush of the previous weeks. The clerks stood round talking in groups, and making remarks about the few customers who strolled in with an I-don't-know-what-I-came-for air, and straightway strolled out again without purchasing anything.

The millinery department on the second floor was entirely deserted as far as customers was concerned.

Behind one of the large glass cases, filled with flowers of every conceivable shade, and beautiful feathers in all the tints imaginable, on a low stool of crimson velvet, stood a young girl, gazing, with a careful look in her big blue eyes, at a bunch of beautiful pale ostrich tips which she held in her hand.

Her hair was short and curly, with a touch of red in it, and her pain black dress, although of cheap material, fitted her slender figure to perfection.

Only sixteen, very pretty, and very poor. Ah! how she longed for fine clothes and the luxuries money could buy. But, alas! her father was dead, and she was the eldest of five children, and obliged to work for her daily bread.

She lifted the bunch of pink tips tenderly, and laid them inside of the case. Perhaps they was not just the hour, or near dimmed the blue eyes and rolled down the pretty cheek.

Ah! how tired she was; for the past two weeks she had been very hard for one so inexperienced as Delsa Kingston.

Obliged to stand up all day, and show one bunch of flowers, then another, to a succession of rude fools, who came in just all so undecided as to what color they really did want.

Delsa remembered it all with a sigh as she glanced up at the big clock on the wall.

Only half-past five—nearly five hours longer. Oh, dear! how her head ached.

Only one customer had been near the counter since the morning, a pretty lady who came to exchange the very bunch of pink tips she had just replaced in the case.

The lady said she had decided to have pale-green tips instead of pink.

Slowly Delsa glanced at the clock. How slowly the hands move. Twenty-five minutes to six. Hark! What was that? The sweetest music Delsa had ever heard, like little bells. And listen!—music is speaking; it cannot be—yes, it is the bunch of pink tips, she has just laid by. No, I can't say that I am, for the lady that bought me sat on one the loveliest pink plush bonnet I ever saw, and I know I looked well. Then I had a very pleasant time, for I went to the opera twice and to a grand reception, all inside of two days."

The low voice assumed a strange rose.

"Yes, it was nice," continued the pink tips, "since while it lasted, but I was sorry when I heard the lady call Miss Delsa that she had scarcely had me out of the box for an evening, so with the shade of plush on the bonnet she saw at once that we did not harmonize, and she preferred green."

"It is a shame," spoke up a cluster of white lilies, indignantly. "A lady purchased me and said I was for a bride to wear, but she took me home, and that very evening the bride, a lovely blonde, fastened me among her lace on her left breast. I looked even better than the real orange flowers, for I never fade. I felt a glow of pride as I nestled close to the beautiful white lace, and I thought what a happy life was before me. But alas! the very next day I was exchanged for a bunch of scarlet roses." And, saying this, the white lilies relapsed into silence.

"Well! it is very pleasant here," ventured a spray of white daisies, quietly.

"Yes, very pleasant, and Miss Delsa is very tender of us all," said the blue violets, thoughtfully.

"Let me tell my experience," spoke up a bunch of ostrich tips of an opaque shade of green.

"A lady returned me last week, after keeping me three days, and during that time was I utterly miserable, if you did believe it. She selected me for a hat or blue velvet—just think of it—green and blue! It is a wonder I survived. I had the 'blues' all the time I was there, and I was delighted when I found myself back here once more."

"That was a dreadful experience," said a cluster of lovely white roses. "I can sympathize with you, for, if anything, I think it was even more heartrending than yours.

"The green tips rustled softly, and looked interested.

"Yes," continued the white roses, speaking very slowly. "I was very unfortunate. A woman bought me, and hired for me, but didn't like her appearance, but I was obliged to wear it. I was the joke of the Jubilee to her house, and the walked every step of the way, strutted proud as a peacock—very thin paste-board box. O, but I felt ashamed." And the white roses relived at the remembrance.

"Well, I must end, I can tell you; quite a contrast to this warm case. Well, at last I thought she could do better than that, and with such splendid opportunities how careless she must have been.

But when all was over, the bad music was soon forgotten at sight of the beautiful face under the "killing" bonnet, at least by Harry Fane.

While the doctor made it a special point to call that very afternoon, for he knew Miss Susan must be ill.

"Oh, no, I'm not," croaked Susan, blushing; "it's only a—a little cold."

"Serious things come from colds frequently; but, Susan, my dear, I didn't come altogether profes onally—that is—oh, pshaw! I want you to be my wife, that's all."

THE TALKING MACHINE.

An Illustration of the Wonderful Phonograph as Finished.

We present our readers this week a view of the finished phonograph as it will appear when in general use. The illustration is a fine perfect commercial phonograph that has been published, the instrument being the result of the most careful work of Mr. Thomas A. Edison and his associate, Mr. J. Ellinland. It occupies a space of less than two feet in length and six inches in width, the very efficacious little electric motor being contained in the base beneath. A small battery—a battery that has been perfected to the satisfaction of the above-named electricians—and that is saying a good deal—is connected with the motor, and it is estimated will last for six months. In one now in use at the laboratory having so yet given no indications of decrepitude, although it has been in constant daily use for several months. When the phonograph was first invented, the main idea was to secure longevity, a natural result of the numerous public exhibitions that were being made. Later work has been in the line of accuracy and clearness, results which have been attained to perfection.

Judging the phonograph from the point of commercial value, there can not fail to be a great field for it. The type-writer can use both hands in copying from a, contrasted with the speaker's lips, should she desire a sentence read back, or she may interpose at will, with the recording of the speaker's words. Its adjustment is simple, and it can be used anywhere, and be delicate as the telephone transmitter.

The illustration shows the speaking tube, to be seen at the bottom of the box, which stands on the small copper socket of the phonograph devoted to recording (shown directly above the tube), and the reproducing mouthpiece, which fits down over the speaking, or rather the recording, part. The change from recording to "talking back" is instantly made, every instrument being a complete recording and talking machine. The phonograph has one instrument for talking into to make the phonogram, and another to reproduce the speech. Both are fixed in a swinging plate or turn-table, as will be seen, and set with guides so as to overhang the phonogram spindle. To change from talking to reproducing or vice versa, requires a mere turning the carrier plate into proper position and set back the carriage to the desired point.

"GETTING AWAY" WITH THE FIRE.

A FINISHED PHONOGRAPH.

SHOOTING OUT FIRE ENGINES.

A New Scheme for Subduing Flames.

Our cities are getting so large that even Maud S. and Jay-Eye-See could not pull a squirting machine to a distant tenement house fire in time to save the fresco, and even if the hook and ladder was attached the average train it would not reach the scene until some superfluous relative had been widily tossed out of the fifth-story window. Flames can greedily devour yard after yard of costly lace-curtaining, and revel in rare hemlock wainscoting, the Crown Prince leaps through the brown-paper glass to drive away the fire demon. In London a novel system is being introduced, which will construct this evil of long distances. A new off hail is being made, with a revolving turret tower, having huge portholes and guns. The guns are extra large mortars, and quite roomy enough to admit a modern fire engine. A long pole (extending above all surrounding objects) will be erected at each fire station in the metropolis of city, and same will be surmounted by a bright-red disc. Under this new system, when the patrolman touches the alarm the disc aloft vibrates rapidly, which attracts the eye of the watcher in the city-hall tower; whereupon the mortars are aimed at the red mark, the turret revolves, and as each gun reaches its proper angle the engine within is fired toward the burning tenement, and its hydrant in a very vulgar fraction of a second. At the trials, so far, some accidents occurred, such as shooting the engine and men into the adjoining lodging a hook and ladder in the following writes, etc., but these are doubtless at aiming will correct all this. Another system for handling fires is now being discussed, which, if adopted, will revolutionize the old methods. It is proposed to build a huge fire department balloon, which will be stationed over the city. When a fire occurs the balloon will at once get into position above the burning building. Chains will then be passed under the balloon, and afterward attached to the ship, which will thereupon majestically rise, taking with it the whole conflagration. The balloon will then start for the ocean (or any large inland water), and, when over the sea, will lower the whole burning mass into the waves. (What remains of the building can afterward be recovered by divers and derricks.) The great advantage of this plan is that it at once prevents a spread of the conflagration. When the house is in the air, ladders will be lowered from the balloon to rescue any remaining inmates. This presents another advantage—i. e., people on the fifth floor will have the best chance of escape. A recent trial presented the strange spectacle of people on the ground floor of the burning building, frantic at the prospect of not being rescued in time. When a tall building is on fire at night, the streams cannot reach so far, it is now proposed to send up the engine on the elevator.—Walla's Peck.

Musing of a Straggler.

I saw a beautiful wax figure in the show-window of a dry-goods house recently, and later in the morning I visited a museum in which were wax images of persons of notoriety. It is amusing to watch the various expressions of the countenances of people as they walk round the room and make their examinations. They apparently experience a species of pleasure that is at once very natural and very remarkable; for, although humanity may be generally acknowledged to be a feeling of which the indulgence is essential to the pleasurable existence of us all, there is probably nothing in which that feeling is so strikingly manifested as in the peculiar gratification which we derive from the sight of the most famous and the most infamous men of the age. Whether they, who step out of the ordinary track, be philanthropists, murderers, soldiers, statesmen or villains, we are anxious to see what sort of men they are, and if they be impostors, that we cannot see them in proprio persona—why, the next best thing in public estimation is to see their portraits—being public lions, or objects of curiosity—and as wax models are a species of portraiture which is by far the most striking, and which approaches the nearest to nature, the gratification they impart, if they be perfect, is greater than that which is derived from representations on canvas.

Nothing can give so correct an idea of the features and figures of men as wax models. Every shade, every line, every little peculiarity can be so perfectly as to make it appear that the originals are living and breathing before you. It is impossible to take a portrait on canvas for life; but a perfect wax model may be taken for a living man. Hence, if the most exact imitation of nature be the perfection of art, then we must be of the mind that the art of wax-modeling, as far as portraiture is concerned, may be held to be by far the most perfect.

Mercantile Item.

Very few people outside of business circles have any idea how much profit there is on certain lines of goods, but the following incident throws considerable light on the subject:

A country merchant not far from Austin, who does all his trading in that city, became financially embarrassed. Being an honest man he offered to Austin to notify his creditors of his condition. One of his creditors is Moses Sauman-berg.

"Well, vat are you going to do mit your creditors?" asked Moses.

"I am able to pay ten cents on the dollar, but in your case it is different. I am not opened that last lot of goods I bought of you, so instead of paying you ten cents on the dollar, I'll just return you the goods. I am willing to do this because I'm your friend."

"If you was a good friend by me," replied Moses, grinning, "you vill say ten cents on der dollar. I make sort money so den ven I dakes de goods pack?"—Texas Siftings.

LANTERNS of scraped horn, glass not being much known, were invented, it is said, by King Alfred of England; and it is supposed that prior to the introduction of glass, scraped horn was also used for window lights in the ninth century.

KANSAS was organized as a Territory May 30, 1854, and was admitted into the Union as a State January 29, 1861.

"Didn't Know It Was Loaded."

The young man fell dead!

"I thought I pointed a revolver at him. My God! how could it have loaded!"

"Why, you should have known that a man is not responsible for what he does not know. The law presupposes knowledge of the effect of powerful drugs, and, therefore, makes crime by ignorance!

"If I had only known" has often been an unfortunate man's apology for some evil deed done through, not in a malice aforethought, but in a mere ignorance, for instance, that laxative pills, that nauseate and gripe like a deadly poison, that the blood is heavily charged with poisonous matter, that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a cure for the worst form of catarrh, that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a sure cure for consumption, that Hop Bitters is a sure cure for all diseases of the stomach, liver, kidneys, nerves, blood, and a wonderful tonic, and so on ad infinitum.

This wonderful remedy, whose praises is upon everybody's lips, stand in the most marvelous in its curative powers of any remedy ever offered to the public. It is a most startling remedy for nervous prostration, weakness, exhaustion, paralysis, or other nervous diseases caused by this great nerve tonic and restorative. Here a person rescued from the grave, as was Kate Annie Donovan, of Ottawaugan, Conn.; there a case saved after all else had failed, as was that of Mrs. W. C. Miles, of 49 Bush Hill avenue, Boston, Mass.; again cures of paralysis of years' standing, like that of Mr. Alexander Moss, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., who had lost the use of his left leg for years. Again, a case of total prostration from the effects of a long spell of sickness, as was the case of Mr. James Bowen, of 27 Market street, New York City. Cures of sleeplessness, with nervous and physical exhaustion, are very frequent, the wonderful case of Mrs. W. F. Rice, of 19 Affleck street, Hartford, Conn., being only one among hundreds. Again, the remarkable powers of Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy, as shown by these cures, are by no means confined to curing by health sufferers from nervousness, but it is equally powerful in curing all forms of dyspepsia or sick headache, trembling, sleeplessness, despondency, and all other results of a disordered condition of the stomach, liver, and bowels. Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy is a most powerful tonic, and is the best of all tonics for the weak, nervous, and debilitated. It is the great blood purifier, and makes the old feel young and the young strong. Its wonderful powers, and at times of almost miraculous effects in curing disease, it is not to be wondered at, therefore, that drug stores everywhere are crowded with people who are testifying to its wonderful powers, and at times of almost miraculous effects in curing disease. Various Modes of Potato Culture Practiced in This Country—Corn Marker Which Marks Three Rows—Salient Points in Cheese Making.

The corn marker illustrated in the accompanying cuts is recommended by The Ohio Farmer and is described by that authority as follows:

FIG. 1—CORN MARKER.

Fig. 1 shows a marker which makes three rows at a time, and is plain to the eye. The headpiece is 3x3 inches and is hinged at A, to permit all the markers to touch the ground at all times. Without this hinge, the inequalities of the ground would often keep one of the markers off the ground. It is the gauge rod, to the outer end of which is attached a marker of some sort to follow the last row previously made by the hoe, to keep the rows straight all over the field. If the markers do not make the marks plain enough, nail a piece of plank on the bottom, as shown at C. It is better to have the gauge rod turned on a post over the central marker, and then it can be turned over at the ends, to use in going back.

FIG. 2—CORN MARKER.

Fig. 2 has the gauge rod extending only on each side far enough to reach the last row marked. The middle marker is hinged to the headpiece, instead of having the latter hinged, which answers the same purpose. For making four rows at a time, the hinge in the first cut must be put in the center of the head, half way between the middle and outer marks. In the second one illustrated, the hinged markers must be at the ends of the headpiece. A marker making four rows is rather unwieldy to use, and in practice three marks will be found enough.

Different Modes of Potato Culture.

Not a great many years ago it was the practice to plant whole potatoes in such quantities as to form quite a large percentage of the expected yield, which has been succeeded as the present time by the opposite extreme of planting single eyes, leaving ample room between the two methods for cultivators to experiment as to the amount of seed and the methods of planting, from which the best results may be obtained. Owing to the short crop of last year, seed will be high, and it will be a good time to plant whole small potatoes, such as have been given to the pigs in plentiful years, and with many persons they have all along been preferred to cut seeds. Planting Irish and Scotch groves seems safe, as those who have experimented with them generally represent them as unsuited to our climate.

There is a general agreement on rows about three and a half feet apart, with hills twelve inches apart in the rows, and one or two eyes in a hill, while at the same time vigorous trials with whole seed have yielded larger crops; but no one has as yet seed proportionately as largely will no doubt continue its use. It is of no use to plant potatoes on wet, heavy soil; while the ground should not be excessively rich, it should be clean, dry and mellow, and generously fertilized. Where barn yard manure is used, which contains all the necessary elements, it should be well rotted and incorporated, as its presence is liable to cause scabby potatoes; where this is not plentiful some reliable commercial article should take its place. Another quite good plan is to spread the barn yard manure and plough it under, and at planting, drill the commercial kind moderately in the rows; this method is practiced in many sections and by it the tubers get the advantages of both kinds of fertilizers, first from the quicker action of the highly concentrated one, and later on from that of the barn yard, a moderate application of both being thought better than the use of either one by itself.

A successful potato grower in Union county, New Jersey, says his practice for several years has been to plant only one eye to a hill, cut from the butts of large potatoes, not using the other end with its more numerous eyes at all. He puts in the rows 600 pounds of some well known brand of commercial manure in the acre, mixes it with the dirt in the rows by drawing a chain through them, drops the seed, and using no other kind. He has always had good results, even including the present unfavorable year, and believes he can profitably continue to the acre of commercial fertilizers whenever the average price of potatoes in his section shall be maintained for his crop.

The potato has the habit of degenerating to a degree that has caused the best and favorite varieties of former times to become obsolete, so that even their names are scarcely remembered, and some of the more recent ones, such as the Peach Blow and Early Rose, are giving place to newer seedling varieties, to be themselves displaced hereafter in the same way. If we were dependent on the tubers alone for the propagation of the potato this would be an alarming fact, but fortunately we have in the seed the ready means of rejuvenating the species, and the more than 500 new varieties, many of them surpassing the former excellencies of the parent stock, attest the success of potato specialists in this direction.

In states where the crop can be harvested in May or June, and sold soon as late as July, it is becoming somewhat common to raise a second crop by export from the seed potatoes to the air—but not top the sand—for a couple of weeks or to the sun—for a month—and then go longer, until they become dry and green in color. These are then planted whole, and are dug in the fall for seeds the next year. This seed has not the same tendency to sprout through the winter from a warm cellar as the fully matured tubers. As the seed used in the summer for the second planting are slow in germinating so soon after being dug, they should be started to sprouting before being planted, by putting them into barrels in a cool place and sprinkling them daily and covering the barrels with a damp cloth until they show signs of germinating. Flat and hill culture each has its advocates; farmers are more competent to determine from their own experiments, which is best for their own soils than from any advice that can be given. For the same reason, no particular varieties will be recommended for seed, except to say that for the main crop select the ones that from your own experience and that of your neighbors you know to be well adapted to your soil and your market. This, however, is not to be understood as discouraging any one from testing in a moderate way the new varieties confidently recommended by well known specialists, as it is only in this manner that the best can find their way into general use.

In the Vegetable Garden.

It is a very important point, in forming a good garden, so to arrange the planting of the different vegetables as to insure both a judicious selection of sorts and a proper time of planting for each of the varieties selected, thereby securing for the table a succession of the different kinds extending throughout the season, rather than a dozen varieties all coming in together, when it is impossible to use more than three or four; or, on the other hand, the occurrence now and then of times when there is no vegetable whatever ripe for the table.

In arranging dates for planting vegetables for a succession, it should be noted that as the season advances and becomes warmer, peas and, in fact, all kinds of vegetables grow faster and overtake one another, as it would seem. The dates of planting the different sorts do not lead to corresponding intervals in gathering the crops. For example, though five days' difference in date of planting peas in April will make about as many days difference in the time of the harvesting in June, yet five days' difference in planting in May will make hardly any visible difference in the ripening in July.

Important Points in Cheese Making.

One of the leading features of the forthcoming report of the New York state dairy commissioner consists of opinions from leading dairymen on the best methods of conducting the cheese business, the prevalence of fraud in production and by what means the consumption of it can be best increased.

The question of branding cheese with the official state brand evidently remains an open one among the state dairymen. A good many of them are pronounced in favor of the plan; others consider such a branding advantageous to consumers only; others are indifferent, while a considerable number condemn the state brand as useless or detrimental to the natural relations of producer and consumer.

The replies to the question, How prevalent is the habit of branding cheese as "full cream" when it is not, cannot fail to gratify cheese consumers, as in more than 100 reports on this point there is not a single expression of positive knowledge of the existence of this habit.

Hints About Truck Farming.

Where truck farming, as it is called, or gardening for market is to be carried on along with other farm work by a farmer who has some grown up or nearly so, it will be an excellent plan to put one of them in charge of this department and require no other service from him, or else hire a reliable man for the purpose, or rent the garden plot on such terms as may be agreed on. In this business it will generally be found best to separate it as much as possible from the ordinary farm work, else both are liable to suffer from conflicting demands for attention from such at a critical time.

How to Lay Out Gardens.

Since it is becoming the practice to lay out vegetable and berry gardens so as to be kept clean by horse cultivation, it is well to place the different crops in such a position with each other as to make them convenient of access, as well as to afford a pleasing appearance. As a single example of such an arrangement is here reproduced from Country Gentleman an illustration in which a line of raspberries was placed next to a narrow grass walk extending lengthwise through the garden and next to the raspberries several rows of strawberries, and still beyond these a line of currants.

STRAWBERRIES—WALK—RASPBERRIES.

The grass walk was four feet wide, and was kept cut short by passing a hand lawn mower once a week, with only a few minutes' work. At the edge of this walk was a line of Caroline raspberries, the variety being of lower and more rounded growth than other sorts, and when its fruit its rich yellow berries give it a quite ornamental appearance. The strawberries were intended for sale, hence its clear cut features. Secretary Fairchild tried to engage him in conversation, and Mr. Brown, the next neighbor, seemed disposed to make himself agreeable to the visitors. Claim berlain, with his gold rimmed monocle stuck in his right eye, would have been present in the century of by two neighbors and relapse into his frozen state. He glared straight ahead like a soldier on dress parade. He spoke, of course, with an "English, yer know" accent, and in his speech of 2,000 words only two forlorn and unprotected periods were accompanied with rounding young. It was a speech of commas.—New York Sun.

Mark Twain as a Lecturer.

The last time I heard him lecture, after having got rid of his hands, he had the house as stiff and silent as an unopened oyster. The audience was as still as he. After a long pause, during which he stood as if in a dream, he suddenly wondering what ailed him, he said "Hum!" and immediately relapsed into silence. A full minute went by during which he remained perfectly quiet with his eyes staring straight before him. Then he said "Hum!" again. At last, some one started a little ripple of applause. Mark looked up, radiant with smiles. "Thank you," he said, "I was waiting for you to begin."—New York Ledger.

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

Be Wanted to Buy a Jewsharp from Flat Foxes.

Cal Thomas, who always has a good story to tell, has this one on Flat Foxes, a statesman joker, who was one of the early pioneers of Cincinnati: "In early days," says Cal, "we used to be thought capital fun to send a countryman from store to store inquiring for the things he would be certain not to find at the places to which he was sent. One day a fellow came, as he had been directed, to Flatt's store to buy a jewsharp. Flatt was a merchant tailor. He was busy with a customer as the man appeared, but, observing that several of the 'boys' had dropped in at the door just to see what Flatt would do, he caught sight of one, and responded to the inquiry for the musical instrument, 'Wait a minute, sir.' Having served his customer, he picked up a pair of glove stretchers and approached the rural mischief with, 'I do not mean you your mamma!' and, introducing the stretchers, manipulated them so as to transform the aperture into a horizontal yawn, awful to see, and capacious enough to hold a dozen jewsharps. Removing the apparatus, he examined it carefully and deliberately, as one might scrutinize a lobster before a pocket compass, and then dismissed the unsuccessful hunter for jewsharps, as he said in a tone of well feigned disappointment: 'W-w-we hain't g-g-got any your s-size.'"—Exchange.

What Kept Lincoln Awake.

During the ..... days of the war there was a quibble in Springfield about the appointment of a postmaster. Two factions had candidates, and each was sure to win. Congressman Lincoln signed petitions for the appointment of his favorite. Finally, to get the matter settled, a delegation composed of the wealthiest men of the town and several of the most prominent ministers and lawyers, headed by Gen. Leavenworth, visited the national capital and secured an audience with President Lincoln. Gen. Leavenworth had carefully prepared the case for Mr. Lincoln and it ran something like this:

"Mr. President, it is with great reluctance that we intrude upon you this morning. We appreciate the arduous responsibilities and perplexities of your position, and do not forget that the very life of the nation is in your hands. But, Mr. President, the people of the great town in which we live, and which we are praying, sir, that your life may be spared and that you may be given strength to carry this war through to a successful issue."

Mr. Lincoln listened to Gen. Leavenworth with some impatience until he reached this point, and then interrupted him with:

"I assure you, my dear sir, that it isn't the war or the arms that is worrying the life out of me; it is that Syracuse postoffice that is keeping me awake nights."

The delegation pulled out and dinner was served.

Sturdy John Marshall.

The descendants of Chief Justice John Marshall are a sturdy race. One of them, bearing the great jurist's name, owns a farm in Virginia and runs a saw mill thereon. He got into the woods with his saw pit not along ago to fix a loose screw. Suddenly he felt some one moving behind him, and he turned around arm up and felt the saw cut right through about the elbow, almost from side to side. Raising his head he struck the saw, which was a power right through his hair over his forehead, and face and down into his throat.

Man in his place, and he felt the ooze of blooding flesh. They laid him on the grass and brought a surgeon. While the latter was running across the fields to the spot where the man had left Marshall he heard a voice saying, as well as he could speak with his throat, "Sew that stuff away from my eye so that I can see whether it's here." They did "sewe the stuff" away from his eye carefully as possible, and he gave them one plaintiff glance and exclaimed, "It's all right; I can see." It took the surgeon an hour and a half to sew up his wounds. He endured the pain with perfect composure. Within a month he was out again on the farm. Some one was telling one of the old darkies on the place, while "Marse John" was still in bed, what a narrow escape he had had from death. "Huh!" said the darkey, "take lamp more than that to kill Marse John. Way, if you wanted to kill Marse John you'd have to cut his head off—and then hide the head."—Chicago Herald.

A Judge's Quick Repartee.

The following was perpetrated by a judge of one of our lower courts while on the bench, but whose identity will be instantly discovered by any lawyer without mentioning his name. On the first Monday of a term many jurors were summoned before him to present reasons for being excused from serving, most of them, as a very dirty, unkempt, shaggy bearded man, who despite the efforts of the attendants to restrain him, kept advancing to the judge's desk and speaking privately with him. The judge, noticing his importunity, signed for his willingness to allow the talesman to approach, and then said to him somewhat sternly: "Well, sir, what is it?" The man bent over the bench until his lips almost touched the judge's ear, and then whispered: "I've got the itch." The crowded court room was watching the result with curiosity. "Mr. Clerk," said the judge instantly, without the slightest change of expression, and in a voice painfully loud and distinct: "Mr. Clerk, let this gentleman go!"—New York Tribune.

A Peep at Joseph Chamberlain.

The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain is one of the most popular of the thousands of people who have been feasted in Dunedin's great dining hall. He sat through the long dinner of the chairman's speech, which lasted nearly eight and listened to the flow of oratory and not the faintest indication of a sign of weariness could be seen in his clear cut features. Secretary Fairchild tried to engage him in conversation, and Mr. Brown, the next neighbor, seemed disposed to make himself agreeable to the visitors. Claim berlain, with his gold rimmed monocle stuck in his right eye, would have been present in the century of by two neighbors and relapse into his frozen state. He glared straight ahead like a soldier on dress parade. He spoke, of course, with an "English, yer know" accent, and in his speech of 2,000 words only two forlorn and unprotected periods were accompanied with rounding young. It was a speech of commas.—New York Sun.

Mark Twain as a Lecturer.

The last time I heard him lecture, after having got rid of his hands, he had the house as stiff and silent as an unopened oyster. The audience was as still as he. After a long pause, during which he stood as if in a dream, he suddenly wondering what ailed him, he said "Hum!" and immediately relapsed into silence. A full minute went by during which he remained perfectly quiet with his eyes staring straight before him. Then he said "Hum!" again. At last, some one started a little ripple of applause. Mark looked up, radiant with smiles. "Thank you," he said, "I was waiting for you to begin."—New York Ledger.

The New York Evening Post

WEEKLY EDITION.

In accordance with its traditional policy of opposing abuses, and fearlessly exposing the wrongs of the people, the Evening Post will begin, about the first of January, a series of articles on the process, carried for its principal aim the possession of revenue surplus.

This question has become the prominent issue of the political day, and the existence of an actual surplus in the Treasury, amounting to much $140,000,000 on the 1st of June, 1888, and the urgent necessity, dread under consideration, of the immense to rift business interests, and a direct appropriation of the surplus among the States, are considerations of the first magnitude.

The attention of the people having been strongly drawn to this subject by President Cleveland in his last annual message, the need of information upon the subject, and a clear exposition of reasons and facts, has been felt by the Editors of the Evening Post.

The Evening Post holds that the tariff should be reduced and reconstructed in order

(1.) To relieve the great body of the people from needless burdens on the ordinary necessities of life, and to remove artificial obstructions to the growth of our manufacturers, which restrict trade to the home market, and shut them out from the markets of the world.

(2.) To remove the burden of equal taxation according to the means of the taxpayer, instead of according to his needs as consumers of dutiable goods.

(4.) To remove the causes of social discontent, by giving to every citizen the whole of his earnings, instead of taxing one class to ensure profits for another class.

(5.) To destroy the monopolies now multiplying all over the country under the name of trusts, under cover of the tariff.

(6.) To increase the national wealth by leaving capital and labor free to seek each other in the world.

(7.) To remove from concerns the corrupting influence of a government so powerful to favor and wealth, under the tariff, to pay bounty to some, while exacting from others the payment of those no so favored.

(8.) To remove the false and unwelling idea that the Government is a "Mother" to her child and the greatest and rich resources that the nation possesses, rising in revenue from the taxation of imports, to the amount of "per year more than is needed for the economical administration of the Government, and forcing the interested beneficiaries of the tariff to demand, as a special purpose of enacting legislation, that the surplus be expended in the improvement of our rivers and harbors.

The daily edition price of the weekly Evening Post is $9 a year, but we have arrangements with the undersigned that we can offer new subscriptions at the reduced price of $1 for fifty cents in any case where the money is sent to us in advance. A discount of 10 per cent will be allowed on orders for ten copies or more. Address, as above,

The Condition of the Emperor—Bitter Political Feeling.

ADVICES from Berlin are to the effect that the Emperor Frederick's condition is such as to cause apprehension and alarm. He is certainly worse, and there is fear of a sudden fit of suffocation, growing out of his defective breathing apparatus, that will carry him off at night before the surgeons can be summoned to perform an operation. The New York Herald's Berlin correspondent telegraphs as follows:

The intense bitterness of the political struggle now going on for some almost passes belief. One well known Conservative journal, the Post, for instance, said in its issue of Sunday that Bismarck keeps his place by will in a few years he the Emperor in name as well as in power. There will be no rest or quiet for the Hohenzollerns till he is driven from the throne and confined to his estates. That sounds very treasonable, I suppose, but with due regard for the libel laws it is said daily by hundreds of papers, and in a thousand places, for example, things dangerously near the wind in an article on "The Government Prosecutions" in the Sunday copies, with exclamation marks to assist stupid readers. Another paper, the name of which I prefer to Bismarckian ears, protests in big type against the royal puppet. One of the Bismarck papers, speaking of the Post, said the masses will lose patience and assemble to show unmistakably that they will not longer be ruled by the Hohenzollerns and by their alone.

AN EXPRESS TRAIN DITCHED.

About Twenty People Injured in a Collision on the Pennsylvania Road.

WHERE a New York and Washington express was passing over the elevated road of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Philadelphia, it collided with a heavy passenger locomotive at Thirteenth street. The express train consisted of a baggage car and ten coaches, including two vestibule cars. Four cars were badly smashed and toppled over on their sides. About twenty passengers were more or less seriously, and two or three probably fatally, injured.

Bismarck and the Women.

THE conflict between Prince Bismarck and the Empress is only temporarily suspended. The Empress has gone so far as to apply to the Russian and Austrian courts in order to secure support and achieve her purpose. If the Czar would be induced to send an assurance to Bismarck that the Battenberg marriage would not alter the friendly relations existing between Russia and Germany, the Empress might down the latter. The Austrian imperial family maintain a neutral attitude in the matter.

Roscoe Conkling.

A NEW YORK special of Monday morning says: "The hopeful bulletins issued by the physicians in attendance upon Mr. Conkling do not seem to have exerted much encouragement to the sick man's friends. RECORDER PATTIE, of New York, has denied the application to submit the case against Gould and Sage, charged with the larceny of Kansas Pacific bonds, to a new Grand Jury.

The Recorder reviews the history of the case, and concludes by saying:

Upon a state of facts such as have been presented upon this application I would be doing a great injustice to the accused, if, seem to me, were I to grant their prayer, upon the same evidence, and within a few days after the Grand Jury, for some or misconception, was the part of the grand jury who acted upon it, to be submitted to another body of grand jurors for the purpose of reviewing the action of their predecessors. I am satisfied that if the case is presented before a competent grand jury after a previous grand jury has fully examined into the case is not to be commended.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids, THURSDAY, MAY, 10TH, 1888,

At 12 o'clock noon,

For the purpose of electing delegates to the Democratic National Convention, called to meet at St. Louis, Missouri, June 5, 1888, the selection of a State Central Committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

The convention will elect four delegates and four alternates at large, twenty-two district delegates from each congressional district and twenty-two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, from each congressional district, and a chairman at large.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes; but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the county they represent.

The delegates from each Congressional District will meet in caucus at ten o'clock a. m. on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: Two district delegates, two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, one vice-president of the convention, and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

All voters who are in accord with the present Democratic administration in its efforts to reduce taxation to the legitimate wants of the national government, economically administered are invited to participate in the selection of delegates to this convention.

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.
JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four (4) delegates.

Ninth Congressional District Democratic Caucus at Grand Rapids.

Delegates from the ninth congressional district to the democratic state convention, to be held at Grand Rapids, on Thursday, May 10, will meet in caucus at the Morton House, at 11 o'clock, sharp, on the morning of the convention, for the purpose of nominating two district delegates, two alternates, two members of the state central committee, one vice-president of the convention, one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business, and resolutions, and the transaction of any other business that may properly come before the caucus.

By order of congressional committee.

WM. F. MISBETT, chairman.
Big Rapids, Mich., April 21, 1888.

THERE will be a meeting of the democratic county committee at the office of A. D. Crooksbank, chairman, next Tuesday, May 1st.

THE Chicago Herald states a truth related to labor strikes which can hardly be too often reiterated: "There is need of a better understanding of the fact that an employe who deserts his post relinquishes all claim upon his employer. Trade unionism cannot change this truth. Brotherhoodism cannot make it otherwise."

IT is needless to repeat facts of so recent occurrence, for it is indisputable that the panic of 1873 under the highest tariff known, was the most disastrous in the industrial or business history of the country. To it we owe the development of the worthless tramp, who is probably a fixture. And since the panic, we have the authority of the United States commissioner of labor, Mr. Carroll D. Wright, that in 1885-86 the number of strikes and lockouts, the number unemployed, the resulting money loss to capital and labor, especially in the states where industries are largely "protected" has been unprecedented. All under the highest of high tariffs.—Muskegon News.

UNDER the republican party the war taxes were continued; the farmers, mechanics and all consumers were taxed heavily, and the money was used in carrying out the partisan purposes of the republican party, or to enrich the Blaines, the Shermans, the Robinsons and hundreds of others like them. There has been nothing of that during the present administration, and the democratic party proposes to cut off the useless taxation, stop the surplus of revenue, and give farmers, mechanics and consumers generally a chance to make some money—a chance that has heretofore been given mainly to monopolies, and which has created the offensive combinations and trusts which the democratic party is determined to destroy.—Muskegon News.

The Mills Tariff Bill.

In the House of Representatives last Tuesday, chairman Mills opened the debate on the tariff bill. The interest of the people was such that every available seat in the galleries was occupied and the entire speech was listened to with marked attention.

Mr. Mills began his remarks by saying that, though the war had been over for a quarter of a century, tariff taxes were higher now than then, and averaged 47.10 per cent on imports. The income tax had been imposed to meet war expenses. It was gone. It was a tax on wealth, and the $72,000,000 annually realized from that source was swept away. But the war ments of labor remained, and the war was still being prosecuted against the people—a fiscal war, exhausting in its demands, and every effort to remove or lower that taxation had been resisted and defeated. The democrats have been taunted with the charge that they had failed to reduce taxation. This charge has been made by the minority, which had been guilty of preventing action on the many bills brought into the house by the committee on ways and means. Mr. Mills turned his attention to the woolen manufacturers and argued that the public at large was injured by the present excessive tax and no body was benefited. High duties, he said prohibited and limited importations and exportations. We were feeding the people of Europe, and when we put high duties on the goods they sent us in exchange for food it amounted to taxing our own agricultural exports. A reduction of duties would not, as asserted, check manufactures and cramp labor. We always imported more goods when prices were high. Under lower duties we could export more goods, our manufactories would run steadily, and labor would be constantly employed. Not more than 10 per cent of the goods consumed in the United States would be imported if all the custom houses were torn down and the government supported by direct taxes.

In 1883 the party in power took off the tax on playing cards and put a tax of 20 per cent on the Bible. It did not lie with the republican party to accuse the democratic party of failure to reduce taxation. Time and again they had mustered the full strength of their party to strike out the enacting clause of a tariff bill. Twice they had succeeded, and twice had they refused altogether to consider this subject. The duties of this country prohibited and limited importation, and this prohibited and limited exportation. This was the greatest evil resulting from the war tax. Our home products were therefore thrown upon home markets, and the prices in consequence went down. The average rate of duty during the last five years amounted to 44.51 per cent. And during the last year the average was 47.10. After this large increase had been made by congress, congress had imposed a slight direct or internal revenue tax upon domestic manufactures, and that tax had brought into the Treasury in 1886 $127,000,000. That was but a tithe of the heavy burdens that were laid upon imports. It amounted to about 3 per cent on the whole manufactured products of the country in 1886. It was thought to be a reasonable tax to impose on manufacturers who were receiving large bounties from the government, in the enhancement on the prices of their products, to pay 3 per cent when they had increased their bounties up to 22 per cent. But that tax was gone. It could not live. It was a tax on wealth.

Congress had imposed a tax on income by a corporate tax, on the war, and there were 403,170 people in the United States in 1886 that had $707,000,000 of net income, upon which they were assessed a duty which brought into the treasury, in 1886, $22,000,000. But that tax was gone; it was a tax on wealth. There had been a tax on insurance companies; it was gone. There had been a tax on express companies; it was gone. There had been a tax on bank deposits and bank capital; it was gone. Three hundred million dollars that had been paid by the wealth of the country had been swept away, and the burden of taxation had been made heavier, as it had been loaded upon the shoulders of those who had to support themselves and the government. Was a tax of 3 per cent to be paid out of the pockets of the manufacturers of blankets, a weight more enormous than the tax of 70 per cent paid by the consumer on imported and domestic products? Was the tax of 3 per cent on income more oppressive than the tax of 100 per cent on women's and children's dress goods? Yet all these taxes on wealth had gone, and the gentlemen of the minority boasted that they had reduced taxes to the amount of $360,000,000, while the democratic party had reduced it only a bagatelle. That was the splendid column these gentleman had erected. All the tax on wealth had passed away and all the burdens were now cast upon the shoulders of the laboring man. In 1883 taxation had still further been reduced and this magnificent shaft, which the party then in power had erected to commemorate its legislative wisdom and the beneficence of its laws, was crowned with a capstone—taking off the internal revenue tax on clothing, on food, on implements of all the industrial and building trades, on playing-cards and putting a tax of 20 per cent on Bibles.

Protectionists argued that manufactured articles were cheaper here than in any other country as a result of protection. It was not so; but, suppose that it was, why, then, should they resist so strenuously any effort to lower duties if they were able to undersell European manufacturers? Did the manufacturers pay higher wages because protection enabled them to do so? No. Jay Gould was able to pay his bootblack $500, but he did not do it. He paid the market price—he paid his nickle like a little man. Higher wages are made by coal, steam and machinery, and higher wages meant lower cost of production. This accounted for the fact that free trade England paid higher wages than protection France and Germany, and yet controlled the world's markets. He had requested the present chief of the labor bureau to ascertain if there was any exception to the rule that wages depended on the efficiency of labor and the result of higher pay, efficient labor was low cost of product. In answer he read a tabulated statement prepared by Mr. Wright, giving the result of inquiry in a number of cases, which appeared to fully bear out the rule.

In conclusion Mr. Mills said he hoped the bill which had favor throughout the country would receive a majority of the votes of the house, though it was not all the commitee could ask. It is a very moderate bill, yet it would send comfort and happiness into all the homes and bosoms of the poor laboring people of this country, and he asked the house in behalf of these people to consider their claims and help reduce the burdens that had been loaded upon them.

When Mr. Mills sat down applause and cries of "Vote", "Vote," came from the democratic side of this hall. He was at once surrounded by a crowd of democratic members, who pressed forward to shake his hand and tender their congratulations.

Sundry Gleanings From Our State Exchanges.

Kalkaska dedicated a new opera house last week.

Geo. Oviatt, of the Chase Eclipse, died April 13th.

The Lawrence was at Frankfort on Monday morning.

The Rosscommon News commenced volume XIV last week, by doubling its size.

The Cheboygan Democrat's new dress gives that paper a much cleaner appearance.

Cheboygan pays $100 a year for the publication of the proceedings of the village council.

An effort is being made to secure a passenger boat for the Bellaire-Elk Rapids route, with fair prospects of success.

The Grayling Avalanche closed Vol IX last week, and reports a balance on the right side of the ledger. Good for McKinley.

Capt. Thomas Baldwin, master last season of the steamer City of Traverse, will be master of the new steamer Petoskey this year.

Cheboygan is considerably excited over the prosecution of the people who gathered up the jettisoned cargo of the Allanp last fall.

Gaylord democrats are making a move toward establishing a democratic paper in that town. They need one, as there is none in the county.

Plank's Grand hotel at Mackinac is to be enlarged by the addition of a wing containing 200 rooms. This will give the house room for 1,000 persons.

Congressman Fisher has presented a petition from 2,500 citizens of the Tenth district, asking for the establishment of a government system of telegraphing.

Gladstone offers a bonus of a whole block to the man who will build a $25,000 brick hotel there. A $5,000 engine house is now being built and a couple of miles of paving will be finished by Oct. 1.

The lumber shover's union, of Muskegon demanded $5 a day, but the vessel owners have agreed to allow no more than $3.50 per day, and have threatened to tie up their vessels before they will pay more.

A Jackson saloon keeper has been arrested for keeping his saloon open on the day of the local option election and his defenses will be on the unconstitutionality of the local option law, which will come up for hearing May 1st, the very day the new law takes effect.

A former who emigrated from south west Missouri to California last spring writes back from Los Angeles to his home paper: "Try and induce your county fair this fall to offer a liberal premium for the biggest fool on earth. I will try to be there on time." The latest from the emigrants from Michigan was, "don't come."

A new swindle is now in operation in this state. A man buys cattle of a farmer, gives his check on a local bank where he has money enough deposited to cash the check. The check is duly cashed, and the farmer feels happy, until eventually the receipt which the farmer gave for the check turns up as a note for about four times the amount of the check.

A Mackinac telegram, dated April 23, says the weather the past two days has been quite warm and the ice begins to show signs of weakening. Here in the narrows the current is wearing is out from the under side so that in places it will not bear a man on it. A week of warm weather will probably cut the ice below here so that a good wind would clear it out, but it will take at least ten days longer to clear it out of above here. If the weather is favorable boats may get in by May 10, but not before.

The state board of agriculture at its session at Lansing, April 18, adopted the following resolution with reference to Prof. T. C. Abbott, former president, of the agricultural college, who has for a long time been in feeble health: "Resolved, In view of his long connection, more than a quarter of a century with the college, most of the time as its president, and having given, as it were, his whole life and strength to it, and its work, and under whose administration it grew to be the foremost agricultural college in the land, that we now grant him an indefinite leave of absence and instruct our secretary to continue his name on the pay roll of employes at the rate of $1,000 per year, in recognition of his past services to the college."

A Great Steamer.

A reporter of the Mining Journal was shown large photographs yesterday by Mr Jarvis, local superintendent of the D. S. S. & A., of the steamer St. Ignace, taken while she was transferring the eight big mogul engines, spoken of elsewhere, across the strait. It was about as heavy a load as the big boat will ever have to carry, yet it only weighed her down eighteen inches below her usual water mark. Four engines were on one side, and four were on the other, and as an experiment those on one side were taken off first to see what the effect would be upon the steamer. Under this heavy one-sided load she only listed 23 inches, showing that she possesses great stability.

A. T. Washburne & Co.'s spring opening is announced in another column. Al. is rejoicing in a good business for this time of year.

D. Sherwood & Co. have dissolved. M. J. Stockman will continue the business. Mr. Sherwood is undecided as to his future operations.

Alick Rosenthal returned from Chicago on Tuesday, where he bought a full line of new spring goods. See announcement in another column.

Last week sleighs run; this week some farmers are plowing. Can any county in southern Michigan beat this record?

Henry Barth, the boiler maker, is making a good deal of noise lately, indicating that he doesn't have a chance to play very much.

At the recent ball in Petoskey to raise funds to pay for the colors of the "City of Petoskey," $80.13 was cleared,—enough to pay for the colors.

Certain mischievous boys will get into trouble if they don't stop their devilry about the streets and business places after closing hours at night.

Jas. R. Dixon has sold to O. D. Wood his fine thoroughbred bull calf recently advertised in this paper, together with some other thoroughbred stock.

F. D. Phillips sold 20,000 Charlevoix cigars in two days this week. The factory is increasing its force of help every week, and then cannot keep up with orders.

The best news of the season—a large flock of wild geese were seen going directly north Sunday afternoon,—an indication that warm weather is near at hand.

The steamer Lawrence is reported as the first boat to leave Chicago for the straits. She was at Frankfort Monday, waiting for the ice to open to come further north.

Aldrich sisters are having some changes made in their dress-making rooms this week, to accommodate Mr. Cooper's family, who will move into the Ingleside in a few days.

Dr. Crozier says the horse editor lied last week. The only way to settle it, gentlemen is to have it out on a race track, and then we will know to a certainty, whose horse is the best.

R. A. Campbell reports that the harbor at Manistique was clear of ice last week, so that the steady north wind which keeps us locked in gives a benefit to our friends across the lake.

☞Dr. N. J. Perry will arrive soon with a furnace and a complete outfit for porcelain filling and capping. Anyone having broken teeth will have the opportunity to have them made as good as new.

A. T. Washburne & Co. are doing a considerable mail business lately, receiving orders from the surrounding country. This is one more proof that newspapers are read, and that advertising surely pays.

The question of employing a night watch is agitating the people. Our opinion is that the council should employ and pay that officer, give him power of a policeman, and make him keep order as well as night watch for fires.

Work is progressing rapidly on Litney & Ackett's new livery barn. The excavating has been done, and stalls are being finished for the horses. When finished it will make an excellent place.

C. P. Bellinger has just received a stock of watches and jewelry direct from the manufacturers, at figures fully 25 per cent less than could ever be obtained from jobbing houses, and he proposes to give his customers the benefit.

The remarks in last week's JOURNAL about F. D. Phillip's fast horse has stirred up a bit of strife among owners of horseflesh. If this strife can be encouraged to the extent of providing a place to test the speed of some of our fast horses, we will all be gainers.

There are lively times at Washburn's ship-yard now, fitting out the schooner Hattie Fisher, the tugs Alice Campbell, Higgie and Rob Stephenson, and five scows for the Fine Lake Iron Co. On all of these there has been put a large amount of work in repairs, etc.

It is going to be a little more difficult than usual to find liquor bonds that will be suitable this year. Signers of bonds must swear that they are not sellers of liquor themselves or by agents, and that they do not hold any elective or appointive office, and no man can be the signer of more than one liquor bond.

Farmers are gradually coming to light concerning a night of disgraceful, drunken debauchery which occurred about two weeks ago, the details of which would bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every respectable citizen of Charlevoix, and if generally known, would place our fair village on a level with the vile lumber towns of the northwest.

Those who urged local option must not forget that on themselves rests the enforcement of that law, beginning next month. We have reason to believe that there will be an appearance of submission; but some actions indicate that arrangements are being made to evade the law, and furnish liquor to all who want it very bad. The experience of the past year is sufficient to give a warning for the future.

Now that spring is here the dirty streets, alleys, and yards need attention. For several months they have served as receptacles for ashes, kitchen refuse and garbage generally. What is accessible now, is, of course not the most dangerous part of the stuff, but it should be removed nevertheless without delay, so as the season advances, they may be taken off which contains the seeds of disease in many forms. See that is done.

Personal Mention.

IN THE CZAR'S CAPITAL

The Streets, the Houses, and the People of Beautiful St Petersburg.

The Proverbial Dishonesty of the Shop-Keepers a Peculiarity of the City.

Vigilance of the Russian Police, and How They Get Their Information.

The Dangerous Dvornik, and the Pains He Plays in Dictating Nihilistic Poems.

WILLIAM ELEROY CURTIS, IN CHICAGO MORNING NEWS.

The streets of Petersburg are wider than those of any city in the world. More than one-third of the area is in streets, and most of them are 200 feet between the building lines. Indeed, almost are the open spaces and squares, trees and untured, surrounded by houses gauged upon the same scale as the streets. In one place you can walk half an hour and pass only three palaces, and it is common for a single residence or palace to occupy the whole front of a long block.

Many of the large houses belong to members of the imperial family, others to nobles, and more to wealthy merchants and bankers. In some of the houses, it is said, as many as 100 servants are employed, but in Russia every servant has his own peculiar duty, and will not do anything else. Wages are nominal, however, and it costs little to keep such a retinue.

JUST HOME FROM WORK.

They are given one suit of livery each year, 4 or 5 rubles a month, and what they can steal or obtain as tips from visitors, which is a good deal in the houses of the aristocracy. When a guest is leaving a house where he has been entertained for a week or a day, he is met at the door on his departure by the entire household, from the bootes to the cook, and is expected to give everybody something, and the same is the case at all the hotels. If he is entertained at luncheon, he is expected to give a tip to the dvornik who opens the door for him, the footman who takes his coat, the butler who serves him at the table, and so on all around, which makes dining out a rather expensive matter. And the host looks on complacently from long association to see his servants paid by his guests.

The Dangerous Dvornik.

The fact that a very large proportion of the inhabitants of Petersburg and other cities of Russia live in large apartment houses, like those of Paris, makes it an easy matter for the police to exercise a constant and almost absolute surveillance over them day and night. These apartment houses, accommodating ten, fifteen, and sometimes thirty families, all have the same entrance, through which all who enter must pass—the butcher, the baker, the boy from the telegraph office, the man who comes to take the slops, and the ladies who are out paying fashionable visits. This single entrance usually leads into a court-yard, which furnishes light and air for the inner rooms, and is a thoroughfare used in common by all the tenants. In charge at the entrance, and occupying a little office on the ground floor is the dvornik, or concierge, or doorkeeper for the establishment. He has the keys to the great oak doors that bar the passage after certain hours; he sees all who enter; he takes charge of the letters the postman leaves and the packages that come from the shops. He sweeps the front pavement, sprinkle it with a hose, and is responsible for the tidy appearance of the court-yard and the stairway; and thus far is a harmless and a useful servant.

Russian Traders Unions.

But his relations with the police are such as to surround him with odium to any illegal lodger, and to make him feared by all who enter his door. He is the little czar of that establishment, an autocrat with unlimited power, and, if he is ambitious, a very dangerous man. But no matter how bad he is, neither the owner of the establishment nor the tenants can get rid of him without the consent of the police, to whom he owes a higher allegiance than his employer. His wages are paid by the landlord who owns the building, but he is appointed by the Director General of Police. In Petersburg, in fact throughout all Russia, the workingmen are organized in unions of trades unions called artels. They are represented in the trades organizations of the United States, for mutual strength and protection. In Russia the artels are the outgrowth of the emancipation of the serfs. When a coachman, or a carpenter, or a house servant, or a shoemaker was no longer a slave, he was like an untrained horse. He worked for whomsoever work was to be done, for such wages as he could get. He had no wages before, and anything, even a few copecks, was a treasure to him. The several trades which had been under the control of freemen soon found themselves disorganized and paralyzed by having no regular rates of wages or hours of labor, and the artels or unions are the result, having been organized by the leaders among the mechanics of the empire, whom the non-thinking classes were very glad to follow.

Among the other artels is that of the dvornik, the closest and most powerful of all, for it has the patronage of the police and their protection. The dvornik, as I have said, is selected by the police for the house which he attends—more properly speaking, he is assigned by the grand master of his artel, to whom the landlord of the apartment house has applied for a door-keeper, but the grand master is an official of the police, is in constant communication with police headquarters, and when the detectives want a door-keeper changed from one house to another, when they want a stupid one to be dismissed and a keen one put in his place, it always does. If they have occasion to suspect that the dvornik of a suspicious house has not given them accurate information as to the movements of its occupants, or if they doubt his loyalty to the Czar, the police officers can have him shifted to another place at once, and a sharper, more honest and loyal man put in his place. Very often regular detectives are assigned as dvornicks when the ordinary member of the artel is not shrewd enough to penetrate the mysteries of the establishment, but under all circumstances the door-keeper is expected to keep the police informed of everything of importance that happens in the house of which they have charge. An inspector may call on them any hour of the day or night. They know him, and give him such information as they choose. Thus it will be seen that the artel of dvornika is a most extensive and effective system of spies.

The police authorities of Russia boast that they know the whereabouts and disposition of every cit zen of the empire every night, and it is through the dvornik that they get the most of their information. No more effective spy system could be organized. People must live in houses, and the law requires every house to have a dvornik. No one can be employed who does not belong to the artel, and the police control the artel. The tenant is therefore completely at the mercy of his servant, who, if so disposed, can send him to Siberia on a charge of treason any time he likes, and it requires little more than a dvornik's testimony to obtain a "wolf's passport," as a sentence to exile is called.

Strict Police Surveillance.

It will also be seen how difficult, how nearly impossible it is to organize nihilistic conspiracies in a city where every building is so watched. Every commotion about the establishment, every unusual assembly, every suspicious visitor, every mysterious package is reported to the police, and package intend for occupants of a house are usually examined by the dvornik before they are delivered. He is apt to open letters and telegrams, too, if he can seal them, for with the protection of the police he is safe in any impertinence. There are nihilists among the dvornika, as there are in every one of the artels, and they are exceedingly useful members of a conspirators club. One of the most famous of nihilistic leaders, since hung, was for many months a dvornik at the residence of a high official of the Czar's Government. He sought the place for the information he could gain, and kept it as long as the information was wanted.

The nihilists usually meet in houses where the dvornika are friendly. The doorkeeper, of course, knows when apartments are for rent, and he usually has the authority to let them. The nihilistic dvornik notifies his friends, and they come in as tenants. As long as he remains and is loyal to them, they are comparatively safe, although the police do not depend entirely upon the dvornika. They, too, are always watched, and if their fidelity is doubted in the slightest degree, every door in some other house or on the retired list.

Many of the homes of private citizens in Petersburg, and the rule is even more extensive in Moscow and other cities, are quite as fine and gorgeous as the palaces. The development of trade and industry has naturally enriched the merchants and manufacturing classes, while the emancipation of the serfs impoverished most of the nobles, who were agriculturists and depended upon the earnings of their slaves for support. The conditions are about the same as they were in our northern States at the close of the war. The rich and aristocratic planters were financially ruined, with lots of land and taxes and extravagant habits and tastes. Very soon, as will be seen all over the South, a new race of citizens came in, with fresh blood and capital, and made money. The old nobles of Russia are most of them poor and proud—especially proud. Their estates are paying scarcely enough to meet their taxes and are heavily mortgaged to the czar. If the Hebrew race did not have so firm a financial hold upon the nobleman of Russia there would be more religious toleration in the empire.

In the meantime, a new race of merchants, bankers, and manufacturers has arisen—money princes, who are beginning to be felt in the body politic. They buy the palaces of impoverished princes and dukes and nobles, spend their money lavishly in decorations and upholstery, have huge wine cellars and gigantic mirrors and fine paintings, fill their cellars with rare wines, and entertain royally. Their banquets and balls are occasions for the display of extravagance, each attempting to exceed the other in wasteful ostentation.

There is no people on earth so fond of display as the Russians. The imperial family sets the example with the money wrung from the poor, the princes and nobles follow, and of course the private citizens must keep up the fashion. Their hospitality is proverbial. It is their greatest pride. Strangers are always entertained in the most lavish manner, and one who carries to Petersburg or Moscow letters of introduction from influential people, is sure to be wined and dined as long as he remains.

Economy Behind the Scenes.

But behind all this ostentatious display is practiced an economy which the people try to conceal as if they were ashamed of it. The private rations of the gorgeous homes, the living rooms, are usually plain and comfortless, and the cost of a dinner party is sufficient to keep the family for a month or more. It is so in all the royal residences. The show rooms are gorgeous, but the living rooms do not keep up the standard. They are plain and poor enough to make a fair average. The ladies of the ordinary household have their party and dinner dresses from Paris, but the garments in which they appear when not on dress parade are made by their own servants at home—always plain, and often shabby.

Another peculiarity of the country is the proverbial dishonesty of the tradesmen. About this a great deal has been said by English writers. While the commercial conditions are steadily improving, and are not so bad as represented by English authors, who are more or less inspired by the national prejudice, one trades in Russia with a great deal of caution. The ordinary merchant always asks a greater price than he expects the customer to pay, particularly if he is a stranger and unfamiliar with the value of the article. The native, or resident, knows what the article sought should cost, and "treats down" the salesman accordingly. The tourist who does not attempt to do so makes a mistake and pays a heavy tax upon his ignorance. Of late the principal merchants on the Nevski Prospect and other fashionable streets have attempted a reform in this particular, mark their goods in plain figures, and hang a sign reading "prices fixed" in their windows. Their example will soon, it is hoped, extend into all branches of the commercial community, for experience in Russia, as elsewhere, teaches that honesty is the best policy.

Imitation Gems.

"What a brilliant diamond!"

"Yes."

"Why, one could almost see to read, in the dark by its rays," said a reporter to a shopper who jested.

"Think so," he replied. "Well, it does look rather fine. How much do you think it is worth?"

"Five thousand dollars."

"Is that all?"

"Well make it $2,000 or $2,500, or possibly $3,000."

"I'll sell it to you for $10."

"Why or anyone else?"

"There's no generosity about that. Most buyers would not give more than $5." Ex.

"Why not?"

"Because it is not a real stone. They come from Oberstein, in Germany. The entire town is supported by the manufacture of such gems, as they are thus tried up." In various ways. This imitation diamond is only quartz, and it has been boiled in some chemical that will make it look brilliant for a while, but it soon wears off. If you handle it much it will not look so brilliant. Diamonds are so scarce and so successfully imitate."

"What other gems are manufactured cheaply?"

"One of the easiest is the emerald. Many stones you think are rubies are only red spinal, and lapis lazuli is only cloyed chalcedony. Chalcedony is the usual base of false onyxes and agates, which are most counterfeited. The stones are boiled in some coloring matter and then sub ected to intense heat. The color is permanent and quite stone. Some of the families at Oberstein have one secret and some another. They never give them away. One family has the secret of converting crocidolite into cat's eyes. Gypsum and scrablonite are also made into the same gems. Glass, which is composed of silica and zirconia, look like diamonds. A thin slice of diamond is sometimes laid over a topaz so that the whole appears to be one gem."—New York Mail and Express.

OUR INDUSTRIES ARE NOT INFANT

A High Tariffan Unnecessary Burden on the Workingman.

[From a speech by Senator Salisbury of Delaware.

It is said that our industrial establishments cannot compete with manufacturers abroad. This was the plea for a high tariff nearly 100 years ago, when tariff legislation was commenced in this country. Use plea at that time was doubtless a good one. We had at that time but few industries of the kind—but little capital invested therein—no skilled labor employed in manufacturing and but little experience in the business. Now, we are in a position to compete with the older and better regulated establishments of Europe was hopeless, and Congress in the early legislation to secure revenue by impost duties wisely sought to adopt them in a manner that would not stop the infant industries in their struggle for existence so far as it could consistently with the necessity for revenue. That necessity, however, was the acknowledged limit of the taxing power, and to one thought of imposing higher taxation on importations than was necessary to raise the revenue required by the Government. Within that limit discriminations might properly be made in adjusting the details of a tariff so as to aid incidentally the many infant industries then existing. That policy of incidental protection in the adjustment of duties was continued in the early legislation on the subject, and it continued to be wise and necessary, because the average rate of duties was so moderate that it was not burdensome to and some of the industries in the competition with those which were established.

But how different are our manufacturers placed to-day. There is no lack of skilled labor, and in machinery we excel all other countries. There is no lack of capital or want of experience, and we know how to do business, and without protection other than our revenue tariff we control our tariff of our manufacturing industries could compete at home and abroad with similar industries in any part of the world. Some of us have been trying to do so for years in the principal item of cost and in which manufacturers cannot be said to compete to any extent, may be an exception, and no one would hesitate to make a reasonable allowance in the adjustment of the details of a tariff intended to be sufficient for the Treasury for revenue.

Such a tariff would require an average rate of duty of not less than 25 or 30 per cent., which would more than pay the difference between the cost of labor here and in England or any country in Europe and leave a fair margin of profits on the capital investment without lessening the wages paid to operatives.

Again, the advocates of a high tariff insist that it is necessary that they should pay wages to labor. They have become ardent and tender in their regard for the poor laborer. The most of our manufacturing establishments have grown to maturity and are no longer infants needing the paternal care of the Government and their own account; but the plea of protection is interposed in the name of the men employed. This is a specious plea, and if it were true would be entirely unanswerable, but everybody knows it is not honest. It is an attempt to confuse unnecessary taxation under false pretenses, in order that the manufacturer may make larger profits, not that the laborers in the mills and factories may obtain higher wages. The manufacturers and all other employers obtain their labor at the lowest possible price, and this will continue to be the case whether the tariff is high or low. Has honest man in this world complained because he could not buy his coat for less in order that his tailor might have a higher wage? Does anyone complain because he could buy a yard of cloth in the American market for less than ten cents, why should the American who manufactures the cloth be required to pay more than nine cents, to keep the market for himself? Does he could sell it for five cents and make a profit, but why should the American who manufactures dealing there is no reason why he should. And he does not.

A tax is levied upon foreign imports. Who pays it? The foreign manufacturer? No; he gets his price from the American importer. The American manufacturer? He makes his price, as nearly as he can, what the foreign manufacturer charges, plus the tax, then? Well, you do, for one. You pay it on almost everything you wear, and it is the same everything you by dollar. You pay the fraction of a cent on every pin and pocket knife when you stir your corn-meal, boiled into what is called "pappaw" in New York "pudding" in New England, and "mush" in Illinois and Indiana, and so on through the entire list of articles, from a pin to a house or your thrasher. You pays a dime on a felt hat every time the wear off your head all the long summer's day; you pay from $1 to $10 on the cloth in your coat, and a dime by dime, dollar by dollar this tax is collected of your daily, weekly, monthly, yearly expenses.

You will be told, we suppose, that it is your duty to pay this tax for the good of the country. Judge for yourself how far you are to go for the good of the country. A single study of easily accessible figures. Of the 70 persons who are engaged in agricultural operations there are in this country more than 7,000,000. Of those engaged in trades or manufactures which subject them to foreign competition, the highest annual estimate is under 300,000. So that you 7,000,000 are taxed to support the 300,000. And of those 300,000, how many receive their wages under the tariff to limit production and thus increase the cost of commodities and thereby diminish the means and opportunities of labor?

"How did the jury stand?" was asked of one of the jurors in a police court case. "Nine for the defendant and a disagreement. "Well, sir, the hell five of 'em were agin me from the start." "Oh, then, you are the one who hung out?" "Of course. Wasn't the prisoner me own brother-in-law, and didn't I know that I'd have to support his family if he was sent to jail."—Detroit Free Press.

WAGES AND HIGH TARIFF.

How an Ultra High Tariff Reduces Wages and Cripples Employment.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

In regard to the oft-repeated protestory that high wages depend upon a high tariff, Mr. Kante Nelson, the distinguished Republican Representative in Congress from Minnesota, remarks that if the United States did not exist "you would have the strongest kind of argument in favor of free-trade England against the high protective countries of the Continent with their low wages." It is the fact that nowhere else in Europe are wages so low as in Germany and Russia, and that the rates of wages are lowest in countries in the direction of which there is the most protection, present performing operations which the tariff advocates in the United States are unable to solve to their entire satisfaction. Nor can they explain, in accordance with their theories, the enormous difference of wages in the flourishing colonies of Australia, where the earnings of a day's work are much higher than in most of this country, and where the protective duties are extremely low. Nevertheless, our tariff-mongers insist that by some occult process this indirect method of taxation keeps up the wages of labor in the United States, though the theory utterly fails to stand any show or place on the face of the globe.

So far from maintaining the wages of labor, there is no lack of proof that the tariff has actually reduced the rates of increasing wages and lessening the means of employing labor. Food, clothing, clothing, and the condition of the treasury will allow, but the duties on the articles produced by the earnings will be increased or his condition improved by the reduction of the duties on the articles of the cost of everything he has to buy.

If high tariffs increase the wages of the working people, how is it that Germany and other European countries having much tariffs wages are lower than in England, which is practically a free-trade country, and in our Republican friends, upon their theory of high tariffs and high wages, solve that problem? Tariff laws, whether they increase high or decrease low the wages, but they do increase or diminish the cost of living, and the more so in every workingman in the country is interested in having the tariff as low as possible.

FACTS ABOUT THE AMERICAN WORKMAN.

What He Does and What Is Done for Him—Overworked and Robbed.

[Press Dispatch.

There is one man in this country who works harder than any other man, and is organized into labor unions. He gets up before the rest of the world, and he looks after his live stock before breakfast. His breakfast, when it comes, consists probably of salt pork and pie or some food of that kind. After breakfast he goes to work in the field, and there he works all the time except for a little midday dinner, which is about as nutritious as a cracker and an earlier meal. After dinner he works until supper time. His evening is likely occupied in mending harness, soaking corn for the morrow's feed, or doing some useless "odd jobs" which farm life calls for, according to the season. After a year of such toil this man is contented if he can make enough of the fruits of his labor to cover industrious he may be, this is a man for which depends happy man ever year expenses. Does not this strike you as an anomalous state of things? It is not worth your while to reason out the why and wherefore of the anomaly?

You sell at a profit on the actual cost of production, and yet your business can scarcely be called profitable. Why is this? Is it not because your expenses are greater than your income? Is it not because you have to pay for almost everything that you buy more than any other farmer in civilized countries is obliged to pay? Make your calculations for yourself. You pay more for iron, in all its forms, than any European pays. That means you pay a premium on all agricultural implements—on plows, cultivators, spades, shovels, rakes, hoes, thresheres, corn-cutters, pitchforks, manure forks, trowels, mowing machines, scythes, sickles, axes, hammers, hatchets, knives, nails, tacks—and every thing, big or little, into the composition of which that metal enters.

And this is not all. You are paying a premium on a great many other things—on your clothing, for instance; on the clothing of your wife and the clothing of your child. Indirectly, you are paying the tax on the clothing of your farm-hands and the women employed in your household. In order that American manufacturers should be encouraged, you are paying a duty to all American manufacturers. You are told that a duty is levied on importations of foreign goods. But you pay the duty if you buy the foreign goods. You pay it, in part, if you buy the American goods of the same sort; for the American manufacturer naturally puts his prices as near as possible to the mark fixed by law for the foreigner. If the European manufacturer cannot sell a yard of a certain sort of cloth in the American market for less than ten cents, why should the American who manufactures the same sort of cloth sell for less than nine cents, to keep the market for himself? He could sell it for five cents and make a profit, but why should he? The duty is levied on importations, and the American manufacturer knows that he is not required to sell his goods for less than the duty.

A tax is levied upon foreign imports. Who pays it? The foreign manufacturer? No; he gets his price from the American importer. The American manufacturer? He makes his price, as nearly as he can, what the foreign manufacturer charges, plus the tax, then? Well, you do, for one. HOW IT FEELS TO FREEZE.

Acute Pain Followed by a Very Comfortable Condition of Mind.

Early in January, 1854, I left Red Wing in company with S. J. Willard, John Day and Albert Olson for a place fourteen miles distant, near where Vasa Church now stands, for the purpose of cutting and hauling hay preparatory for our settlement at that point the following spring. It was a clear, beautiful day, with the thermometer 20 degrees above zero. We had a span of good horses, a sleigh partly loaded with lumber, forage and provision for a few days.

We arrived at the spot just before dark, and camped in a ravine well sheltered with timber. After making ourselves comfortable with a good supper and a blazing log fire, all four lay down to sleep on a bed made on the snow, with a thin layer of hay on top of some boards, and were wear wrapped up in blankets. During the night the temperature changed to a terrible cold, the thermometer falling to 15 degrees below zero, as we learned afterward. Had we known this and kept our fire burning, there would, of course, have been no danger, but being very comfortable we all fell asleep early in the night, and were unconscious of the danger we were in until awakened by the pain of intense cold, and then we were already so benumbed with the cold that we lacked power or energy to get out or even to move.

Comparing notes afterward, we found that all had experienced a like sensation, namely, that it felt just as like the point of a needle in every pore, but free from all mental anxiety, except a dull conception of something wrong and a desire to get up, but without sufficient energy to do so. This feeling, however, did not last long, and was succeeded by a sense of rest and quiet satisfaction until consciousness was almost entirely lost, without any struggle or pain, either bodily or mental. We had all reached that stage when to go to sleep is to freeze to death, and have hand of Mr. Day, who lay on the outside, fell in the snow. This started the circulation in his body, and gave him such intense pain that he quickly aroused himself and got on his feet, and of course we were all saved. It took a long time before we could use our limbs sufficiently to rebuild the fire, and during that time we suffered much more pain than we had before. I am satisfied from experience that a person inclined to go to sleep has a very easy death, because he sinks gradually into a stupor, while the intense sensibility both to physical pain and mental agony long before life becomes extinct.

It was about 50 degrees in the morning when we got up, and we did not lie down again or attempt to haul out building logs, but spent the rest of the hours on a bee line for a ravine that would lead us back to Red Wing. It was a struggle of life and death to get across the rolling prairie, and had the cold been accompanied by a blizzard, we would not have got across.

To keep warm, we took turns to walk or run behind the sleigh, and Mr. Willard was walking when he was suddenly missed and found sitting back, following its tracks a short distance to a hillside, where we found him sitting down in the snow apparently comfortable and with no desire to move. He rather expressed a for coming back after him, claiming that he was all right, and that he was sent to have come along when he got ready, but the fact was that he was already so stupefied with the cold that he never have made any exertion to move.

After a drive of some two miles we arrived at the first and only inhabited house between Vasa and Red Wing, and it was high time that we found shelter, both for ourselves and the horses. That was the coldest day in the history of Minnesota.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Marriage in This Country.

An examination of the few available marriage statistics of this country shows no such variations from year to year, owing to operations of the tariff, as have been claimed by the advocates of a single year, and prove by their relations with those of a given number of years, that the tariff has been either a decline or an increase. The statistics of Massachusetts for the data from 1850, show 21 marriages to the thousand in that year. In 1854 the rate had risen to 25, and in 1858, the year succeeding the panic, it had fallen to 17.8. In 1860 it had risen again to 20.1, but during the three following years, it averaged only 17.6. The year 1866 saw the ratio increased again to 22.1, and it averaged 21 up to and including 1873, owing to depressed business conditions the rate fell of very rapidly after this, the average for 1874-77-78 being only 15.5 per thousand. This was low water mark, the ratio rising again to 19.8 in 1880, and declining to 17.5 in 1885.

No approximate statistics were available for the United states as a whole before 1850, and even then generalization from the returns of a few cities was all that was possible. The meager data available at that time indicated a marriage rate of 19.1 per thousand. During the war the average was 18.1, but jumped to 22.6 when the army was disbanded and the boys who survived the war had an opportunity to get married. During the next eight years, including 1874, the average was about 19, when it g.adually dropped to 18.8 in 1875, and rose to 19.4 again in 1883. During 1884 it fell to 18, and in the following year to 17.1.

It will be seen from the Massachusetts figures, as well as from those covering the entire country, that the marriage rate is very visibly affected by special conditions, such as war, business panics and seasons of general commercial depression.—Philadelphia Times.

MYSTERIOUS FATALITIES.

What Is It That Is Killing So Many Prominent Men?

The death of Rainer Wilhelm, ex-Gov. Hoffman, banker J. W. Drexel, Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer, Comptroller Chaffee, Gen. Waite, and Gen. R. H. Brewster, in quick succession, and all from the same cause, although having different names, "startling.

Heart and Kidneys are fatal mottles, not only for consumptive, but for many diseases more disguised but none the less fatal.

Gen. Grant had heart disease, Gov. Dorsheimer "actually a strong, well, robust man, over six feet, of gigantic frame."

Chief Justice Waite meets the same fate, and he was supremely the personification of vigor.

Drexel, the Philadelphia banker, and Brewster, ex-atty. Gen., were suddenly cut off, in the midst of great usefulness, by Bright's disease, and Dr. Carpenter, the New York physician, suddenly by heart and kidney disease, never having suspected that he was at all troubled therewith.

This reminds us of the case of Dr. Frank Hawkins, of New Orleans. He was testifying before the Louisiana University on the peculiarly deceptive character of Bright's disease and the methods of microscopical and chemical tests.

After having shown specimen after specimen of deceptive fluids, and making clear the point that kidney disease may exist without the slightest indication for four years, with perfectly easy, with gracious self-confidence he said that he was at all troubled therewith.

"He applies the test!

"Gentlemen, I have made a terrible disclosure! he gasps; I have had the fatal Bright's disease!"

Within a year this specialist of the commonest and most fatal of diseases was taken with a severe attack of Bright's disease the presence of which to himself he had so clearly demonstrated.

Dr. Ira M. Hart, M. D., a gentleman physician of the highest standing, of Hanover Ct. House, Va., says: "I have used Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and find it an excellent remedy for Bright's disease, including albumen in the urine, and pain in the back. Warner's Safe Cure is a good medicine, and I have never had the slightest cause to doubt its curative powers."

MR. JOHN HERBERT, of Concord, N. H., was given up and broken by the "best" physicians in 1878. He was in a dreadful condition. Bright's disease, dropsy, and he was "a mere skeleton, with only skin and bones." Warner's Safe Cure cured him.

Mr. Jas. Pierce, 100 Gregory St., New Haven, Conn., was first taken sick in 1873 with what his physicians called a "complicated case." Bright's disease was in all the other deceptive signs of kidney disease. The physicians gave him a "certain" cure for life. He then began using Warner's Safe Cure, and was cured by it. He and his friends are still living.

Mr. Wm. Wright, a prominent St. Charles Hotel, Cincinnati, Ohio, "was a cripple from rheumatism through the South, several years ago was in the last stage of Bright's disease, albuminuria and Bright's disease. The most Philadelphia physicians, and the best of them, had been consulted, and had given up the case. Everything else failing, he took Warner's Safe Cure, and was completely cured, and fully restored to health, and now he says, he is a well man, and can do a good day's work, which he could not do before he used Warner's Safe Cure. He owes his life to Warner's Safe Cure."

Kidney disease is the most deceptive, the most fatal, and the most insidious.

If the most learned men cannot know whether or not they are suffering from diseases that they have kidney disease, how much more so is it with the people in general, who have not had as well at formerly, but who does not feel sick enough to consult a doctor, and whose physician may assure him that he will soon be "all right."

In these days, people recognize that it is better to prevent disease than to wait its arrival to cure it. When you know that you are sick, or feel that you are not quite well, and are not able to do your work, do not wait for a bed, and I thought my work would be lighter, I weighed 250 pounds, and was reduced by this terrible disease to 150 pounds, and since I have taken Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup I have regained my weight and health, and I believe I am on the road to a cure cure, and I earnestly recommend all persons that are afflicted with rheumatic diseases, rheumatism, to give Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup a trial, as it is believed it will cure them, as it has in many instances. "I have been a sufferer from nervousness and sleeplessness for years, and have tried all the medicines and remedies that I could hear of, about Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic from the testimonials of persons who had been cured by it, and I thought it was a good medicine for immediate relief, and nervous, sleepless, and weak persons, and I recommended it to my friends. I was induced to try it myself, and I found it a most wonderful blessing to nervous people.

This wonderful remedy, whose praise is upon every tongue, is said to be most good in cases of nervous prostration, sleeplessness, exhaustion, paralysis, or other nervous diseases, affected by great nervous tone and recuperative. Here a person recommend it, Mrs. Ann Eliza Ainsworth, Director, of Attawaugan, Conn.; there a case saved from that dreadful disease, insanity, by no means. Mr. W. C. REPORT FROM NEWATGO COUNTY.

Great Excitement in White Cloud.

I have had the rheumatism for over 26 years, and have doctored with all the medicine of money. One doctor's bill was over $50. For over two years I have not been able to do my work. In July, 1886, I took to my bed, and I thought my time was short. I weighed 250 pounds, and was reduced by this terrible disease to 150 pounds, and since I have taken Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup I have regained my weight and health, and I believe I am on the road to a cure cure, and I earnestly recommend all persons that are afflicted with rheumatic diseases, rheumatism, to give Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup a trial, as it is believed it will cure them, as it has in many instances. FARM AND GARDEN.

WIRE STAKES ADVISED FOR PLANTS, A PROLIFIC WAX BEAN.

Improved Modes in Corn Culture—Valuable Facts Regarding Plows and Plowing—Some Other Matters That Will Be Found to Be of Interest.

The important subject of plows and plowing has been recently shown forth in many phases by Professor Sanborn, in a bulletin giving a report of results and observations gained and made on the Missouri state agricultural grounds. Following is a brief summary of some observations:

FIG. 1—PROPER DEPTH.

1. A defection of the traces when under draught from a straight line from shoulder to doubletree results in a decided loss of power, and such loss is applied to the gilling and worrying of the horse.

2. The use of a truck or a little wheel under the end of the plough beam gained 14.1 per cent. of the draft as an average of the trials made, and in addition gave a more uniform furrow and relieved the plowman. This saving can be made only when the line of draft is right.

3. The use of the coulter was, without exception, attended with a decided loss of force or increased draft by whatever form of coulter used, but was less with the new style coulter than with the rolling and old fashioned coulter. The average gain of draft by dispensing with the coulter was 15.6 per cent. The coulter invariably disturbed the line of draft, resulting in a furrow of different dimensions from those formed without it.

4. The draft of a plow decreases as depth of furrow increases until it reaches the plow's normal capacity, and then increases as the depth is increased beyond this capacity of the plow. This law is modified by the fact that as a furrow increases in size the ratio of cutting face or edge of plow to the furrow turned decreases.

5. The draft of a plow decreases as width of furrow increases until the normal capacity of the plow is reached, after which it increases again under the same limitations as in previous case of depth, yet it does not increase as rapid a ratio as is seen in case of depth. The absolute draft in a 15-inch furrow was less than for a 10-inch furrow.

6. The discord of these results with those previously found by others has several possible explanations, one of which may possibly be the influence of plow improvement.

7. The necessity of intelligently adjusting the furrow to the normal capacity of the plow on using only plows that will be normal to the furrow turned was made apparent. The loss in draft from a furrow varying from the plow's normal capacity by two points only was for an average of all trials of varying widths and depths 21 per cent. From the standpoint of draft it is poor economy to turn a small furrow. Three horses are better than two in plowing.

FIG. 2—IMPROPER DEPTH.

8. If one adds the saving from the three factors (double-tree, coulter, and with and depth—one gets 49.7 per cent.; or a plow with truck on, coulter off, and plow a good sized furrow, will give this per cent. of gain when put against a plow with coulter on, truck off and turning a shallow, narrow furrow; or rather the latter will draw 49.7 per cent. harder on the former, if the professor's data are correct.

9. A seven by fourteen inch furrow requires about three horse power to turn it. Those who use two horses, either turn a small, costly furrow or overdrive their horses upon and land of the latter position—a clay loam.

10. A furrow turned whose size is not normal to the plow is usually, if not always, a jerky or uneven one, and hard on the workman. The accompanying cuts, which represent the actual draft and its fluctuations at varying depths and widths, show this. Attention is called to the irregularity of the lines in Figs. 1 (proper depth) and 2 (improper depth in comparison. The wrong depth gives an uneven draft. The same was found in cases where a too narrow furrow is compared with a furrow of proper width. In both cases the more irregular lines drew the harder of the two.

The Planting and Cultivating of Corn.

The time for corn planting varies with the latitude and also depends much upon the weather. As soon as the days are mild and the ground warm is a safe rule, wherever that may be, in all localities. Three conditions are essential to the process of a paying crop of corn, namely, choice of a rich friable soil and thorough tillage. Progressive farmers have demonstrated the economy of a thorough preparation of the soil for the seed; indeed not a few of our most successful growers advocate and practice, as best and easiest, the cultivation previous to planting; that is to say, they do not use a deep plow after planting, but let all the deep culture of the soil precede it.

Where manure is required the better way is to spread it broadcast and plow it in, if coarse, or harrow it in, if well pulverized and decomposed. When manure is thoroughly incorporated in the soil, the roots of the plants are certain to take it up, and the development of ear and grain will correspond with that of stalk and leaves, which is not the case when a limited amount of fertilizer is placed in hill or drill only. To gain the best results from the employment of stimulating elements in hill or drill, available plant food must be near at hand and in sufficient quantity to carry the plant, once started, on to the perfection of its growth. An early start is a great point gained, and the employment of fertilizers in the drill is of decided advantage, provided, as has been already told, the soil outside contains sufficient food to keep up the growth of the plant. Poultry manure and Peruvian guano have each rendered valuable service when applied in the drill.

Large areas are nowadays usually planted in drills, and corn planters and cultivators are quite generally adopted, and it is commonly conceded that the drill system induces the greatest yield, other conditions being equal. Flat culture is now the general rule for the corn crop, it having long ago been proven that hilling is not required for the support of the plant, as was formerly supposed, and there is also a saving of labor in the flat culture system. A plan of drill culture, favored by some on light and naturally dry upland, is what is known as the furrow system of planting. The field is broken up as usual and made level. At the time of planting one thorough harrowing is given and the furrows laid off and thrown up into five feet beds, the corn being planted in the furrows between the beds. The object of this plan is to insure moisture to the crop. The fertilizers are sown in the bottom of the furrows and mixed with the soil by running along the furrows a sharp single shovel coulter or dragging a chain through them. Then the seed is dropped and covered.

The after cultivation is done with cultivators, which gradually level down the surface of the beds, returning the soil to the corn and leaving the general surface level when completed.

The system of "checking" corn, so that the cultivation may be in two directions, direct and across, is much practiced in the northern and western states. At the east and in many of the middle states planting in drills and cultivating shallow and flat with cultivator and hoe prevails among the more progressive farmers.

As to the matter of seed, farmers are advised for their general crops to plant such varieties as in former years have proven successful in their own localities and in soils similar to their own. Small plots may be profitably employed in testing new and promising kinds introduced by trustworthy seedsmen or other farmers.

An Improved Wax Bean.

The old German wax bean has long enjoyed an enviable reputation among wax beans. It matures early, the flavor is superior and its pods are tender, but it is not so prolific as some other varieties.

NEW PROLIFIC GERMAN WAX BEAN.

And now is introduced for the first time to the public the new prolific German wax bean, an improved strain of the old favorite German wax. This new strain, which has been tested in many localities with both field and garden culture, appears to have given very general satisfaction. Vick, who has been testing it for four years, has it catalogued this season under the name of New Prolific German Wax. His stock was started from a single seed of the old German wax, and while the general appearance of the plant of the new prolific resembles the old and retains its good points, Vick claims for the newcomer that it is a stronger and more robust grower; its pods are straighter, longer, rounder, and (tat it is more than twice as productive—in fact, combines all the good qualities of the old with the improvements wrought by years of careful selection and cultivation.

Wire Plant Stakes.

American Garden made an admirable suggestion when it advised wire plant stakes as worthy of adoption. In these days, when wire is so much used for fences and arbors, there are always short lengths left over that can be utilized for stakes. The authority referred to tells just how to do this:

Take wire of sufficient strength to afford support—small wire will do for delicate little plants, but heavy ones require stout; straighten it and cut into lengths from one to three and a half feet; then, with a strong pair of pliers or one of an anvil swage, bend one end into a ring, as in Fig. 3. It is important to put this curve on the end, as it holds the tying material in place without being so tight as to choke the plant, and without it the sharp wires are a constant source of danger, being liable to catch in the clothing and seriously injure any one throwing upon them. Groups of flower stalks can be tied up by taking three or four wires and passing the string through the wire loops. A better way when shaping the wires is to make some of them into pairs, shaped as in Fig. 1, where the two catch together, forming a wire circle to support the plants, allowing them to develop their natural beauty of growth. If these wires are dipped into thin paint or black varnish they will last for years. An easy way to do this is to stop up one end of a piece of two inch gas pipe of the right depth, fill with the varnish and quickly dip the stakes in and hang them up to dry. Make these now and you will be glad of it when staking time comes.

PLANT STAKES.

Here and There.

Now is the time to study the catalogues of trustworthy seedsmen.

According to late accounts the Louisiana strawberry crop is the largest ever grown.

Arkansas and Texas claim that the immigration into those states during the past year has been greater than in any previous season.

Prof. De Muth is quoted as saying, that lay fed to a cow between meals is worse than wasted, as it interferes with the digestion of the regular ration.

In no way can a farmer with less trouble enrich a poor field with nearly Lerbage than by feeding sheep on it. So affirms an English sheep farmer.

Readers interested in the production of silk cocoons can obtain information on the subject by applying to the commissioner of agriculture, Washington, D. C., who has on hand some silk worm eggs for distribution.

PARTY ACHIEVEMENTS.

HOW THE DEMOCRATS MADE AND LIBERALIZED A NATION.

From Atlantic to Pacific, St. Croix to Rio Grande — Josiah Quincy — Felix Grundy—Robert H. Dalsell—Wm. L. Marcy—Robert J. Walker—Alaska.

When the Democratic party first came into power the United States territory extended only to the Mississippi and south to latitude 31 degs., leaving all Florida and the lower part of the Gulf states to other nations, when it went out of power our territory stretched from ocean to ocean, from latitude 49 degs. to the Gulf and from the St. Croix to the Rio Grande. These are hard facts, which no party malice can obscure; they cannot be overthrown by all the casuistry of a Sherman and all the "gall" of an Ingalls. They persistently charge—and by persistent reiteration make some of their callow followers believe it—that Democracy is and always has been "without brains," "incapable of governing the country, etc.;" but they take good care not to mention the facts that this much stigmatized party acquired all our territory worth having, made this the leading nation of the continent, secured the present liberal constitutions for the states of the Mississippi valley, completed the separation of church and state, established an independent treasury after paying two national debts, and, in short, made the country in size east and in many of the middle states planting in drills and cultivating shallow and flat with cultivator and hoe prevails among the more progressive farmers.

As to the matter of seed, farmers are advised for their general crops to plant such varieties as in former years have proven successful in their own localities and in soils similar to their own. Small plots may be profitably employed in testing new and promising kinds introduced by trustworthy seedsmen or other farmers.

Josiah Quincy announced that the bonds of the Union were "watered, and that Massachusetts, of which he was a representative, ought to secede. The believers in centralization were wise enough to see that such an addition of territory was liable to their schemes, that the new states in the south and west would naturally be adverse to local self government. Young voters are apt to think that the habit of denouncing Democrats as "ignorant," "unpatriotic," "Jacobins, etc." was sprung up since the war; they may be surprised to learn that it was much more usual before, that Jefferson particularly was pictured as a demagogue, a libertine and an atheist, and that thousands of "old women of both sexes" actually believed that they would have their throats cut from them and burned if he were elected president. Louisiana was admitted into the Union in 1811, against the protests of Josiah Quincy and members of the house of representatives, almost every one of them from the northern states. In 1819, by a treaty with Spain, we acquired the whole of Florida and got an unquestioned title to all west of the states between it and the Mississippi. Out of this and the expeditions of Gen. Jackson, which preceded it, grew personal and party hatreds, which endured thirty years. Therefore the Democrats voted almost solidly for the new states of the west, while the opposing party was generally against them.

In this period the Democratic party contained some of the grandest men in history. There, for instance, was Felix Grundy, whose name ought to be better known to this generation—a friend of humanity whose career young Democrats should study. He was born in Berkeley county, Va., Sept. 11, 1777, and died in Nashville, Dec. 19, 1840. Nearly all his active life was spent in Tennessee, and as a representative and senator from that state; and he takes high rank among those noble men who established the liberal constitutions of those western states. Any one who will compare the constitution of Tennessee, for instance, with that of any of the New England or Atlantic states of the time of its adoption, will be struck with the contrast—especially as to the property rights of women, the exemption of witnesses from compulsory exposure of their religion, and the complete separation of church and state; but it is a great and generally known fact that the Republican justices of the supreme court are changing back to it, despite all the constitution of the war period.

When Thomas Jefferson acquired Louisiana the Federalists fell afoul of him with abuse, the reading of which now makes us think of Billingsgate and scurrility. Josiah Quincy announced that the bonds of the Union were dissolved, and that Massachusetts, of which he was a representative, ought to secede. The believers in centralization were wise enough to see that such an addition of territory was liable to their schemes, that the new states in the south and west would naturally be adverse to local self government. Young voters are apt to think that the habit of denouncing Democrats as "ignorant," "unpatriotic," "Jacobins, etc." was sprung up since the war; they may be surprised to learn that it was much more usual before, that Jefferson particularly was pictured as a demagogue, a libertine and an atheist, and that thousands of "old women of both sexes" actually believed that they would have their throats cut from them and burned if he were elected president. No, her Democrat of note during the war, the Democrats were rounding out the borders of the nation, was the refined and scholarly Joel R. Poinsett, of South Carolina. He learned medicine and the natural sciences at the famed university of Edinburgh and military engineering at Woolwich. However, his life in Great Britain only made him love his country more, and he came home to devote his life to her service. In 1810 he went to South America, under the President Madison to advise and assist the friends of liberty there; in 1822 he went to Mexico on a similar errand, and his able reports to Presidents Monroe and Adams give the best picture of the peculiar condition of Mexican affairs in the disturbed period following her march to freedom. These reports were read and digested, all far seeing men knew that the time was near at hand when the United States must extend to the Rio Grande and Pacific. He was secretary of war under President Van Buren, and further secretary of the navy under President Van Buren's administration; but the bringing of that treasury to its highest efficiency and establishing the fairest system of revenue this country ever had, was the work of Robert J. Walker. The Whigs indulged in some ridicule of Marcy because he did not insist upon extending our northwestern boundary up to 59 or 49 degs.; but the solid fact remains that when he came into office there was no undisputed title to Oregon, and when he went out we had, South of Oregon and west of the Rocky mountains added to the territory of the United States a region as large as the state of Ohio, a region which has contributed to the national treasure $1,600,000,000 in gold and silver.

In conclusion, perhaps, the other side should be heard. Well, the Republicans have brought—Alaska! Once or twice a year the Republican party has occasion to demonstrate to prove that the country was worth having, but its people are still "without brains." Mr. Wind-gulls (or whatever his Kansas name is), would probably say that the common people are "without brains" to appreciate it.

Danger.

Do you know that you are liable to attacks of Dyspepsia and all kinds of Stomach Derangements? Yes, worse still, to that result of Kidney and Liver disorder that is known as Diabetes or possibly Bright's Disease. They are often fatal and that in a very short time. Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Dimness of Vision, Dizziness, Pain in Side and Back and many others are but the symptoms of disease. Worth Knowing.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City, Fla., was taken with a severe cold, attended with a distressing cough and running into consumption. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced to a fleshless skeleton, in bed, and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New discovery for Consumption, and realizing immediate benefit from the first dose, took it regularly and was soon about a half dozen bottles found himself well, and has been a sufferer from the disease. No remedy can show so grand a record of cures as this. Sure to win. New discovery for Consumption guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it. Trial bottles free at all druggists' drug store. 1

Coughs and Colds

Are the inevitable results of sudden changes in the weather. Immediate attention should be given them so that they may not become established, and result in Bronchitis, Congestion, Inflammation or even consumption. Hamilton's Cough Balsam soothes the irritated membranes, assists in removing Phlegm and Mucus, that by its adhesion to the membranes, causes violent coughing. Great relief is received by even those in the Last Stages of consumption. In croup and whooping cough it is unrivalled. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman. apr

Remove Her Youth.

Mrs. Phebe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co. Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of that town: "I am 72 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and backache for many years' could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." DEATH OF A FAMOUS TROTTER.

Dexter, Once King of the Turf, Dies of Old Age and Exhaustion.

DEXTER, the famous trotter, died at the stable of Mr. Robert Bonner, in New York City, last week. He died of old age and exhaustion. The body was buried at Mr. Bonner's farm, at Tarrytown, N. Y. For years the story of the best trotting record fell to the honor of Flora Temple, and she held it until Dobbs took it from her with Dexter in 2:17¼. That was the best time until Dobbs beat it with the same horse, whose record he finally worked down to 2:17. Subsequently he lowered that record with Goldsmith Maid, who went the mile in 2:14. She remained the queen of the turf until the advent of St. Julien, who in turn was beaten before Maud S., who has the present and best trotting record ever made, 2:08¼. Dexter was 30 years old when he died. Except as an advertisement he was never of much use to Mr. Bonner, who seldom ventured to drive him. The proprietor of the Ledger paid $25,000 for the horse, but very soon afterward his record was beaten. Bonner loved his horse and was always eccentric and vicious.

DETAILS OF THE CHINESE EARTHQUAKE.

Terrible Loss of Life and Property in the Province of Yunnan.

By the arrival at San Francisco of the steamer City of New York from China, we get details of the earthquake in Yunnan. The Prefect of Lin An, with Chi Hiens of Shih Ping and the Kien Hsien, in that town, has reported to the Governor of Yunnan as follows:

From the second day of the twelfth month of the last Chinese year (the 18th of January this year) there were quite shocks of earthquake, accompanied with a noise like thunder. Yamen, in the City of Shih Ping, and Kien Shih were either knocked down or cracked. On the 14th there was another shock. On Shih Ping eight or nineteen of the houses in the south fell down and half those in the east; in the northwest about 100 were cracked or bent out of the perpendicular. Over 300 people, both men and women, old and young, were crushed to death and over 500 wounded, some of them dying. At Hiang over 800 were crushed to death and about 700 or 800 wounded. At Nan Hiang over 200 were killed and over 400 injured. At Ch Hiang about 300 were killed and the same number injured. The above four places are situated in the town and suburbs over 8,000 people were either killed or wounded. In the country round about, houses were broken down, and the rest are cracked and bent out of over. In the northwest about 30 to 40 houses were overturned, killing 20 people, and wounding 150 to 160.

The Emperor Better.

The doctors attending the German Emperor declare the published descriptions of his Majesty's sufferings, with the exception of the difficulty in breathing, are exaggerated. He suffers from no local pain whatever. Absolute rest is still imperative. It is impossible to predict whether or not the present improvement will continue. The favorable turn in his condition, however, has awakened but slight hopes of recovery.

Tate, the Defaulter.

The amount of ex-Treasurer Tate's defalcation, with all credits made, is now placed at $150,000. It is learned that just before leaving Louisville, Tate sent the negro porter to the bank for a large sum, saying he wanted to pay a school claim. As no such school claims were due this is evidence that he took with him $75,000 to $100,000.

Minister Pendleton Recovering.

Cincinnati, Mrs. Mcenen's Pendleton is rapidly recovering. He is attended by his daughter, who hurried to his bedside at Berlin from Italy, where she was on a tour for her health. Mr. Pendleton's physician advises him to abstain from work for a long time.

Telegrams in Brief.

The dry-goods firm of Marks & Hyman, of Tyler, Texas, has failed for $50,000.

AUGUSTUS DALY'S theatrical troupe has left for New York on the Scythia for England.

HORTON, born at Springfield, Ohio, were fined and imprisoned for passing off oleomargerine as pure butter.

HENRY E. ABBEY has released M. Damala, Sarah Bernhardt's husband, from his contract for a tour in America.

AT Austin, Texas, the new State House has been opened. Thousands of people were present at the dedicatory exercises.

ROBERT DE FAUCONNET and Comte d'Ecl-man fought a duel at Meudon, near Paris. The Comte was wounded. The duel arose from a dispute about Gen. Boulanger.

A Day in the House.

THE Freedmen's Bureau bill was reported to the House by Mr. Collins from the Judiary Committee on April 20. The Texas free ... bill was also reported to the House by the Committee on Commerce Marine and Fisheries. It is identical with the bill reported to the last Congress, and provides that the Texas Commissioners may submit to Congress the question of the assent of the Texas Legislature to the vessels admitted to American registry to be free of duties and exempt prohibiting them from engaging in the coastwise trade of the United States. The Oklahoma bill was also similar to that which accompanied the report at the last session. The bill for the relief of the Cherokee Nation was also reported. The House went into the committee of the whole and passed the committee proved that it had the House under good control, for an amendment to the rule offered by a member from the other side was voted down by a large majority. The House then adjourned, after a resolution had been offered that there was quite exceptional and could be no increased expenditure of money, and requiring the House voted down the amendment and withdrew the committee.

THE EASTERN STATES.

THE new building of the Consolidated Exchange, at New York, has been opened.

ELIZABETH ARNOLD, a colored woman, has just died at Pittsburg, at the age of 118.

DR. ASHBY, the celebrated New York physician who was the first to be called in when Roscoe Conkling was shot, died at his residence last night.

After the operation the patient rallied, and, though suffering considerable pain, seemed relieved, but he later grew worse, and was unconscious for some time before he died.

FIRE at North Braddock, Pa., caused a loss of $60,000. Fifty persons were rendered homeless.

A WOMAN who was wounded in the hand by a rooster on the farm of Ephraim Hershey, at Lancaster, Pa., died from lockjaw.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Roscoe Conkling took place in Trinity Chapel, New York City, Rev. Morgan Dix officiating. The remains were taken by special train to Utica, where the burial services and interment were held.

At Newark, N. J., the planing mill of Jarvis & McClure was destroyed by fire, at a loss of $60,000, partially insured.

THE WESTERN STATES.

THE gates of the Columbus (Ohio) Penitentiary have at last closed upon Benjamin E. Hopkins, Harper's accomplice in the wreck of the Toledo bank. Hopkins goes down for a term of seven years and eight months. He professes to be very ill, and to expect to leave the prison a corpse.

FIVE MILROAD laborers were fatally injured by the premature explosion of a blast at Labadie, Mo.

A NEWARK, Wis., special says that on the upper Wolf river, near Embarrass, an entire family named Lathrop, comprising father, mother and three children, were drowned in the flood. They lived in a small shanty near the bank of the stream, and though they had been warned to leave their dangerous abode, they neglected to do so, and the floods swept the building and occupants down the stream.

The Standard Oil Company's plants at Fort Wayne, Ind., has been destroyed by fire. Loss on building $12,000.

At Cincinnati, Ohio, the Betts Street Furniture Company's factory was burned, causing a loss of $60,000; fully insured.

The stave works of J. T. Jackson, at Menfis, Ind., were destroyed by fire, with a loss of from $15,000 to $20,000, and no insurance.

THE Consolidated Tank Line Company's building, near Cincinnati, Ohio, has been destroyed by fire. The loss of $20,000 is partially insured.

THREE bodies have been taken from the ruins of the Bethel House at Lynn, which was destroyed by fire. Four other persons were badly hurt. The loss is $16,000.

EIGHT horse thieves were caught by an armed posse thirty miles from Purcell, I. T., after a running fight, and strung up without confession or prayers. Some of the posse were killed.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

MAJOR JOHN S. RUDD, member of Longstreet's staff during the rebellion, committed suicide with chloroform at Coal Valley, West Virginia.

A STRANGE story of murder and swift retribution comes from Calhoun County, West Virginia. Jacob Holies returned home late at night, accompanied by George Freels, a peddler, and on arriving at the house they saw through the window that Mrs. Hollies and her three children lay dead on the floor, and that four men who killed them were still in the house. At Freels suggestion Hollies made a noose at the back door, while the peddler crept near the front door, and as the unknown ones came out of the house he shot three of them dead, and severely wounded the fourth. J. S. HAMILTON, on trial at Preston, Md., on a charge of having murdered Roderick Ross, near Greensboro, April 7, last, has been acquitted.

ISAAC EDENFIELD and his wife Fuss, both colored, living near Gallatin, Tenn., were taken from their house by a mob. The woman was first hanged in her night dress, and the man was then shot to death. The woman was suspected of arson.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

THE national legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill, as agreed upon in the House committee, appropriates $39,472,396, which is $867,506 less than the estimate and $209 046 less than the current appropriations for the same service.

THE President has vetoed the bills granting pensions to Hannah H. Langdon, Betsy Mansfield, and Laura A. Wright, on the ground that the deaths did not result from injuries received during the war, or sickness due to army service; and until it is established as a policy that all soldiers' widows shall be pensioned, it is unfair and unjust to make exceptions in favor of only such as procure the passage of special acts.

SECRETARY FAYARD is to marry Mrs. Folsom, the mother of Mrs. Cleveland.

COMMISSIONER of Arbitration, whose duties are to investigate the causes of labor troubles between interstate common carriers and their employes, are provided for in a bill which has passed the House at Washington. These commissioners are also to act as arbitrators when requested to do so by both parties to the dispute.

The Metropolitan Club House in Washington has been damaged by fire to the extent of $10,000 or $15,000

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

The Republican Convention of the Seventh Congressional District of Georgia has nominated Maj. Z. B. Hargrove, of Rome, for Congress.

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch of Wednesday says "the election throughout Louisiana was exceedingly quiet, not a single breach of the peace being reported outside of the city, where three assaults have occurred. Messrs. Nicholls and the entire Democratic State ticket are elected by a majority, probably 50,000 or 60,000. In the city of New Orleans the regular Democratic ticket for Mayor and other municipal officers was defeated, which ends the 'ring' rule from which the city has so long suffered."

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch says that "further returns from the interior of the State show unexpectedly heavy Democratic gains. Nicholls' majority will probably reach 75,000 or 80,000. Parishes that never failed to go Republican heretofore are Democratic for the first time. In New Orleans the regular Democratic ticket has been beaten clean out of sight by that of the Young Men's Democratic Association, the majorities ranging from 8,000 to 12,000."

THE Ohio Republican State Convention, at Dayton, was presided over temporarily by ex-Speaker Keifer, who yielded to the Hon. E. L. Lampson as permanent Chairman. The following State ticket was nominated: For Secretary of State, Daniel J. Ryan; for Supreme Court Judge, J. F. Bradbury; for member of Board of Public Works, W. S. Jones. Gov. Forster, ex-Gov. Foster, and Congressmen McKinley and Butterworth were nominated delegates-at-large to the National Republican Convention. The resolutions were read by ex-Gov. Foster, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. The platform declares for the protection of American industries, and for the Blair educational bill; denounces the Democratic party for "suppressing votes in the South and nullifying the war amendments of the Constitution"; declares it the duty of Congress to pass a comprehensive pension bill; endorses the Democrats in Congress for not passing the direct-tax bill; and declares in favor of such economic legislation as will protect all American industries that can be profitably pursued by American citizens. John Sherman was indorsed for President in the following resolution:

The Republican party recognizes the merits, services, and abilities of the statesmen who have for the President of the Republic, any one who may be selected, presents John Sherman as one who by an eminently qualified had time the duties of that exalted office, and the delegates to the Republican National Convention from this district are directed to use all honorable means to secure the nomination of Senator Sherman.

AN Indianapolis dispatch says that "conventions were held in each Congressional district of Indiana on Thursday for the selection of delegates to the National Republican Convention. Overall there was a sweeping victory for Gen. Harrison. The Tenth district delegates were given no instructions, but they are Harrison men. The sentiment seems almost unanimously in favor of the nomination of the Hon. A. G. Porter for Governor."

THE FOREIGN BUDGET.

MR. MATTHEW ARNOLD, the noted English poet, scholar, and critic, whose recent article on "Civilization in the United States" attracted so much attention, left suddenly in Liverpool, from heart disease. Mr. Arnold went to Liverpool to meet his daughter, who was on her way to England from New York. He was to all appearance in excellent health. He attended church and after luncheon went out for a walk with Mrs. Arnold. He was still in high spirits. Soon after leaving his home he suddenly fell forward and never afterward spoke. The daughter arrived at Liverpool an hour after his death. Mr. Arnold was 67 years of age.

THE Bundesrath has voted to expel from Germany Herr Bernstein, the editor of the Social Gazette, together with the publisher and two sub-editors.

MR. PENDLETON, the American Minister, was taken with apoplexy on the train while traveling from Wiesbaden to Frankfort, Germany. He was insensible when taken to the hospital at Wiesbaden, where the paralysis was found to be slight and to be confined to one side. He is reported much better, and his complete recovery is expected.

THE WORLD AT LARGE.

A COMPANY has been organized in Canada to organize toboggan slides throughout the country.

THE prince winter wheat crop report in the Northwestern States is good.

The developments of the last fourteen days, and particularly the last seven, have put a large percentage of the winter wheat in a condition where it can not recover, even if there should be an abundant and seasonable supply of moisture, but both have failed to give the impression of a reliable character at this stage of the season, and we have reduced our estimate 5 per cent. from all the same time last year, and 10 per cent. from the average crop. The remainder ranges from fair to very poor. Take the State of Ohio as a whole, the condition is decidedly unfavorable, and the showing at present is poor and discouraging.

The City Brewery of Peoria, Ill., was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $100,000. R. G. Dun & Co., in their last weekly trade review, say:

There are higher prices in speculation, but not in general trade. Cotton, provisions, and stocks are stronger, and breadstuffs are strong with oil and provisions; but purchases for consumption are so restricted that almost every important branch of manufacture feels the effect of it, and the aggregate of business done in both cities and towns of two years is already 10 per cent. than at the same time last year, and a decrease of over fifty per cent. at New York. Prices of manufactured products and the raw materials are generally lower, in spite of a material advance in speculative markets. The failures for the week are 214, in spite of all printed a slight lower than at the opening of the year. Wheat has risen 7c, cotton, 7c, provisions, 25c, and pig iron, 50c, while nearly 1 cent, hogs 35 cents per 100 pounds, and

THE last half-season of the National League of Baseball Clubs, commenced on April 19, at Chicago defeated the Indianapolis team 5 to 4; Pittsburg defeated Philadelphia twelve to nine, 5 to 2; Boston overcame the Philadelphias, 4 to 3, and New York calentined Washington, 8 to 4. Last season the Chicago and Indianapolis game was a fat fight between the managers and players, which, in the first and certain police officers became notably active.

A PENSION of $25 was imposed by the Commissioner of Pensions, which was accepted after the game.

ROSCOE CONKLING DEAD.

His Last Hours Painless, and Weeping Friends Watched His Slow but Sure Decline.

Pathetic Scenes in the Sick-Room—Biographical Sketch of the Famous Ex-Senator.

(Special New York telegram.)

Roscoe Conkling, the famous ex-Senator, died in his room in the Hoffman House annex at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning. He began declining rapidly early in the day, and was with slight concessions, steadily from forenoon, sinking swiftly into the coma that preceded death. When his death took place, he was alone, with, there were beside him but his wife, his physician, Dr. Ashby, and his nurse, Mrs. Sagdeer. Dr. Ashbrook, and the colored nurse Mr. Conkling passed away without moving a limb. He looked as though peacefully sleeping. There were a number of persons outside of the street waiting to learn the last report within there were tears between forty and fifty persons present when the end came. Mrs. Conkling was not present at the death bed of the great and friends of the dead Senator.

The last days of Mr. Conkling were passed in great pain and suffering, but at last his end came with the quietude of sleep. The last days of the great Senator were passed in the room in which he died. Mr. Conkling and his daughter Julia were up bravely, but the latter alone was the most prostrated of Mrs. Conkling, accompanied her mother. The last days of the great Senator were passed in the room in which he died. Mr. Conkling passed three or four times and passed away. In death the one-armed hero looked as he did on his face was slightly drawn, but still his face seemed full of life.

It was a sorrowful group that surrounded the sick man's bedside, and tearfully watched the passing away of the great orator. It is strange fancy that to his delirium required the presence of his dead wife, who was waiting for him in the other day now and illness in the bloodless, emaciated form, the old lion-like spirit, lines vanished, and the old, sonorous sound reverberated through the halls of the sufferer. He, thinking

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids,

THURSDAY, MAY, 10TH, 1888,

AT 12 o'clock noon.

For the purpose of electing delegates to the Democratic National Convention, called to meet at St Louis, Missouri, June 5, 1888, the selection of a State Central Committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

The convention will elect four delegates and four alternates at large, twenty-two district delegates (two each congressional district and twenty-two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, from each congressional district, and a chairman at large.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 200 votes. But any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the county they represent.

The delegates from each Congressional District will meet in caucus at ten o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention and recommend candidates, as follows: Two district delegates, two district alternates, two members of the State Central Committee, one vice-president of the convention, and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

All voters who are in accord with the present Democratic administration in its efforts to reduce taxation to the legitimate wants of the national government, economically administered, are invited to participate in the selection of delegates to this convention.

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.

JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four (4) delegates.

Ninth Congressional District Democratic Caucus at Grand Rapids.

Delegates from the ninth congressional district to the democratic state convention, to be held at Grand Rapids, on Thursday, May 10, will meet in caucus at the Morton House, at 11 o'clock, sharp, on the morning of the convention, for the purpose of nominating two district delegates, two alternates, two members of the state central committee, one vice-president of the convention, one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business, and resolutions, and the transaction of any other business that may properly come before the caucus

By order of congressional committee.

WM. F. NISBITT, chairman.

Big Rapids, Mich., April 21, 1888.

REPRESENTATIVE FORD, of Grand Rapids, delivered a powerful speech the other day, in support of the Mills tariff bill, which we shall have occasion to make liberal extracts from before the campaign closes.

At the meeting of the democratic county committee on May 1st, Geo. W. Crouter, H. S. Newson, F. E. Bossinger and E. Shay were named as delegates to the democratic state convention at Grand Rapids, May 10. J. Milo Eaton was named to fill the vacancy in the office of secretary.

CONCERNING the appointment of M. W. Fuller to the office of Chief Justice of the United States supreme court, it is said that Judge Cooley, of Michigan, chairman of the inter-state commerce commission, said the appointment was a most excellent one. He telegraphed Judge Fuller his congratulations.

THE republican papers are trying to make fun of the President's veto of the bill for the relief of the army paymaster who had a sum of money stolen from him while he was absorbed in destroying a pie. But the President is right, and his refusal to see that even the allurements of pie are any excuse for inattention to duty is an impressive illustration of the rigid honesty with which he conducts his administration.

PROBABLY no shipload of people were ever more glad to reach shore than the passengers of the Catalonia, which brought over Mr. Sullivan. To be on a ship at sea with Mr. Sullivan on a drunken rampage is truly an appalling situation. The scene of terror on board the Catalonia can be but faintly imagined. It must have surpassed in its awful horror the scene on board the man-o'-war, so vividly described by Victor Hugo, when an eighty ton gun burst from its fastenings during a terrific storm and plunged madly down the deck, crushing down the crew and battering down the sides of the vessel.—Chicago Herald.

Chief Justice Fuller.

On Monday, April 30, the president sent to the senate the name of Melville W. Fuller for the vacant office of Chief Justice of the United States supreme court. Those acquainted with Mr. Fuller say a more fitting selection, or one that would better command the respect of the bar and the country, could not have been made by President Cleveland. Rich in the acquirements essential to the judicial character, Mr. Fuller also possesses the firm and just mind and the sober age necessary to him who would worthily fill the seat made illustrious by Jay and Ellsworth, by Marshall and Taney. A lawyer in the very front rank of his profession, thoroughly versed in the wide and varied learning of American law, he is also a scholar; and a ripe and good one. The law is a jealous mistress, and exacts from her devotees the most unwearying allegiance, yet while giving this mistress all her due, Mr. Fuller has found time to stray at times in the alluring field of literature, and to cultivate and widen his mind by liberal studies. This has, indeed, made him all the better lawyer, and will make him all the better judge. Few of his predecessors have been more excellently equipped in these respects. Mr. Fuller is of unimpeachable integrity, and his private character is exemplary in every respect. He is about 54 years of age, is in good health and gives promise of a long and brilliant career on the bench. He is exceedingly courteous in his manner, but firm in his convictions of right. He is not a partisan, but is a democrat in the enlarged and better sense—a democrat in principle. His appointment will give great satisfaction to the people of the northwest, without regard to his party, and to the entire country, as soon as his character and great abilities are known.

A Buested Boom.

The republican scheme to capture the Fifth Congressional district has proved a dismal failure. Capt. Chas. E. Belknap, their strongest man, whom they elected mayor of Grand Rapids in 1884 by 726 majority, was again put on the track backed by a a colossal campaign fund, which was calculated to elect him mayor by 1,000 majority and put him in congress next fall. But I. M. Weston took the fusion nomination, polled the biggest vote ever given a candidate for mayor in Grand Rapids and knocked out the republican champion.

Now Belknap is further disgraced by the unlawful action of his republican managers who are on record in the late decision of the supreme court as guilty of a midnight raid on the ballot boxes and a high-handed attempt to defeat the will of the people by an illegal recount of the votes before an illegal tribunal. This settles Belknap's aspirations and assures Congressman Ford's re-election by a round 1,000 majority.—Grand Rapids Leader.

Williams Hall, at the agricultural college, was damaged by fire to the amount of $1,000 on Monday.

H. E. H. Bower, editor of the Ann Arbor Democrat, died suddenly on Monday, of kidney complaint.

Bay City liquor men have organized and propose to compel all dealers to pay a license and abide the law.

Connable's new flash tug, the J. W. Parmelee, started out Tuesday morning, with a full outfit of nets, etc.

While the new light house is being built at Skillagalee, a light of the fourth order will be shown near at hand.

Twice a day mail service has been ordered between Traverse City and Elk Rapids. This will be a wonderful convenience to both places.

No. 3 of the Antrim County Advertiser, published at Bellaire, is a clean six-column folio, full of vim, with an excellent local page. It bids fair to hustle the Breeze.

Work has begun upon the foundation walls of the new patients' cottage at the asylum at Traverse City. The building is to cost $13,000, completed and furnished.

The Saginaw Daily Courier has just celebrated its eighteenth birthday. It is a model paper, always newsy, clean and enterprising, and is a sheet that is of particular interest to lumber and salt men.

W. F. Hubbard, of Rapid River, had an artificial trout pond which promised good profits for the season, but last week it broke away at a loss of over $200, besides destroying this year's fishing completely.

A twenty-two inch vein of what appears to be an excellent quality of hard coal, was struck on the farm belonging to D. P. Wittmore, just south of Mason, Ingham county, while workmen were drilling a well, thirty feet from the surface. Smaller veins have been struck in other parts of the city at different times, and there is no doubt whatever but coal exists there in paying quantities.

The Ostego County Herald, one of the oldest newspapers in this section of the state, having been published in the interest of the republican party during the last fourteen years comes out in the last issue as a democratic paper, and will henceforth advocate the good, sound, honest doctrine, as set forth in the principles and practice of the democratic party.

Many of our extensive lumberman have been complaining for years that land cut over, that they would almost give away, were being assessed at a value of $2 or $3 per acre by the supervisors of townships. We hear that one of our most extensive lumber firms recently deeded several thousand acres to parties in New York to get rid of the taxes on their valueless lands.—Cheboygan Tribune.

Elk Rapids must have a railroad and we desire to impress it upon the minds of our citizens that if they will but form an organization and act, the sooner we will have one. Get up a citizen's improvement association and work for the C, & W. M. as we feel positive that something can be done. The companies here are always ready to come in for their share when there is any chance for improving the village and when it would be of special value to their business.—Progress.

The First Boat.

Last week we stated that the Lawrence was at Frankfort on Monday. She afterwards started for Beaver Island, but found the ice too heavy, and headed for Charlevoix. She gradually worked this way, arriving here Friday noon, and discharged nearly a full cargo of freight at Emrey's dock in the afternoon. She is therefore the first boat in. Capt. Finucan exhibited a wonderful peristence in working his boat in the ice three days to reach this port, for which our people should certainly feel grateful. If the Northern Michigan boats are handled all the season with the care and business persistence of this officer, the company will have no such losses against them as they had last year. The Lawrence cleared Saturday morning

OF IMPORTANCE TO DRUGGISTS.

And Such Persons as Contemplate Engaging in the Drug Business in Michigan

Act No. 134, laws of 1885, amended 1887, entitled "an act to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the state of Michigan," requires that every pharmacy or drug store must be in charge of a registered pharmacist; that no drugs, medicines or poisons can be sold or prescriptions compounded except by a registered pharmacist or a registered assistant pharmacist, or under the personal supervision of a registered pharmacist. A registered assistant pharmacist cannot supervise or manage a store, he can do a certain work himself but he cannot supervise anyone else. He may be allowed to remain in charge of a pharmacy during those temporary absences of the registered pharmacist in charge of pharmacy which are incidental to any business. Therefore a registered pharmacist must be in charge of every drug store or store of any description where drugs, medicines or poisons, within the meaning of that act, are sold. Having a registered pharmacist's certificate hanging up in the store does not answer the requirement, the registered pharmacist must actually be in charge.

Any person not a registered pharmacist, within the meaning of that act, contemplating starting or purchasing a drug store, or of adding a line of drugs to a general store, must employ and place in personal charge a registered pharmacist. Such proprietor can only compounds physicians prescriptions, or sell drugs, medicines and poisons, in the absence of the registered pharmacist in charge, except a few articles allowed to be sold by anyone under section 10 of said law.

In case of violation of the law, if complained of, it is made the bounden obligatory upon the board to investigate the case, and if such case is based upon facts it prosecutes the offender. For this purpose they employ an attorney who has been very successful in securing convictions. Out of thirteen cases tried since August 1st, 1887, he has secured eleven convictions; one case was lost on account of a defect in the complaint and the other case by reason of an unreliable witness.

The board proposes to see the law enforced and take this method of informing the public of the fact, and also as a warning to those who may now be violating the law or may intend to violate the law hereafter, that they will be prosecuted if such violation comes to the knowledge of the board. It is the moral duty of every registered pharmacist in the state to notify the board of violations. Such complaint should be filed with the secretary, duly signed by the person cognisant of the facts. Notifications not signed will for good reasons not receive any attention. The person giving the information will not be required to take part in the prosecution, or be known in the case, but we desire the name so as to know that it is a bona fide complaint. We do not desire to do any person an injury, but intend that all must live up to the law.

The board meet upon the first Tuesday in March, July and November of each year for the purpose of examining candidates for registration. Do not engage in the drug business until registered as required by law; a failure to pass may leave you with a stock of goods on hand that you cannot sell at retail yourself. In such case you must place a registered pharmacist in charge at once.

Copies of the law and such other information as may be deemed can be secured by addressing the Secretary.

The Sentinel gives Mr. Berdan another boost for the nomination to the office of sheriff.

A committee of the council is laboring with the authorities to secure a little dredging of the channel at once to be paid for out of the unexpended appropriation, with fair hopes of success. It is believed that there is enough available money to give us full twelve feet to the bridge, and a letter from the engineer to J. Milo Eaton gives assurance that the work will be done if possible.

The steamer Jos. Gordon goes into the water next week. Her old friends will not recognize her, so complete will be the transformation. She has has been lengthened 15 feet, planked new above the water line, raised several inches, and will be modeled something after the style of the Gazelle. It is expected that she will accommodate the Pine Lake trade better than ever.

There is a craze now going the rounds which may safely become popular. It is the "lime craze." The fad is to keep every dime that is paid you in change, and under no circumstances to again pay it out. If you have only a dime in your pocket and want a cigar go without it rather than spend it. At first it is a little hard, but after a while it is said that real pleasure is taken in this self-denial. Try the new craze, you will be surprised at the number of dimes you will save up.

A farmer who knows what he is talking about hits the nail on the head when he says that raising pays better than good county roads. It costs something to secure them, but they are the arteries which connect village and country, along which the life currents of business, prosperity, safety and solid comfort perpetually flow. Bad roads, chuck holes, slough and bottomless mud, kills time, team and temper. Be sure then that money thus intelligently expended is wisely invested and sure to realize future satisfactory results.

To-day, to-morrow, and Saturday occurs Alick Rosenthal's grand opening and special sale of dry goods, clothing, carpets, etc., and every lady will be attracted by the rich display of dress goods, trimmings, laces, etc., in the show windows. Alick and all his clerks have been busy for a week opening boxes of new goods, and arranging them for effective display, and those ladies who want first choice of the best goods must call at once. Alick proposes to keep in the front of the procession, and his efforts this spring will doubtless be appreciated by our people.

While our people are discussing the propriety of giving bonuses to aid in the establishment here of certain factories, how would it do to include in that consideration a little bonus to the Charlevoix Mfg. Co., to enlarge the plant, and to enable them to run all winter, and give employment to our mechanics, now here, instead of closing, as has been done every winter. While the men are lying idle, or working in the woods they get discouraged and naturally look elsewhere for steady employment all the year. A little encouragement in this direction would come back into the coffers of our merchants in more regular and satisfactory order than now, and as all the year factory would be a big encouragement to other factories that wanted to run all the year. Look it up a little.

A. T. Washburne & Co. are decorating their windows and counters this morning for their spring opening announced in another column. The shelves and counters are piled full of the latest styles of all kinds of dry goods,—the ladies know the list if we do not enumerate. There is also a profusion of flowers from Mooch's greenhouse, to add a charm to the scene. When the sun shines to-morrow morning, the entire store will be like a fairy-land, and Al. will be in his glory. That all this advertising pays, is attested by the fact that more room is needed to accommodate the trade, and the basement is being fitted up for a carpet room, and to accommodate the Indian basket work. An open stairway will be built near the middle of the store, for the convenience of the patrons who are looking after those specialities. This firm is well prepared for their spring rush, and people from the surrounding country will do well to be present during their opening days.

BILL NYE, ON A SCALDED CHILD.

JAG 1.

Come, all kind friends, both old and young,
Oh, hark, and you shall hear
How death did quickly snatch a child
The parents loved most dear.
Our sad and heart of this little flock
Was caught on a stove by its little frock,
In falling it scalded its little chin,
When the parents dear were not away.

JAG 2.

And to see and hear, but not to save,
Their little boy from a watery grave,
Which pale them in mind of one of you
Who died by a scald while on the flow,
Strange! their locks were burned on a Sabbath day,
And placed in the ground on Tuesday;
A family living in the young room
Stunned to the depest of grief and gloom.

JAG 3.

Eighteen months Jessie spent with them
And enamored them with its smile
But soon they mourn, for death call one of woe
For their dear scalded child
But Oh! what sorrow fills their heart,
'Tis more than tongue can tell,
To think how soon the time did come
To take Jessie last farewell.

JAG 4.

And now the little boy has went
To that bright world above,
Let us improve by this way
Are scalding, no joke
Then Josephine now a warning take,
Prepare to meet your God,
That you may meet your happy flock
In yonder blest abode.
Death may lurk around the throne,
Parents, children, young and old;
Where farewell tears are never shed
And scaldings are no more.

HE WAS A GOOD PROVIDER.

BY MRS. W. E. SMITH.

When Katie Watson became Mrs. Deacon Lee, everyone said what a good match she had made; for the Deacon was an honorable, upright man, pleasant, kind and generous; and in addition to this, was owner of the best farm for miles around, including a large piece of woodland.

Jessie seemed very much occupied with her own thoughts next day as she went about her work. At last a gleam of mischief came into her eyes, and she seemed to have arrived at some settled determination, for, as she hung the last piece of her snowy ironing on the clothes-bars, she brought her small foot down very emphatically and said:

"I'll do it if I ever have a chance."

Her chance came that having-time. Deacon Lee had a nice lot of hay to put in, and, as it was the fashion there for the farmers to change work, he concluded to have a bee. Accordingly, he asked a number of his friends to come, and made arrangements for a big day's work.

But when he returned to the house, after mowing a roadway to the north meadow, he found that Mrs. Lee had been taken suddenly ill. The doctor was hastily summoned, who said it was necessary that the patient be kept perfectly quiet—must not be worried about anything—or it would result in brain fever. He left two or three bottles of medicine, and went away again, leaving the Deacon almost in danger of brain fever himself.

What should he do? In spite of his thoughtlessness, he dearly loved Katie, and was very anxious about her now. In addition to this anxiety, were his thoughts of the bee and the care of his little girl and sick wife. What wonder that his face was very grave as he leaned over his wife, asking if there was anything he could do or get for her.

He had her welfare too much at heart to say one word that would worry her, so when she began to speak of her work he kissed her forehead and told her that would be all right. But he was relieved when she mentioned Jessie; he went to the window at once, to watch for some one passing by whom he could send word; but, as no one came, he was obliged to leave little Tod go for the nearest neighbor to stay with Katie while he went after Jess.

He found that young lady willing to come and take care of her sister; but a look the Deacon did not quite understand, or like, flashed into her face when the bee was mentioned.

"I don't know, John," she said, "whether I can cook to suit you. You know I am rather particular about what I have to work with, and my way may not be a way you'd like."

Now the Deacon rather prided himself on keeping a well-furnished storeroom and good kitchen garden, so he smiled very complacently and replied that if she was obliged to prepare a dinner in that shape, he guess'd he could stand it.

"Boys, I propose that we get some wood for Mas Jessie to cook a little dinner with." And the cheerful way in which they accepted the proposition made the Deacon ashamed of his momentary anger.

When, an hour and a half later, they again seated themselves at the table, he was honest enough to acknowledge to Jessie before them all that the lesson had been needed and he would try to profit by it.

He did profit by it; for when, a couple of months later, Mrs. Lee was first able to walk out in the yard, the Deacon, with pardonable pride, took her to see a large, new woodshed, well stocked with hardwood and building, telling her as they stood there of the way Jessie got dinner for him, and how sorry he was that the woodshed had not been built years before.

A mile or so from the Deacon's there is a cozy little house where Jessie cooks for one person, Mr. Brooks, and, to his credit be it said, she has never been obliged to try the same experiment with him that she did with her brother-in-law. From the way Deacon Lee laughs with her and her husband about the way she taught him to keep a supply of wood on hand, it is safe to say he has forgiven her for the lesson.

Sorrows of the Poor.

Some one has declared that there are few sadder sights than that of a family Bible in a pawnbroker's window. Still another person says that the story told by such a mute witness is relieved by that to be read from seeing a set of mechanics' tools in the same place. Both are token of downfall, the one of religious feeling, and the other of industrial and domestic ease. A teacher in a city school attended largely by the poor told the little ones that "I was going home late from school on a cold night, when I met one of my scholars—the brightest girl of all. She was trotting along, clasping something tightly to her breast until her great shawl—the garment, which was her mother's, reaching to her feet—looked strangely grotesque and forlorn. The tears were running, disregarded, down her cheeks.

"'Why, what can be the matter?' I asked, putting my hand on her shoulder.

"'I don't know, John,' she said, 'whether I can cook to suit you. You know I am rather particular about what I have to work with, and my way may not be a way you'd like.'

"It must be something." I insisted. "Step inside this doorway and tell me. What is that under your shawl?"

Then her sobs redoubled, and she allowed me to draw forth from the shawl a package—Longfellow's poems, which I had given her at Christmas.

"I've got to pawn it," she whispered, holding her head low in shame.

"Why? Who wants the money?"

"Mother; there's nothing to eat in the house. She went to finish her sewing to-day, and got the pay for it; but last night father was gone till twelve, and when he came home he wasn't just right. So, being kept awake all night, mother had a blind headache to-day, and couldn't do her work. I don't suppose I ought to feel so about my books, but I can get a book again; but it's hard to think of its lying round in the shop."

"Suppose you make me the pawnbroker?" said I, giving her some money. "And when you have twelve perfect days at school, you shall have it back again."

How her eyes sparkled!

"May I?" she cried. "May I, truly? Oh, how good you are! Oh, I am glad!"

She could not thank me in words, and so she impulsively kissed my hand, as she laid the book in it, and darted away with the money.

It is needless to say that she was there promptly at the appointed time next day; and it is only safe to prophesy that when she grows up, my sturdy little maid will try to carry all the family burdens on her own shoulders.—Youth's Companion.

Cruelty to Insects.

Of all the birds in this section, says a correspondent, the robins seem to afford an idler lots of amusement if he will spend an occasional hour watching them. It was about noon a darker bird, a few days ago I was in an orange tree within sight of my house, where an old darky, with the leisurely air of a man who knows he is executive may retard or prevent whole furrow, looking for insects. Every few minutes he would go to pick up a beetle or insect, not for some time he put an end to his victims. After a little he seemed to have had enough for one day, and began to throw the beetles, as fast as he could, over his head, and the darky were seen running along in the newly turned furrow, at times actually touching the old darky's heels. Now and then they would come across an insect too large for them to easily manage, and then would begin a little scuffle. Then the intruder bird would swoop down in the center of the little flock, snatch up the insect, and fly off with it before the larks know what had happened. The butcher bird had eaten all he wanted, and so, with the beetle in his beak, he flew to the nearest orange tree, and, selecting a long sharp thorn, he impaled the insect on it. I watched this bird put at least ten insects on different thorns. During an hour, besides numerous large insects, the butcher bird captured two snakes, the largest of which was two feet long, and over half an inch. These snakes although they squirmed and twisted, were taken with little difficulty to the nearest thorn, after a good bit of hard tugging, they were left with a thorn through their body.

When the butcher bird is not looking for food or for fun, he seems to think he is generally looking for other birds for the purpose of fighting them, and so he keeps busy from daylight till dark.

Getting a Pleasant Expression.

Photographer (to sitter—let's see you sit church last Sunday, Miss Smith.

Sitter—Oh, did you?

Photographer—Yes, and also your friend, Miss Brown—if you could raise your chin a trifle, thanks—and what an atrocious looking hat she had on! (After a pause)—There, Miss Smith, it is over, and I think we have caught a very pleasant expression.—New York Sun.

CONVENTION HALLS.

Where the National Conventions of the Two Leading Parties Will Meet.

The Auditorium Building in Chicago and the Exposition Hall in St. Louis.

Pictures of the Two Great Structures, and Their Seating Capacities.

Plenty of Candidates—A History of National Nominating Conventions.

THE CHICAGO AUDITORIUM.

The National Republican Convention, for the naming of candidates for President and Vice President, will assemble at Chicago on the 19th of June. The Auditorium building, where the convention meets, is a grand structure, capable of accommodating an eight thousand. Work on the building is rapidly progressing, and everything will be in readiness by the 19th of June. The Hon. J. S. Clarkson, of Des Moines, Iowa, the Chairman of the subcommittee of the National Republican Committee, visited Chicago last week, and, after going over the building, expressed himself as very much pleased, both with the promising splendor of the great structure and the progress being made.

"It will be a magnificent building. It will be the finest convention hall ever erected in this country. A feature in the construction of the Auditorium and one to which particular attention is being paid is the arrangement of the seats and galleries. They are very much nearer the stage than is usual in such structures, and, as a large audience-room. The most distant seat is only 170 feet from the platform. This seat will be located in the upper gallery. There will not be a poor seat in the house; every one commanding a good view of the stage. There is every prospect that the next Republican National Convention will be more comfortably taken care of than I have been accustomed than any previous gathering of the kind. The location of the building on the lake front, the massive walls, etc., all tend to make the situation pleasant one.

"The convention hall will be seated with stationary chairs. We will use the theater system in taking care of the people this time. Each seat will be represented by a ticket or coupon. The ticket will be taken up as the door, and the coupon will be the holder's claim to a seat. Tickets will be issued for each day in place of season tickets as has formerly been the rule. This will enable more people to see the convention.

"Chicago will have the honor of possessing the greatest auditorium in America. Everybody will be surprised at its magnitude. Eastern people think it mere impudence for Chicago to think of putting up a great a structure in so short a time. They have no idea that it will be so far completed that the convention can be held in it. Mr. Peck and his associates have conferred a great honor on this city by providing such a structure. It will make it pretty sure that all the great conventions of national importance both national and international will be held in Chicago. It will be the scene of many an important event in America. It will be a hall of oratory, and many musical, educational and religious conventions will take place there.

"In building the greatest precaution possible has been taken to insure a safe and solid edifice. The iron work, stone work, and all material have been tested as to strength and durability by the most noted known to science in order that the safety of the structure may be assured. The work is being driven ahead with wondrous energy and rapidity."

FARM AND GARDEN.

PROTECTION OF CHERRIES AND OTHER FRUITS FROM BIRDS.

Remedies Suggested for the Apple Root Louse—Facts About Guernsey Cattle. Trellis and Arbor Suited to Fast Growing Vines.

Farmers are often puzzled as to the style of arbor or trellis best suited to vines of rapid growth. The trellis shown in the cut is of simple construction, and is advised by Farm, Field and Stockman for grape vines, along with other sorts.

TRELLIS AND ARBOR.

The journal quoted from says that grape vines planted at intervals of twelve feet, alternating on each side so that plants may not come opposite, will completely cover the trellis and arbor overhead and at the same time bear full loads of fruit if annually shortened in to prevent too great elongation of the main vines. The leading shoots should be cut back annually to about six feet, and the spurs to two buds each. If grapes are not desired any good climber may be substituted, and in this case, after the trellis is fully covered, all that will be necessary will be to keep down too rampant growth.

The posts rest on stones sunk a little into the ground. The posts may be of any limited size of timber. Cap pieces connect them along each side, and cross pieces join the opposite posts. Wire is used for the lattice work.

The Production of Apples.

No farmer who has the land to spare should be deterred from setting out an apple orchard of good fruit by the fear of no market, or from other work, overproduction. The population is constantly increasing, and the apple is the king of American fruits, sought for everywhere, and only in exceptional cases and limited districts is there in any year such an excess over the demand as to render an orchard of good fruit unprofitable. As many as 50,000 barrels of American apples have been sold in London in a single week, and the demand for them is steadily increasing. And England is only one of the many countries to which they are sent. The manufacturers of pure vinegar in this country also make a market for an immense amount of the more common varieties. The fear of apple growing being overdone has been entertained by some people, from time to time, for as many as forty years back; nevertheless a good orchard has continued to be a good thing to have, and it is quite safe to predict that it will be the same hereafter for first class apples of good keeping qualities. The amount exported to other countries has grown to such an extent that it is stated that the value of it is almost equal to one-seventh of the estimated merchandise value of the whole amount produced.

Protection Against Birds.

Every season innumerable contrivances are invented and employed to frighten birds away from cherry laden trees and other fruits. The one represented in the cut was originally suggested in Popular Gardening, and, it is claimed, has been found effectual.

MONSTER OF THE AIR.

As will be seen on examining the cut, this is an improvement over the pieces stuck with feathers, to which the birds soon become accustomed, finding it not possessed of life. For the body of the monster take a long mangel wurtzel, a large parsnip, or a mammoth beet. into this thrust feathers along what is to be the back and sides, with two at the head for horns. For the tail, the feathers are mounted on light twigs, the object of this being to keep the suspended monster lively by turning with the wind. The eyes are important parts for giving a life like appearance. These consist of two bits of broken porcelain, thrust into the root from the top downward, and with the holes opened out of the sides to them.

Two small spin wheels are projected forward in the eyes, to add horror to the look. They are made of circular pieces of tin, from four inches across. These are cut from the edge to near the center into about ten or more radiations, and the parts give a slight twist, windmill like. A wire nail through the center attaches each wheel to the end of a stick, and on this it should revolve in every slight breeze.

For suspending it, a cord which engaging the body is carried up to one end of a half hoop shaped iron rod, the other end of which is bolted to a pole that is raised slightly above one of the trees to be protected. Then the monster bobs about and turns with the wind, the spin wheels fly and clatter, and altogether there is a dreadful looking terror to evil doing birds, even those disposed to boldness.

Apple Root Louse.

In the last annual report of the New Jersey State Horticultural society, along with much other matter of practical importance is a communication on the apple root louse from Mrs. Mary Treat, Vineland, N. J. This communication is of very general interest, for the root lice are far more destructive to vegetation than those that inhabit the stems and leaves. Following are some of the statements made, in condensed form:

The root louse increases even more rapidly than do plant lice, and when ready to migrate they know enough to go to new pastures, not from insides on apple trees not before inhabited by their predecessors. For the last twenty years a boy's plant louse has been known to infest the roots of apple trees, causing swellings and deformations of almost every possible shape, and, when very numerous, killing the tree.

Although the insect usually confines itself to the roots of the tree, yet a few may be occasionally found on the suckers that spring up around the butt of the trunk, and even on the trunk and limbs, especially in places where the branch has been amputated and nature is closing up the out wound by a circle of bark.

When it works upon the naked trunk it often causes a mass of little granulations very apparent on about the size of cabbage seeds, thus producing, on a small scale, the same effect that it does upon the roots.

Wherever the insect works, small as it is, it may easily be recognized by the peculiarly black white cottony matter which it excretes from its body and which is never met with in the case of the common apple tree plant louse that inhabits the leaves and tips of twigs. Fortunately, there are two or three natural checks to this pest, or it would soon destroy all the trees. The nice spotted lady bug is one of these.

As for artificial remedies, Professor Riley says: "The best mode to get rid of the apple root louse is to drench the roots of the infested tree with hot water. But to render this process effectual the water must be applied in quantities large enough to penetrate to every part of the infested roots." Professor Comstock says that the root lice thrive in a dry, porous soil. Mrs. Treat therefore recommends that, as a heavy, damp soil does not agree with these pests, the earth around the crown of the tree be kept hollowed into a sort of basin, in order that the water may collect there.

No tree can bear knots and excrescences on its roots such as these lice make and bear good apples at the same time, for the main part of the sap and nourishment of the tree goes to support the galls which these creatures produce.

Successive Planting of Peas.

Peas should be planted as early as the ground will admit, in a rich, deep soil, for a vigorous growth and large production. Several successive plantings should be made at short intervals to secure successive pickings through the season. The same result can be obtained to some degree by planting at the same time varieties that have earlier and later periods for ripening. From the many excellent kinds offered by seedsmen choose the ones most to your liking, and follow the directions as to planting and cultivation that are given on the packets. The wrinkled peas are more delicate in flavor and remain longer in season than the smooth sorts, and there are many to select from that do not require support from brush.

Petroleum as a Wood Preservative.

As a preservative of wood, hardly any thing better than petroleum is known, as many persons have realized, and more are finding out every day, and its cheapness makes it available for purposes for which no substitute of the same cost can be found. It can be applied to advantage on unpainted posts, gates, shingles, etc., greatly increasing their durability, but should not be used with colors as paint, for it does not dry and harden well, but wool, where it has been applied, can afterward be painted more easily than if it had not been used.

The Capacity of a Barn for Hay.

The exact weight of a body of hay cannot be ascertained by measurement, varying as it will according to the kind of hay and the length of time it has been packed away. The rule is to measure the space to be filled with hay and multiply the length by the width and that by the depth, all in feet, then divide by 500, which is the number of cubic feet commonly taken to represent a ton of average hay. Some times, owing to quality and condition, 400 cubic feet will weigh a ton, when in other cases 600 may be required.

Pure Water for Fowls.

It is of great importance in keeping fowls in a healthy condition that they should have access to no water that is not pure. Leakings from the manure heap, water from the kitchen sink or slop holes in the yard are all unwholesome, as is stagnant water of any kind. Drinking vessels should be easily accessible at all times and supplied with water that is pure and fresh. Tin, galvanized iron or earthen drinking vessels may be used, and should be thoroughly cleansed and rinsed out whenever refilled.

Bagging Tomatoes.

All have heard of bagging grapes as a preventive of mildew and rot. Progressive men who have tried the bags on tomatoes say that the tomatoes thus covered were so delicate in color, so very smooth and perfect that members of the household did not, upon first seeing them, know what they were. Now we hear of perfect specimens of pears and plums raised in this way. It would not pay in a money sense to do such work, but it might well serve to delight and foster the little folk.

The Guernseys.

The Guernseys, one of the several types of dairy cattle represented in the herds of this country, are nearly allied to the more popular Jerseys, and like them are great butter producers.

GUERNSEY BULL "WONDER OF THE WORLD."

The Guernseys make a fine show not only in the herd, but in the exhibition ring, being beautiful animals, somewhat larger than the Jerseys and more uniform in color.

Numbered with remarkable specimens of this breed is the famous cow Jolie 51, imported by Mr. J. W. Fuller, of Catasauqua, Pa., who won first prize as the best cow in the island of Guernsey in 1884. She is considered one of the best among milk cows of this breed in this country. A noticeable characteristic is the extreme yellowness of her skin.

In the annexed illustration is given a true likeness of another prominent Guernsey, the bull "Wonder of the World," imported by E. N. Howell, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. At the last New York dairy and cattle show this animal was awarded the first prize for the best bull over 1 and under 2 years old. He is pale fawn and white with a rich colored skin.

Things Farmers Tell One Another.

Mr. M. B. Paxton advises that parsnip seed be planted early, and when well up thinned to six inches apart.

Never allow potatoes to throw off sprouts in any cellar warm cellar; it weakens vigor, says Mr. Alfred Rose, the veteran potato grower.

Mr. J. H. Hale, Connecticut, says that peach trees that have been annually and heavily tucked with wood ashes to keep out the borers have been more free from yellows than those not so protected.

To have sweet corn for a succession Mr. E. S. Carman advises, first, either Cory or Northern Pedigree, then Shoker's Early or Perry's Hybrid, then Moore's Concord, Triumph or Hickory, then Stowell's Evergreen, Mammoth or Egyptian.

Bill Nye on the Tariff.

On board a western train the other day I held in my bosom for over seventy five miles the elbow of a large man whose name I do not know. He was not a railroad hog or I would have resented it. He was built wide and he couldn't help it, so I forgave him.

He had a large, gentle, kindly eye, and when he desired to spit he went to the car door, opened it, and decorated the entire outside of this train forgetting that our speed would help to give scope to his remarks.

Naturally, as he sat there by my side, holding on tightly to his ticket and evidently afraid that the conductor would forget to come and get it, I began to figure out what might be his business. He had pounded one thumb so that the nail was black where the blood had settled under it. This might have happened to a shoemaker, a carpenter, a blacksmith, or a tinsmith as one also. So I didn't help me out much, though it looked to me as though it might have been done by trying to drive a fence post through a leather hinge with the back of an ax, and nobody but a farmer would try to do that. Following up the clew, I discovered that he had tails on his boots, and then I knew I was right. The man who mikes before daylight in a bark barn when the thermometer is 28 degrees below zero and who hits his boots by reason of the uncertain light and the nervousness of the cow is a marked man. He cannot conceal the fact that he is a farmer unless he wears a false badge. So I started out on that theory, and remarked that this would pass for a pretty hard winter for stock.

The thought was not original with me, for I have heard it expressed by others either in this country or in Europe. He said it would.

"My sons have gone through a mowful o' hay since October, and eleven ton o' bran. Hay don't seem to have the goodness to it that it had last year, and with their new process grain mixtures they jerk all the juice out o' brand, so's you might as well feed cows with excelsior and upholster your horses with bran, and the men folks buy brand."

"Well, why do you run so much stock? Why don't you try diversified farming and rotation of crops?"

"Well, mostly cuse I got that idee in the papers. A man that earns big wages writing 'Farm Hints' for agricultural papers can make more money with a soft lead pencil and two or three season cracked ideas like that's in it than carrying off the cash on the farm. We used to have a fellow in the drug store in our town that wrote some good pieces for the Rural Vermonter and made up such a good condition powder out of his own head that two years ago we asked him to write a essay for the annual meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society to use his own judgment about choice of subject. He wrote a good one and he got elected for a essay that took the whole forenoon to read?"

"What subject, you mean?"

"Yes."

"Give it up."

"Well, he'd wrote out that whole blamed intellectual wad on the subject of 'The Influence of Dyspepsia upon Hydraulic rams.' How's that?"

"That's pretty fair."

"Well, farmin' is like runnin' a paper in regard to some things. Every feller in the world will take and turn in and tell you how to do it, even if he don't know a blame thing about it. Now, I've been in the United States to-day that don't secretly think he could run any one if he wanted to, and nobody but a farmer he knows the difference between a new milch cow and a horse has got a chance. Well, I had those embroidered night-shirt farmers come from the cities to my farm and buy a Boston a toilet soap man and dose well, and so he came out and bought a farm that had belonged to me. I'd a funny house and barn, and a lot of medder in the front yard, and a southern exposure. The farm was no good. You couldn't raise a disturbance on it. Well, what does he do? Goes and plants a passel of slim-tailed yeller cows from New Jersey and aims to handle cream and diversified farming. Last year the cuss sent a load of cream over and tried to sell it at the new creamatory while the funeral and hollercrust was goin' on. I may be a sort of a chump myself but I read my paper and don't get left like that.

"What are the prospects for farmers in your state?"

"Well, they are pore. Never was so pore in fact, sense I have been there. Folks wonder why boys leaves the farm. My boys left so as to get protected, they said, and so one of them went into a clothing store, and one went into hardware and one is talkin' protection in the legislature this win ter. They said that farmin' was getting to be like fishin' and huntin,' well enough for a man that has means and leisure, but they couldn't make a livin' at it, they said, any more than in a drug store and the man that hires him says he is a royal feller."

"Kind of a center shot and a feller," I said, with a shriek of laughter.

He waited until I had laughed all I wanted to, and then said:

"I've always hollered for high tariff in order to hyste the public debt down so we'd get the national debt cooped I wish they'd take a little back at mine. 'I've put in fifty years farmin.' I never drank licker in any form. I've worked from ten to eight teen hours a day; been economical in clothes and never went to a show more'n a dozen times in my life; raised a family and learned upwards of two hundred calves to drink out of a tin pail without blowing their vittles up my sleeve. My wife worked along side o' me sewin new seats on my pants, skimmin milk and bein even helpin' me load hay. For forty years we toiled along together and hardly got time to look at the new faces, or dared stop and get acquainted with each other. Then my health failed, and I went out in the spring house, mostly skimmin' milk and washin' pans, and scallin' pails, and spankin' butter. Anyhow, she took in a long breath one day while the doctor and me was watchin' her, and she says to me, 'Henry,' says she, 'I've got a chance to rest,' and I put one tired woman's shawl on top of the other tired wore-out hand, and I knew she'd gone where they don't work all day and do chores all night.

"I took time to kiss her then. I'd been too busy for a good while previous to that, and then I called in the boys. After the funeral I was too much for them to stay around and eat the kind of cookin' we had to put up with, and nobody spoke up around the house as we used to. The boys quit whistlin' around the barn, and tailed kind o' low to themselves about going to town and gettin' a job.

"Then the snow fell so loaded on the cow window quite a long while without saying anything.

"I don't blame the boys for going into something else long's other things pays better, but I say—and I say it with a heavy sad the man who holds the prosperity of this country in his hands, the man that actually feeds the nation, the man who has to spend, the man that eats three good simple square meals a day and goes to bed at sun down, the man that future generations with good blood and cool brains can go back to when they be the senate and congress and the white house—he is the man that gets left at the bottom in the farm, with nobody to help him but a hired man and a high protective tariff. The farms in our state is mortgaged for over $700,000,000. Ten of our western states—I see by the papers—has got about three billion and a half mortgages on their farms, and don't count the chatter mortgages filed with the town clerks on farm machinery, stock, waggins and even crops, by gosh! that aint even inches high under the snow. That's what the prospect is for farmin now. The government is rich, but the men that made it, the men that fought prairie fires and perraire wolves and injuns and potato bugs, and blizzards, and paid the war debt, pensions and everything else that was laid out to, is left high and dry this cold winter with a mortgage of seven billions and a half on the farms they have earned and saved a thousand times over."

"Yes; but look at the glory of sending from the farm the future president, the future senator, the future member of congress."

"That looks well on paper, but what does it really amount to? Soon as a farmer boy gits a place like that he forgets the soil that produced him and holds his head as high as a hollyhock. He bellers for protection to everybody but the farmer, and while he talks about the tariff a tightey-tighty room with a fire in it night and day, his own father on the farm has to kindle his own fire in the morning with elm shivers, and he has to wear his son's lawn-tennis suit coat to him or freeze to death, and he has to milk in the old gray shawl that has held that member of congress since he was a baby, by gorry! and the old lady has to patch up through the winter in the flannels that Silas wore to the riggatter before he went to congress.

"So I say, and I think that congress agrees with me, Dana a farmer boy."

He then went away. BILL NYE.

Electric Bitters.

This remedy is becoming well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used the celebrated bitters are loud in praise of praise.—A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. A Grief Stricken Act.

Ants not only recognize one another after separation for more than a year, but there are evidences of strong affection between them. After hoeing one nest of ants for seven years Sir John Lubbock had still two survivors, and this pair finally died within a week of each other, after living together two years longer. The shock produced by the loss of her companion was the only apparent cause of the death of the last member of this remarkable colony.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Consumption Incurable.

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Has been with me a cripple, and friends and physicians pronounced me an incurable consumptive. I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and can walk across the house without crutches." Trial bottles free at Crouter's Drug Store. Large bottles, $1.

Arnica Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New discovery for consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by the doctors, am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at Crouter's Drug Store. 5

WEEKLY EDITION.

In accordance with its traditional policy of giving the fullest and most comprehensive view of the news, the New York Evening Post will begin, about the first of May, to issue a weekly edition (32 pages), having for its principal aim the presentation of revenue reform.

This question has become the paramount issue in national politics. The revenue of an annual income of $60,000,000 is now estimated to reach $140,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1888, and the tariff increase thereof under present laws, are a burden to all business interests, and a direct incentive to wastefulness and corruption in the age operations of public life.

The attention of the public cannot be too strongly drawn to this subject by President Cleveland in his last annual message, the issue of information and popular enlightenment on questions of revenue and taxation has been increasingly felt in all parts of the country.

The Weekly Edition of the Evening Post should be relied on and recommended to secure:

(1.) To relieve the great body of the people from needless burdens the necessaries of life and on the materials and tools of industries.

(2.) To remove artificial obstructions to the growth of our manufactures, which restrict the market for our farms, and which, if taken out, would be a benefit to all industries.

(3.) To introduce the principle of equal taxation according to the means of the taxpayer and not according to their needs as consumers of dutiable articles.

(4.) To remove the causes of social discontent, growing out of the fact that the whole of his earnings is liable to taxation, while his wealth by barring capital and labor from his use to seek their highest reward.

(5.) To remove from congress the corrupting influence of a never-ending struggle for favors and advantages, under the tariff, to particular manufacturers, which is sure to be the purpose of every tariff bill.

(6.) To expunge the false and grovelling idea that the American people, with the richest land and the greatest natural resources that the sun shines upon, cannot compete with the pauper laboring themselves $100,000,000 per year to support.

The Evening Post, in its editorial views on all the day domestic and foreign, the intention being to make a first-class weekly paper with the special purpose of emancipating American industry from the American protective system of bounties.

The subscription price of the weekly Evening Post will be one dollar per year, but to all who will submit until the end of 1888 for fifty cents in advance, or two copies for one dollar, we will make a discount of 10 per cent will be allowed to clubs of ten. Address, Address, Address every sent to any address one dollar.

Political Notes and News.

THE Chicago Tribune is one of the most influential republican papers in the great west. Four years ago it was one of Blaine's most enthusiastic supporters. On all questions but the tariff it is a hide bound republican paper, but on the tariff question it is outspoken in favor of a revision and in every issue it pours hot shot into the high tariff men in Congress. It says: Give them cheap whiskey and we will have provided the republican party with a winning platform next fall," says McKinley, Burrows, "Pig Iron," Kelley and Tom Reed. "Keep up the trust monopoly prices on the necessaries of life, but lower the price of rot to the poor man and he will be satisfied," say these gentlemen. Is it any wonder that many western republican members feel indignant at the position in which they see their party being placed by the congressional agents of the trust robbers?

THERE is now enough money in the treasury to pay the huge expenses of this government for one year, and the extra inflow is over a third of a million a day. The law-maker who stands before the people advocating a continuation of this Turkish method of tax collection is both knave and fool. He is a knave because he is so cruel to the poor; he is a fool because, like the monkey in the fable, he is tearing out the beam that supports him in order to hurl disaster on his fellows.

THE republican party seems determined to get rid of the surplus by spending it in senseless extravagance rather than by reducing the taxes, and leaving the money in the hands of the people who produce it. They do not look upon the unjust tariff taxes as the main cause of the surplus, but say that if there must be any reduction in the taxes, it should be made by the repeal of the internal revenue taxes. Better free whisky and free drunkenness, than that the sacred tariff should be touched.

THE unneeded tax on a five-dollar pair of woolen blankets is $3.15, or 63 per cent. The people stand like the auctioneer, waiting for some one to speak—make it $3, $2.50 take it for $2. The people of the Pacific coast pay 75 cents a ton of tax on all their soft coal. Salt, lumber, sugar and iron bear a crushing tax. The sugar tax is just abetting the most onerous scheme the world ever saw, and 60,000,000 people are paying at least a cent of bonus to the trust on every pound of sugar.

MRS. CLEVELAND always calls her husband "Mr. President." He always calls her "Frank." Martha Washington in her younger days called her husband "George," but in the last 25 years of her life she always addressed him as "General." While in the White House Mrs. Hayes called her husband "Mr. Hayes." Mrs. Lincoln and Garfield always addressed their husbands respectively as "Abram" and "Jim."

AN EDITOR works 365¼ days per year to get out fifty two issues of a paper; that's labor. Once in a while somebody pays him for a year's subscription; that's capital, and once in a while some son of a gun of a dead beat takes the paper for a year or two and then vanishes without paying for it; that's anarchy; but later on justice will overtake the last named creature, for there is a place where he pays his deserts—that's hell.—Ex.

Othello Sherman's Occupation Gone.

Bourbon Jingle is certainly entitled to be the presidential candidate of the bloody shirt phalanx. No other man could possibly make a fighter for the nomination than he.—Philadelphia Times.

A Peculiar Novelty.

Republicans have already elected their ticket for 1888. They will nominate it later. The trifling formality of voting is not. Jone Secret as worthy discussion.—Kansas City Times.

Came Back on Himself.

Is striking at the president Senator Ingalls seems to have imitated the blinded rattler and buried his fangs deep in his vulnerable flesh. — Philadelphia Times.

The Surplus in the Treasury.

It was the sapient Fred Grant, emulous of his father's ability to say a pithy thing, who remarked in one of his speeches that "it was easier to handle a surplus than a deficit." Doubtless he thought that a surplus of money in the National Treasury bears the same relation to the government as a plethoric bank account does to private individual, and that all the government has to do to reduce it is to lend, to spend, or to give it away.

I be saying is of course, unworthy of a well advanced schoolboy, and would not be recalled now were it not that the republican orators and platform-makers seem to regard the surplus in very much the same way. At the Great banquet the other day at Pittsburg General Harrison said that if the country would elect a republican president this year the world guarantee a reduction in the surplus, a better navy, better coast defences, and the return of the direct tax to the states. That is to say, he would squander the people's money in all kinds of extravagant and unjust schemes. Not a word as to reducing taxation or relieving the burdens of the taxpayers, which causes the surplus.

So the Pennsylvania republicans in their recent platform denounced the president's message and declare that the surplus can be got rid of by repealing it on pensions, public buildings, fortifications, and the navy. They do not look upon unjust taxation as the main cause of the surplus, and say that if there must be any reduction in the taxes it should be made by the repeal of the internal revenue taxes. Better free whiskey and free drunkenness, than that the sacred tariff should be touched.

Thus, following the keynote struck by Blaine in his Paris message, the republican party is being committed more and more deeply to these unstatesmanlike theories. And as Blaine is their leading statesman on these lines why waste time in subterfuge and dallying second-rate men? By all means let Blaine be the candidate on the Paris platform. And if any other Guard another wish little Frankee stand there with him. Then with one single kick the American people can capture their collective chadain of them, their motives, their theories, and their statesmanship.—Chicago Herald.

A Republican View of it.

Senator Ingalls, president of the United States senate, has notoriously gotten "left." The prince of good fellows himself, and personally popular with his political opponents, it is strange that he should ever have permitted party zeal so run away with his judgment as to comment as he did y

Gen. Joe Johnston Received Into the Military Organization.

GEN. JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON, the highest in rank of living officers of the Confederate army, has been unanimously elected honorary member of E. D. Baker Post, No. 8, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia. The election was brought about upon the receipt of a letter reading:

For the purpose of enabling me to participate in the noble work of charity performed by the Veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, I hereby make application for constituting myself a member of E. D. Baker post, and find inclosed the sum of $10 to cover the fee.

The petition was unacompanied by any other communication, and was presented to the members of the post for consideration it went through with a rush, and the cheers of the two hundred veterans present for Joe Johnston is the only ex-Confederate soldier who has been received into the ranks of any Grand Army post.

Hundreds Awaiting the Opening of the Black Hills Reservation.

NEWS of the opening of the Blackfoot reservation is awaited impatiently in Dakota and throughout northern Montana. The desirable valleys are fairly covered with tents, the greatest rush apparently being to the Big Sandy, the famous hay-grounds. When news comes that the bill is signed there is likely to be a rush. Bullhook Valley, beyond Fort Assiniboine, is staked off, and the tents of the squatter may be seen all along the valley of Milk River. There is a silver-lead lode in the Bear Paw mountains that was located several years ago.

The New Vestibule Train Plying Between the East and West.

THE first passenger train on the Chicago extension of the great Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe system left Chicago Sunday crowded with passengers and railway officials. The train, composed exclusively of vestibule cars, is said to be the finest ever put on a track, and will hereafter be a regular feature between Chicago and Kansas City. With the inauguration of this new line of passenger travel Chicago is for the first time connected with the Pacific coast by a continuous railroad system under one control.

LONDON papers make various comments on the Pope's condemnation of the plan of campaign. The Post says it is the most formidable blow yet struck on the nationalists, but hopes that the Pope's action is the result of a bargain with Lord Salisbury.

Germany's Sick Kaiser.

A BERLIN telegram of Monday says of the Emperor's condition:

The beginning of the week sees an unhoped-for change, and a feeling of relief and joy at the most serious illness yet experienced in the course of the daily visitors to the schloss. There is every reason to hope that the further convalescence will set in, at least for some weeks, and that the dangers of the crisis are over. The original disease, however, is tardious in its progress, and the final result is only positively stated. The patient's good humor and appetite is increasing, his appetite good, he is allowed everything he takes, and he is in the best of spirits.

Serious Railway Accident.

A PASSENGER train on the New York and Pennsylvania Railroad was wrecked near Olean, N. Y., by the spreading of the rails. The mail and baggage cars and two passenger coaches, continuing about forty passengers, rolled down a twenty-foot embankment. About twenty passengers were seriously injured. No one was killed outright, but some of the injured will die.

MRS. J. A. HUBBARD, the widow of Dr. Hubbard, and a leader in fashionable society, of Beaver, Pa., brought suit against Henry C. Fry Sr., for breach of promise of marriage. Damages will be laid at $100,000. Fry is a prominent citizen of the Rochester Tumbler Company, a heavy stockholder in various other corporations, and very wealthy. Both parties stand high, and if the case is allowed to go to trial it is likely to rival the famous Arbuckle suit in interest.

JOHN FERRELL, tailor, aged 60 years, and his wife, aged 55, a childless couple, lived in Philadelphia. They were a neat, quiet, inoffensive, and apparently affectionate couple. Their two bodies were found hanging by pieces of clothesline, one from the transom of the door on the second floor, the other from that of the third floor. They had evidently been dead several days. The story they advanced in the case is that the couple had made a compact of death, being tired of and their existence.

THE schedules of Francis E. Trowbridge, the New York broker, show liabilities $266,174, nominal assets $236,017, and actual assets $7,000.

JAMES A. RADCLIFF and Frank R. Vernon of Brooklyn, N. Y., have failed for nearly $70,000.

THE WESTERN STATES.

A FREIGHT train on the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Road collided with a work train at Bruan Hexam Wood, Wis., and fifteen persons were injured. The names of those whose injuries are considered serious are: J. Black, Brooklyn; F. Eblert, W. Struck, W. Bolow, C. Parsons, and A. Rusbel. The work train was going on a side-track when it was struck by the freight. Both trains were badly wrecked.

THE business portion of Central City, Dakota, three miles above Deadwood, has been destroyed by fire. Not a store or a shop is left standing. One hundred and thirty buildings were burned. Fifty families were left homeless. The loss is $250,000; insurance, $50,000.

M. J. BILLSBUR of Waverly, Iowa, has been sentenced to the penitentiary for life, the extreme penalty of the law. The court reviewed the evidence in the case, and concluded by denying the motion for a new trial, and the motion for arrest of judgment. During the reading of the sentence Billings was unmoved, but his wife burst out crying, and her husband held her closer to him and whispered words of comfort and encouragement in her ear. After sentence had been passed the counsel for defense filed a notice of appeal. Judge Reddick fixed the bail bond at $8,000, and ordered that in case bail was not secured, the defendant should remain in jail.

THE town of Bucklyvania, near Bellefontaine, Ohio, was on Friday the scene of a terrible accident. While a school exhibition was in progress in a public hall the floor gave way with a frightful crash. It appeared to sink in the center, funnel-shaped, and the entire audience went down in a surging mass of both a frightful crash. It appeared to sink in the center, funnel-shaped, and the entire audience went down in a surging mass to the ground, a distance of twenty feet. Many women and children were killed and wounded. The total loss of life and injury would have been much worse. A number of infant and children were taken out, some of them unhurt, with their clothing torn completely off of them.

A MEMOR on the Burlington and Missouri River Road near Alma, Neb., gave way, having been weakened by rains, as a through passenger train was passing, and the cars and express cars went down with it, and all passenger coaches except one left the track. L. A. Towne, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was killed and several others were seriously injured.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

THE report of the investigating committee of the Kentucky Legislature shows that the stockage of the fugitive Bank of Louisville Tate is $230,000. The grossest carelessness is said to have prevailed during Tate's management of twenty years.

AT Pearsall, Texas, Frank Nolan and William Jordan, cattle dealers, removed an old quarrel, and both were fatally hurt.

THE dwelling-house of Lewis Stroman, near Springfield, S. C., was burned, and four of Stromans' children, two boys and two girls, who were sleeping upstairs, perished in the flames. Stromans' eldest son was frightfully burned while frantically endeavoring to rescue his brothers and sisters, and will probably die.

THREE men, Jack Crow, George Moss and Owen D. Hill, were hanged at Fort Smith, Ark., for murders committed in the Indian Territory. All the men were negroes with Indian blood.

JOHN R. BRYCE, colored, was executed at Leonardtown, Md., for the murder of Capt. W. P. Dixon. The murder was committed on the Potomac River in August, 1886.

JACK PRATER, colored, was hanged at Columbia, S. C., for the murder of Andrew Jackson, also colored, whom he shot through the window of Jack-on's cabin.

JASPER DAVIS, white, convicted of wife-murder, was hanged at Orangeburg, S. C.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "The House Committee on Elections unanimously confirmed the decision of the sub-committee in favor of Gen. Pope's title to the seat as Representative of the Tenth District of Illinois. Before beginning the tedious examination of the ninety pages of printed record it was agreed by the sub-committee that their guide upon disputed points of law should be the statutes of Illinois, as construed by the supreme Court of the State. The disputed votes were taken up one by one, and those votes that irregular and illegal votes had been cast for both parties to the contest, but after giving Mr. Worthington the benefit of all doubts the net result of the sifting was about fifty-nine majority for Gen. Pope.

The national legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill, as agreed upon in the House committee, aggregates $20,454,294, which is $427,606 less than the estimates and $220,366 less than the current appropriations for the same service.

AT Bessemer, Ala. Hardy Posey, colored, was lynched for an attempted criminal assault on a young white girl, and it is reported that the town was at once surrounded by armed negroes, who threatened to burn the houses of those who refused to assume the lynching.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of Saturday announces the serious illness of Judge Thomas M. Cooley, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

THE FOREIGN BUDGET.

"THE greetings between Queen Victoria and the royal family of Germany," says one of says a Berlin dispatch of Wednesday. "The Crown Prince controlled the Queen on her marriage, drawn by four horses, which she entered, and with the Empress beside her was driven to the castle. Crowds of people inundate the route and cheered enthusiastically as the carriage passed. The Queen looks pleasantly upon the Emperor shortly after her arrival at the castle. The doctors feared that the meeting would excite the Emperor, but it probably upset him, but their fears were groundless. The Emperor seemed rather brighter after the interview and his temperature was normal. The Emperor rose to receive the Queen and warmly welcomed her. The meeting between Queen Victoria and the Empress was touching. The Queen burst into tears on the approach of her daughter. They embraced and kissed each other repeatedly, with hands firmly clasped. The greeting of the people of Berlin to the Queen was everywhere respectful. The sun defied of their hats and the women curtsied. She was cheered outside until by exercise in the immediate vicinity of the palace, where the people refrained from any noisy demonstration on account of the Emperor.

LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL's speech in Parliament Thursday night created a sensation and was a matter of surprise to all parties, says a cable dispatch from London.

In the Commons there was an interesting debate upon the motion for a vote of thanks to the Irish county government bill. During the discussion Mr. Chamberlain charged the Government for its breach of its promises to the Unionists, and Lord Randolph Churchill said the promises made to the Unionists during the government could not be extended to Ireland, and Randolph Churchill said that the powers meet in Ireland would be extend to Ireland the same assertion of the Government. Lord Randolph Churchill said that the powers meet in Ireland would be extended

THE JOURNAL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH., MAY 10, 1888.

THE Chicago Herald predicts for Chief Justice Fuller "thirty blessed years" on the bench.

IT is a notable fact that every democratic state convention so far held has declared itself in support of the present administration, and insists upon the renomination of Grover Cleveland.

THE Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific R. R. Co. will run a special train from Detroit to St. Louis, to the national democratic convention, leaving Detroit at 4 p. m., June 6th, and arriving at St. Louis 8 a. m. June 8th.; one fare for round trip.

"THE whiskey-ring or the tariff must fall, which shall it be?"—Protection Organ. Resolved into the practical workings means, Shall we have cheaper whiskey, or cheaper necessaries of living? Let every sober, industrious laboring man give answer by his vote next fall.

"FREE TRADE would make three million men now employed in manufacturing, competing producers of food instead of consumers."—Protection Organ. Yes, and every one of them would produce from his little farm a better living for his family, without interfering with his neighbor farmer than he can now get out of any "protected" industry if he simply works for wages. Protected manufacturers do not pay the highest wages.

Congressman Ford: Sir, Congress has no right to take the part of a few manufacturers against the great body of consumers. But that is just what has been done. Our war tariff declares for high prices for the producer of iron; low prices for the producer of corn; high prices for the producer of glass; low prices for the producer of wheat. Our present tariff tax aims to secure a few manufacturers a disposal of their goods at a large profit. To do that their price must be raised. To raise their prices the supply of their foreign competitors must be diminished. To diminish the supply is to create scarcity. I would like to ask if the farmers of the west are more prosperous because they have fewer clothes? Are they better off because they must pay an enhanced price for the necessaries of life; because the products of iron, copper and glass are scarce and high?

Labor Protected with Rifles.

ANDREW CARNEGIE is a philanthropic protectionist. He protects his workingmen with Winchester rifles in the hands of Pinkerton's police. The police stand ready to shoot down any who attempt interference with the workingmen of the kind bearted Carnegie. From whom does he fear interference? Is he afraid of men who have wives and children dependant on them for bread, who have worked faithfully for him for years, and to whom he has given the choice of working 12 hours a day at severe and exhausting labor or be thrown out of employment, and, in many instances, be driven from their homes? It is because of such tyranny he invokes the protection of Winchester rifles and Pinkerton's police? The humane and generous Carnegie has lately bought a large estate in Scotland and according to the report of Stephen B. Elkins, the intimate friend of Mr. Blaine, the latter and Mr. Carnegie are preparing for a coaching tour in Europe. These two eminent advocates for "protection to American labor" find in each other an affinity, a sympathy in thought and a community of ideas which give to their friendship a peculiar flavor. The laws of our land have given to the foreigner, Carnegie, a protection by which he has acquired millions, and he in return "protects American labor" by exactions which drive it to despair. This he confronts with armed bullies authorized to kill. Is not "protection" exemplified by the contrasted conditions of Carnegie and his workingmen?—Grand Rapids Democrat.

The New Chief Justice.

In nominating Melville W. Fuller of Chicago to the vacancy on the Supreme bench of the United States, caused by the death of Chief Justice Waite, President Cleveland has made a selection that will give general satisfaction throughout the country. In this city, where Mr. Fuller's character and abilities are best known, the appointment will be regarded with especial favor. He has occupied a prominent and honored place at the bar of Illinois, and in the political counsels of the democratic party he has been a strong and conservative force for good.

Mr. Fuller's name was mentioned by the Daily News on the morning after Justice Waite's death, as among the few available lawyers in the northwest to fill the vacancy which it was then claimed should be filled from this section of the union. That the president has seen fit to give the northwest increased representation in the supreme court, is additional reason for congratulating the country on Mr. Fuller's appointment.

It may be taken for granted that the nomination will receive prompt and favorable consideration by the senate, for both Senators Cullom and Farwell have practically pledged confirmation in case Mr. Fuller's name was submitted. The supreme court will still remain republican by six to three.—Chicago News.

Indorsing President Cleveland.

Some republican papers still claim that Cleveland is losing ground as a candidate for re-election. It does not look that way. The democrats of Connecticut, New Hampshire, Wisconsin and Iowa have elected delegates to the St. Louis convention, all favorable to Cleveland's renomination and the resolutions adopted most cordially indorse his message to congress last December and the policy of his administration of public affairs.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

MICHIGAN MENTION.

Sundry Gleanings From Our State Exchanges.

Bois Blanc Island is to have a $10,000 hotel.

A democratic newspaper is to be established at Grayling.

Grand Rapids wants a suburban postoffice on the west side.

The Freeman factory in Kalkaska is nearly ready for business.

Work has commenced on the T., A. A. & L. M. R. R. extension toward Frankfort.

The steamer Morley is to run between Traverse City and Elk Rapids this spring.

Prosecuting Attorney Clay of Kent county, has been removed for official misconduct.

The straits were cleared last Friday, and navigation is fully open. Fifteen vessels passed down Friday forenoon.

The postmaster and assistant at Newberry, Luce county, are in jail for a shortage of $1,200 in money order funds.

The democrats of Petoskey have rented Mitchell Hall until after election, and it will be used as headquarters, reading room, etc.

The first national bank of Stanton is closing up its business affairs. It will be succeeded by a savings bank association. J. C. Percival of Ionia will be cashier of the new bank.

The Roscommon News has enlarged to eight pages. Now if it will remove the ugly-looking advertisement from the margin over the head, it will be a pretty good looking newspaper.

The Cyclone, which C. W. Caskey had bargained for to put on the ferry route, burned at Cleveland Sunday night. Fortunately for Mr. Caskey, she was not to be delivered before May 10th.—Independent.

The Detroit electrical works gets the contract for building the Sault Ste. Marie street railway. Electricity is to be the motive power, $35,000 will pay for it all, and two miles of road must be done July 1.

In Judge Reilly's court last Friday, a jury gave Geo. W. Ayres a verdict of $2,500 against the Detroit Free Press. The libel was based on the reports of a shooting affair last November. The case will be appealed.

The first number of the New York Weekly Post shows a generous amount of the news of the day, besides an energetic discussion of the issue of revenue reform. Twelve large pages. Send for a sample copy to The Weekly Post, 208 Broadway, New York.

The body of a man about 60 years old was found last week in the woods about seven miles east of Muskegon where it had probably lain since last January. The remains were indentified as those of W. H. Lavender, an Englishman who had worked in Muskegon and left that place for Otsego Lake Jan 11th. and had not been seen since.

The Minneapolis, Sault Ste. Marie & Atlantic, the Minneapolis & Northwestern and the Aberdeen, Bismark & Northwestern railroads have been consolidated and will hereafter be known as the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie. This road will make a continuous route from Bismark to the Soo and will be operated as one road.

The death of President Dinsmore of the Adams Express Company leaves a peanut and candy vendor at Sault Ste. Marie in pretty affluent shape and at the mercy of the army of real estate dealers that infest the city. Ed. Rowers is the unfortunate Scotte and he ought to receive several millions from the dead man's estate, as he is his nephew and almost the only heir to the Dinsmore fortune of $20,000,000.

Not a dollar was cut from the Michigan river and harbor appropriations as they came from the committee in which representative Fisher had done such earnest work on behalf of the waterways of his native state, and the bill passed on Monday with all sails flying for Michigan. The Michigan delegation were all in their seats and voting to aid the passage of the bill. It needed a two-thirds vote, and it secured it, eleven votes from Michigan helping to swell the majority.

Gen. O. M. Poe of the United States engineer's office, has let the contract for dredging the harbor at Cheboygan to C. E. Mitchell, at 14 1-10 cents per cubic yard, and also the contract for removing all the rock in the "Soo" canal, to Hechler & Green. This contract calls for the drilling of 2,000 holes six and one half feet deep and two inches in diameter so that a cartridge one and three-quarters inches in diameter, containing three quarters of a pound of Hercules powder, can be used in each hole. The contractors furnish everything and get $4.75 per hole for drilling and blasting. They expect to finish at least 160 holes every twenty-four hours.

Selling staple Goods Below Cost.

Our attention has been called by A. T. Washburn & Co. to the following "true to life" statement taken from the columns of the New York Dry Goods Chronicle. Sensible people will do well to read it carefully.

"It was Canning, we believe, who said that the fault of the Dutch was that in buying they gave too little, and in selling asked too much." This of course will not apply to merchants of this country, where the competition is keen and close, particularly where business is done on so small a margin of profit.

"The way business is being done to-day, the merchant has to exercise as much care in getting trade as in selling his stock. His customers have to be angled for or some special bait put on the hook in order to catch them. He makes a leader of some staple article and sells it at less cost to bring customers to his place of business, so as to dispose of other goods on which there is a profit. The methods thus employed are at best of a doubtful character. Why should trade be conducted in this way? Do not the people see the hook no matter how nicely or well it is covered? Is it a safe and honorable way of doing business?

"To sell goods under cost may attract customers, but will the use of such devices enable merchants to hold their trade or pay their bills? We think not. Business is getting so low days that the margin of profit is very small indeed. The custom of having leaders in almost every line has become so general that Chicago here and elsewhere now Cummings the leading journals to see what is offered, on leaders they are marking a run on some line of staple goods. The merchants both wholesale and retail, are the cause of making leaders of staple goods at less prices in some cases than the cost of manufacture, thus making it up in some other department. The principle is all wrong. It has wrecked more houses than it has made successful. It creates an unnatural and unhealthy stimulus to trade.

"Bargains, when bought as bargains and which yield a profit, are all right, but staple goods for which the market prices are known by every merchant, when sold at a loss, do not benefit the firm who makes such sale, because other sellers invariably meet the cut.

"This we see frequently illustrated in this market. Within an hour after one jobber offers a standard brand of muslin or prints under price his competitors follow suit, so that really no one is benefited, not even the customer himself, because the loss is invariably made up in some other line of goods with which he is not familiar.

"The keen, intelligent customer is never attracted by a 'leader' offered him to buy the leader, knowing that if he buys the other goods he needs, he will likely pay as much as he would where he usually does his trading. However much customers may like bargains they are always attracted by low prices. It is not that they object to say where they can buy the cheapest, but they are often afraid to rely on their own judgment, unless they can see the incentive for selling under the market values.

"As a rule good customers generally deal where they have confidence in the honesty, integrity and judgment of the merchant, and are willing to pay a fair, reasonable profit. The honorable dealer who does a strictly legitimate trade very rarely cuts the prices of staple goods, on which the profits at best are very small, unless he has erred in judgment in buying too much stock, or when the season has been unfavorable to trade by reason of its bad weatheer."

A QUESTION.

Republican Party—Which bait had I better put on?—Chicago News.

Indecent Ingalls.

It is only fair to Ingalls to record that he evinces no compunctious qualms over his escapade. He has neither explained, recanted nor mollified the perversion of fact, the desecration of the grave or the distortion of history. Quite the contrary. He has reiterated his indecencies and even extended them.

To justify his lubricious onslaught upon the president, he revives the rude adjectives that were employed by the hot headed, thoughtless partisans during the Lincoln campaigns. But even if this were a warrantable precedent, there is no analogy. No member of congress, no high official in opposition to Mr. Lincoln ever referred to him by the opprobrious names Ingalls so boisterously enumerates. Indeed, during Lincoln's first troublous term, Mr. Hendricks, the Democratic leader in the senate, was the constant adviser of his political adversary, and never alluded to him odiously in any other than the most decorously respectful terms. But even if Democrats had so far forgotten good manners, to say nothing of the amenities of the senate, the things men did and said in the passionate controversies of war times would not be adopted by a self respecting public man in the normal discussions of a time of peace.

But we shall watch with interest the denouncement of this crusade of black guardism. Ingalls is proud of his inspiration. He defiantly announces his leadership in a campaign of malignant and dirt throwing. He invokes the remnants of the army that filled up our armies during the civil war to unfurl the banner of mendacity—to carry on the crusade of defamation. To his cooing call he welcomed the describer, the bounty jumper, the banner bearer, the skulker who manned the camp kettles, the sutlers' stores, the peaceful purlieus of the commissariat, the grand guard that tarried hen roosts and clothes horses, the leather lunged squadrons of the hustings, the patriots for revenue, who, like John James Ingalls, sat securely in the civilian pale of our armies—all these will joyfully accaim his leadership and begin the new warfare that bodes no danger, that risks no bullets.—New York Star.

☞Perry Weed has the finest and most complete stock of wall paper in town.

Bert Mason is building an addition to his store, to give him more storage room.

The ladies cleared about nine dollars at their "crazy social" last Friday evening.

The schooner F. M. Smith took a cargo of cedar at Carpenter's dock last Friday.

Time cards of the Friant and North Star in another column. They will run the same as last year.

Wm. Ferguson is fitting out the schooner Mockingbird this week, and will sail her this season.

Operations on a small scale are beginning at the factory, preparatory to a steady season's run.

Burns, Stevens & Co. received a wind mill on the Priant Monday, to be placed on their livery barn.

Stockman & Iddings call attention to their tackle for trout-fishing; also to their paints, oils, and brushes.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids goes to Chicago for a new wheel before beginning her summer business.

About twenty of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Crmickshank gave them a pleasant surprise party last evening.

The steambarge Westover arrived Friday from Bellaire, and will tow to St. Ignace for iron ore, for the Ironton furnace.

The contract for building the Marion town hall was let last Friday to Warren D. Thompson for $900. To be completed by Sept. 1st.

Jos. Swails has the schooner Peoria nearly ready for business. With the new timbers, new plank, etc., she is considered as good as a new boat.

The Norwood Lime Kiln Band will repeat their entertainment at Atwood on May 11. The entertainment at Norwood gave no general satisfaction.

The steamer Lou Cummings came over Tuesday morning, on her regular trip to Beaver Island. It is understand she is to call here three times a week.

M. W. Savory who served the first year and a half of his apprenticeship in the JOURNAL office, is now junior partner in the office of the Brighton Citizen.

The Friant commenced regular trips between Harbor Springs and East Jordan on Monday morning. She will run on the same schedule as last year.

L. E. Allen has word from Michigan City that a dredge is to be sent down here to dredge our river. She is expected in a few days, and work will begin at once.

On Monday Martin Butler was arrested for a failure to support his family. The matter was settled before Justice Kent, by a bond being given for their support one year.

On Monday morning Chas Chaloupka's saloon was decorated in mourning,—the liquor signs being painted over black, and a rosette of red, white and blue, attached to the sign post.

Although stormy weather prevailed during A. T. Washburne & Co's opening they report an unusually good trade and are made happy by the many compliments they received during that time.

J. A. Gellick is laying a new hardwood floor for his saloon building and will have the place fitted up bright and clean for a restaurant. The tax he has historically paid for the city, he will spend in improvements to his own property.

Byron See comes to the front this week with an enlarged advertising space, and an enumeration of his stock will convince anyone that he intends to keep in the front of the procession in style, quality, and price.

The office and dining room of the Fountain City House have passed through the ordeal of paint and paper, and offer a pleasant welcome to the weary and hungry traveler. When Mr. Ball gets through, the house will be in excellent trim for summer business.

Jos. Beauvais has thirty new clinker boats ready for the spring opening and is better than ever prepared to meet the demand for first-class boats.

The tug Alice Campbell was on Saturday launched from Washburn's yard. Capt. Penfold has given this boat a thorough rebuild, inside and out, and she goes into the water practically as good as a new boat. Capt. J. E. Carter will have command this season, and Capt. Penfold returns to Frankfort this week, to look after his interests at home.

On account of the storm last Friday and Saturday, Alick Rosenthal's "opening" is continued to Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week. His elegant draperies and lace goods are rare bargains. His stock of dress goods is of the latest styles, and is not excelled anywhere. The ladies are enthusiastic in praise of his entire display.

Last week we mentioned the fact that Geo W. Miller was in Chicago buying new goods. He returned on the City of Charlevoix with a full assortment of clothing and goods for nishing goods, and the shelves and counters are piled full. The customers who cannot be suited in style, quality and price, in a stock so large and varied, is indeed hard to please.

One of the worst nuisances in this town is the great number of gates hung so as to swing over the sidewalk. They are not always kept shut, and to run against one on a dark night almost knocks a person stiff. The council ought to pass an ordinance compelling them to swing toward the lot and away from the sidewalk, or in some manner prevent their obstructing the walk.

Speaking of the bird's-eye view of Charlevoix, as painted in the cabin of the steamer City of Charlevoix, the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, in a late issue, says: Nature seems to have chosen this spot as a haven of rest from the cares of business and summer heats, and a single glance at the painting referred to is sufficient to create a desire to go a-summering at once, and hasten to the point it so charmingly represents.

Seymour Bro.'s new steamer Petoskey was in port Saturday evening. We did not see her, but she is reported to be a very fine boat. She is designed for speed, has powerful machinery, every modern convenience, and her trial trip was in every way satisfactory. She has excellent accommodations for passengers, and will no doubt have many friends in northern Michigan ports. She will stop at HURD's dock in Charlevoix.

May 8.—Plenty of wet weather.

Spring work is rushing.

Fall wheat is looking quite good in this section.

Miss Ella Trimble who was attending school in Charlevoix, is at home again.

Mr. Rodney Bogart who got his leg cut some time ago is still confined to his bed.

Mrs. Robert Gregory died Sunday evening after a long illness. The funeral occurred here Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Gregory leaves a husband and little son and a host of relatives to mourn her loss.

CITY OF CHARLEVOIX.

The Staunch New Steamer of the Northern Michigan Line.

Last Thursday afternoon about five o'clock, the staunch new steamer City of Charlevoix arrived at this port direct from Chicago, and was welcomed by several hundred of our citizens, notwithstanding the rain poured down in streams. The band welcomed her at Emery Bro.'s warehouse, and as soon as she reached the dock people began to get on board. The officers gave a courteous welcome to the people anxious for a first glimpse of the inside of the elegant new steamer.

The City of Charlevoix is one of the finest equipped steamers of her size on the lakes. Her cabin is a model in point of construction and arrangement. The saloon presents a striking array of delicate tints, while the staterooms give an assurance of comfort not excelled by any of the larger passenger steamers on the lakes. The panel under the skylight at the head of the cabin has a sketch oil representing in perspective the harbor entrance and two lakes of Charlevoix, with a pleasing glimpse of the city itself. In the ladies cabin is another beautiful painting representing the City of Charlevoix at sea.

In size, the City of Charlevoix is about thirty feet longer than the old Champlain and correspondingly wider. She has staterooms accommodations for nearly one hundred passengers, and can carry 800 tons of freight. Particular attention has been paid to the firehold and engine-room, and the former is pronounced by experts to be absolutely fireproof. In appearance at sea, and in every quality which goes to make a first-class boat, our people have reason to feel proud of our namesake.

Owing to the rain she could not display theset of colors costing about $150, which was presented to her by the village, whose name she bears, but got a chance to hoist them for a few minutes before diarr.

The captain of the City of Charlevoix, Ira Bishop, is a veteran commander of lake passenger steamers, having for years held a position in old Northern Transportation Company and brought out the steamer Champlain. Mate Thomas Wood; steward, Edward Bassett; clerk, John Murray; engineer, John McCffrey.

The Northern Michigan Line is prepared better than ever to give Charlevoix people safe and comfortable transportation, for passengers and freight to Milwaukee and Chicago; and if the officers of these boats maintain their present reputation for sobriety and good judgment, the line will increase in popularity with our people.

Growing Industry.

An industry that has grown to considerable proportions in our midst without getting into the papers, is the greenhouse and floriculture of F. J. Leech. We know that he was busy with seeds and plants, but did not realize the extent. Attention was called last week to the fine array of beautiful flowers used in the decoration of A. T. Washburne & Co's store, and this suggested a visit to the greenhouse yesterday afternoon. His house on the south terrace is filled with a choice assortment of the most beautiful plants and flowers for the season. Already about one hundred geraniums have been sold or engaged for delivery this spring, and he has about one thousand verbenias in pots, five hundred begonias in various stages of growth, fifty to sixty varieties of fuschias, and all the finest cryasanthemums, ready for this spring's delivery, besides numerous others not here enumerated. During the present season, the house will be more than doubled in size, and a boiler set for steam heating. The yards are now being prepared for outdoor plants, and the entire lot on the north side of the street is to be filled with plants and flowers. Mr. Meech recently imported a large assortment of rare bulbs and seeds from England and Germany, and expects to be ready by next season to do a general business in this line. To supply our home gardens, Mr. Meech has nearly 3,000 tomato plants, now ready for setting. Lovers of flowers will appreciate this opportunity to get the latest and best, without the trouble of starting and caring for them during their early growth.

Congregational Church.

Sunday morning, May 13th, Rev. J. S. Smithson will occupy the pulpit. It has been the privilege to hear with profit our welcome brother, returned from his beneficent work in the east and south. Sunday evening, "The Greatest Name," by the pastor.

Rev. A. O. Dowes has been granted a vacation of four weeks. On his way east he attends the Congregational State Association at St. Joseph, to read a paper on "The Inspiration of the Word and the Worker." May 14-18. During his vacation the pulpit will be supplied by Rev's Smithson, Cate and Lee of Traverse City, Kern of Bellaire, and others of like celebrity.

Custom House Open.

The custom house is opened for the season. The impression is abroad that this year it was permanently closed, but this is not true. Charlevoix was included in an order last fall permanently closing several ports, but an influence was brought to keep this office open, and a slight misunderstanding on this account is the cause of the office here not being open sooner. It is now open, however, and vessel men will govern themselves accordingly.

Boyne.

BOYNE, May 7.—The merry waves of Pine Lake are dancing gleefully o'er its blue depths to break in ripples along the shore, for the last of the ice disappeared on May 5th.

N. J. DeBar started last Saturday for the Soo, having obtained a building contract at that place. His wife and son Earnest, who have lately returned from the south part of the state, will follow him in a few days.

Miss Ella Baker, who resorted in our town several summers and has been a resident for the last two years, left Wednesday for a visit to relatives in southern Indiana.

A log arrived last night and pulled the Clara Belle out of the sand in the river, and she now lies at the dock ready to wood up in the morning.

F. M. Abraham returned last Saturday for the summer from his old home near Cincinnati, Ohio, where he spent the winter.

Rev. J. R. Robinson, of the Indian Mission, Petoskey, conducted the quarterly services of the M. E. church at Boyne Falls on Saturday and Sunday. He also held services at the Methodist church in this place on Sunday evening to a crowded house.

The second convention of Charlevoix county W. C. T. U. will commence in this place to-morrow; a good attendance is hoped for.

George L. Griffin returned from Pennsylvania last Wednesday. He brought a wife home with him.

Wednesday morning the safe containing the Upright stationery was removed from the drug store to the store of R. R. Perkins, he having purchased them from E. F. Allen.

The shortage in the accounts of the township treasurer of Evangeline was paid over to its proper custodian on Wednesday morning, and the matter is, of course, adjusted. "The quality of mercy is not strained, it droppeth as the gentle dew from heaven, it blesseth him that gives and him that takes."

Eveline.

IRONTON, May 8.—The first thunder storm of the season May 3d.

Mr. Delbert Crocker who cut his foot so badly some time ago, is able to be at work again.

Mr. A. Box has purchased the Hick's property at Ironton.

The North Star made her first trip to Charlevoix May 4th.

George McMullin has given his house a coat of paint, which greatly improves its appearance.

Mr. Fairburn has purchased twenty acres of land of James Reed and will move on it this spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Sheldon have taken a gentleman boarder for twenty-one years. He weighed nihe pounds.

The new ferry boat arrived here last Monday.

The first cargo of ore arrived here last Sunday on the Westover.

Quarterly meeting services were held at the M. E. church at Ironton Sunday last. There will also be meetings at the same place this week.

Burgess.

BURGESS, May 8.—Ezra Furguson has moved back on his farm.

George Blythe is busy improving the looks of Dr. Lewis' farm.

Mrs. W. T. Dake is slowly improving from her recent illness.

Mr. I. S. Webster left last Wednesday for Chicago to take his position on the steamer Japan.

Mrs. Hale has been spending a week among her neighbors and looking after her farm and getting some improvements made on it.

School commenced in district No. 6 yesterday, with Miss Keat of South Arm, as teacher.

People are very busy plowing and sowing grain, and making gardens, fully up to time with our southern counties.

All dinners and houses all upside down is the prevailing order of the day.

T. W. Solter has on a fresh supply of groceries.

Mrs. Thos. Sunderland is able to be about the house again.

Wilson.

May 9.—Farmers are sowing grain, chopping and building fences. Every indication of spring.

The social for the benefit of Elder Towne netted about $8.00.

Elder Grover preached at the school house on Saturday evening. We understand he intends soon to go south.

George Berger of Chicago, representing the Presbyterian Mission Society, is organizing Sunday schools in this vicinity.

Miss Mary McMillan is stopping at the Commercial House at present. Miss Anna Quye takes her place at J. R. Vance's.

We hear that Isaac Burton and family, also Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Tyler, nee Georgie Kitson, will soon leave their departure for Indian Territory.

Mrs. Kuhns and daughter Blanches, are visiting at Mr. Hodges. They have just returned from Pennsylvania. Mrs. K's health is much improved.

Banks.

ATWOOD, May 7.—Mrs. Yettaw was buried last Monday.

A logging at L. Comps last Saturday.

Chilt and Clint Stafford raised their barn frame to-day.—54x30, 16 foot posts.

There were six jurymen instead of three, as reported last week.

Mr. A. Demas moved into Cy. Jolliff's house.

Mr. Dennis has rented Mr. Peter Blair's farm.

Card of Thanks.

Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Hagerty desire to thank their many friends in Hayes for their kindness during the sickness and death of their son Jerry.

Teachers' Association.

The Charlevoix Teachers' Association will hold the first meeting of the series of 1888, at the high school room in Charlevoix, May 11th and 12th, commencing at 7.30 Friday evening. Among the subjects to be discussed are the following: (1) Teachers' Institutes, their nature, how to use and how to improve them. (2) A plan for one month's work with language study. (3) Exercises outside the text book, how much, and why necessary. (4) Advantages of reading objects, and how most profitably taught. (5) A query box will be opened at each session. On Friday evening a spelling contest and also a pronouncing contest will be held open to all. D. E. McClure, of Harper & Brothers, offer books to the value of $2.25 to the winner in each contest.

Man Overboard.

Last Thursday night the steambarge Westover, from Milwaukee to Ironton, lost a wheelsman overboard in lake Michigan. He stepped to the side of the boat to get a pail of water and the night being wet and stormy, he probably lost his foothold and fell overboard. He shouted for help, and the barge was stopped and the small boat lowered, but he could not be reached before he was engulfed and his body could not be found.

Drosky-Riding, and Why It Is Popular with Young Men and Women.

[WILLIAM ELEROY CURTIS, IN CHICAGO NEWS.]

Instead of Washington, Petersburg should be called the city of magnificent distances. It is a ride of three-quarters of an hour from the railway station to the hotels in the center of the town, and it is so far to almost every place the stranger wants to visit that he has neither the time nor the strength for walking. But he has the drosky, that curious vehicle that is found nowhere else, and street cars that take him anywhere and everywhere. Only the peasants use the street cars, however, and we were warned against using them because of the vermin.

The fares are very cheap—as cheap as the ferries in New York. One can ride from one end of the city to the other for 10 copecks, and the usual fare is 5—about 2 cents. But the droskies are quite as cheap when comfort is taken into consideration. I was about to take a street car one day to go to a shop a mile or so distant from the hotel, when the guide remonstrated and insisted upon a drosky.

"But what's the use of taking a drosky," I said, "when the cars go right to the place?"

"It is about as cheap for the two of us," he replied, and so it was, for the cost of the journey, for two passengers, about a mile, was 9 cents, and we were hauled by a horse that would sell in New York for $500.

In no country in the world are there such cheap, comfortable, and rapid facilities for city transportation as in Petersburg, and nowhere can one find such splendid horses.

The drosky is an institution that ought to be introduced into the States. There is one in Washington, owned and used by Mr. Alex. Gregor, the Secretary of the Russian Legation, and it is a great curiosity, but they would be very useful and popular in all our cities, particularly if they could be drawn by Russian horses. There is as much fascination in riding in a drosky as in a gondola in Venice, and it is the first thing a traveler wants to do when he arrives in Petersburg. He will send his bags by the omnibus and go to the hotel in a drosky. It is a low vehicle, the floor being scarcely more than a foot from the ground, on four wheels not much larger than those of a wheelbarrow—a sort of a miniature victoria. The ishvoshnik, or driver, sits upon a high perch far above the heads of the passengers, who have a low, narrow, backless seat over the hind wheels. It is not uncomfortable, but the sensation at first is alarming, particularly when you are whizzing around a corner, for the drivers always go like mad, and you wish there was something to hold on to. You fasten your hand on the seat with a good grip, and cling to your your fellow-passenger, if you have one.

I should remark, by way of parenthesis, that when a gentleman is riding with a lady in Russia, in the daytime as well as after dark, in the principal thoroughfares as well as in the secluded portions of the parks, he always puts his arm around her waist. It is the custom of the country, and makes drosky-riding popular with young people—as popular as dancing—and causes no more remark than the attitude of a waltz in a ball-room—every one expects it. A little experience causes the alarm to wear off, and you become accustomed to let your body sway with the motions of the vehicle. I inquired if any one was ever thrown out of a drosky, and was told that such a thing never happened, and I think it is true, for I know my horse riding in them so drunk that I thought they would topple over the next instant, but they never did.

HOW THE HORSES ARE HARNESSED.

The Russian Horse.

The horse that draws you and the driver who holds the reins are both Russian institutions, and you won't find their like elsewhere.

One can find poor horses in Russia, I suppose, but very few in Petersburg or the other large cities. They are tall, long-legged animals, with slender bodies and limbs, long silken manes and tails, the latter nearly always reaching to the ground, small heads, small feet, large, intelligent eyes, and necks arched like the chargers one sees in pictures of the Hedonins of the desert. I always thought such horses were the creation of the artists, but Russia is full of them. There is a familiar picture of wild horses fleeing from a fire on the prairies, with long manes and tails floating in the breeze, with eyes flashing fire and fury, and flecks of foam floating in the air from their lips and nostrils, and another of similar animals ridden by Bedouins with sheets wrapped around their heads and scimetars in their hands.

I have always admired these pictures as expressive of all that horses should be, but I never saw such animals alive till I went to Russia. There you can see a thousand that look just as if they had stepped out of that picture, on any street of the city, every day, many of them harnessed to droskies that you can have for 45 cents an hour. The ishvoshnik is always proud of his horse, if he has a good one, and treats him much better than he does his wife. Nearly all the time he is disengaged the ishvoshnik is either petting or rubbing his horse, and at intervals he brings out a little nose-bag from under the seat, to feed him oats or meal.

Habits of the Ishvoshtnik.

Not one in ten of these charioteers has a home, and not one in ten of these splendid horses knows the inside of a stable. They live in the harness, in the open air summer and winter, being always on duty, eating when opportunity offers, and sleeping in their droskies between drives. Every hour or two the driver takes a nose-bag full of oats from under his seat to feed his horse. Sometimes he takes a little meal, which connects the ends of the thills and looks like an exaggerated, badly formed horseshoe, is called the "duga," and underneath the apex, on equipages in the country, is fastened a big bell—sometimes two or three bells—which jangle so loudly that they may be heard a half-mile away. The purpose of the bell is to announce the coming of the horseman; to frighten away the wolves that invest the country roads, and to warn other travelers upon narrow and dangerous highways against collisions. The droskies in the cities are more formally decorated with bells, but they made such a din that the government issued an edict to abolish them. The speed of the vehicle is approaching a corner at a high rate of speed, and it never goes slowly, the driver announces his coming by a shrill, prolonged, prolonge tone like the gondoliers use at Venice. In the winter bells are necessary, for their sleigh-bells are noiseless and the ordinary speed is great.

A Whip Is Never Used.

I did not see one during my entire stay in Petersburg, but the ishvoshtnik keeps up a continual one-sided conversation with his fleet-footed partner, now encouraging him with tender, caressing epithets; now stinging him with sarcasm and taunts of scorn, and again hurling at the horse profane epitetes. The effect of the driver's voice is peculiar and powerful, and an observant rider will be interested in studying this old relationship. Now the stallion, and only stallions are used, "is precious to the soul" of the ishvoshtnik, or is his "tender dove," a few moments later he is accused of his sex and addressed in terms that cannot be printed here, and the horse seems to understand every word.

"Come, pretty pigeon, let go thy legs."

"Go! Go! pass the brute beside thee, my sweetheart; let not that worthless vrtcka kick dirt in thy eyes."

"Go swiftly, my beauty, and thou shalt have more oats than thy eyes have seen for a month."

"Thou art lazy to-day, thou son of my heart; wilt thou freeze in thy tracks here, starveling?"

"Look out for that stone there, little father; carefully, carefully; this road was not made for the Czar."

"What dost thou with thine eyes, accursed thing? Thy mother's colt ought to run in holes like the mice."

"Now speed thee, oh, kitten! for the passenger has promised me a ruble if thou makest haste!"

This sort of taunts and pet phrases takes the best care of himself he can. People seldom cross the street at a walk, unless it is deserted. They give a look in one direction, then in the other, and, gathering their skirts around them, run for their lives. Vehicles always have the right of way, and it is a popular tradition that the hospitals are established solely for the treatment of unfortunates who have been run over.

The costume of the ishvoshtnik is novel and picturesque. It is a long cap of blue cloth, made in the Tam-o'-Shanter style with a wide front-piece of soft leather, or a stiff silk hat about half the height of the ordinary "plug," a long blue shirt that reaches to his heels, and covers his high-top boots. Under that surtout or overcoat, which is bound around his waist by a belt, are supposed to be concealed all the world's treasures, among which one can imagine are several feather beds, from the dropsical appearance of the subject. His circumference is enormous; he fills up an ordinary doorway, and when perched upon his drosky he laps over the seat many inches on all sides. When you attempt to attract the driver's attention by poking him in the back with your cane or umbrella, you must use considerable violence, for the point will sink into his wrapping several inches before it reaches the sensible part of his frame.

The Imperial Post Service.

Travelers in the country where there are no railways usually prefer to make use of the imperial post service, which exists upon the principal lines of communication, and will furnish relays of horses at intervals of twenty or thirty miles. In order to obtain them, one must secure from the authorities a "podorozhnaya"—a formidable-looking document, which directs whom it may concern to assist the bearer on his way, to furnish him promptly with the number of the horses, from certain points to certain points, for a certain consideration, and must be paid in advance at the respective road stations. The "podorozhnaya" costs a considerable sum itself, which is devoted to the repair of the roads. Armed with these credentials the traveler applies to the nearest post station for a mettlesome, horse, and a vehicle known as a "tarantas," a sort of overgrown drosky, heavily and strongly made, with cross-legged stiff springs, and a general condition of discomfort. Sometimes the horses are very fine and fast; sometimes they are only ordinary, but their appearance is no test of their speed, for I have seen the most "ornary"-looking brutes gallop over a distance of twenty miles in two hours and a half without turning a hair. Horses that are driven three abreast, but often when the passenger is in a hurry, or the roads are bad, or the distance is great, four or even five are harnessed abreast. There is no tongue, or pole, but only a pair of thills, no matter how many horses. One is hitched in the thills and does the steering; two others are fastened to the axle or the whiffletree, and their traces are kept together by straps. Very seldom do they trot, but commonly go at a gallop mile after mile.

In the wider spaces it is much more agreeable, notwithstanding the cold. The sledge is much more comfortable than the wheeled vehicles, and one can sleep in a nest of furs that provided for the purpose, and often frost bitten, but a Russian thinks a little frost is good for the system after a mosquito bite. The latter would probably annoy him the more. He does not go to a fire to warm when frost-bitten but rubs the part with snow until the friction thaw it out, and no ill consequences follows.

But the natives of all classes are capable of enduring an almost incredible amount of heat and cold. They dress warmly in furs and flannels, but even such garments would not reconcile an ordinary man to the extreme temperature which sends the mercury down to thirty or forty degrees below zero, day after day and week after week, almost continuously from November till April. The Russians seem to be entirely excluded to as first cousin to the polar bear, and his habits and endurance seem to establish the relationship. He will drive a sledge across the bleak plains, with the wind howling at the rate of thirty miles an hour and the mercury at forty degrees below zero, and apparent discomfort, and he will take you to a village twenty miles off for the theater, or a house in which there is a reception, hour after hour, and dance with the girls the while, when the mercury is down to forty below zero.

The Genuine Russian Bath.

The Russian bath, as we know it, cannot be had in the country from which it takes its name. In New York or Chicago it is common. The subject is placed in a chest, with his head sticking out through the top, and steam is turned on in his body for awhile, then he plunges into a pool of cold water, and is thoroughly rubbed by an attendant. Such baths may be had in Russia, but I could not learn where. The real Russian bath is that which the moujik takes, and from which ours get its name, is considerably different. The moujik crawls into his oven, which is built large enough to accommodate him, lies there till he is afloat in his own perspiration, and then runs out naked into the open air and rolls in the snow.

This extraordinary procedure is adopted as a cure for disease, as well as for the purification of the person, and is said to be effective. The upper classes have baths in their homes as we do, and have physicians of great skill to treat them when they are sick, but in the rural districts there are few doctors and medicine, and diseases are treated—sometimes cured—and wounds are dressed, either by what is known as a "Feldsher," or a "Znakharka."

The former is usually some old soldier, retired from the army, crippled or disabled by disease, and has some knowledge of surgery which he has learned in the barracks or the hospitals. He can set a limb with some skill, is familiar with the standard remedies for fevers and other common ailments, and understands the uses of ordinary physics.

The "Znakharka" is a midwife, a fortune-teller, a village gossip, a dealer in herbs, an interpreter of dreams and signs and omens, a manipulator of charms and amulets, a sorceress, who exercises the evil spirits, and a witch, who practices all forms of demonomy. She usually treats the women and children, while the Feldsher treats the men. In addition to the exercise of sorcery, and the practice of the healing arts, she is also useful in negotiating marriages among the peasants. In her capacity of confidential friend and gossip she knows what hearts are loose and may be tied together, and when a love-sick young moujik, she confides in the "Znakharka," who endeavors to bring them together, and the young moujiks often seek her mediation when the maidens of the village are indifferent to their attentions.

Poor Old Arkansas.

Half a century ago, when the first Legislature elected in Arkansas after she was admitted into the Union was in session, an affecting incident of the House of Representatives between Col. John Wilson, the Speaker of the House, and a member named Anthony, in which the latter was killed. The wages used by speakers of those days were as a bowie-knife, and from that day to this Arkansas has borne a hard name in the North, and by many has been called the "Bowie Knife State." But notwithstanding the handicapping under which she has been compelled to move in the race of progress, she bids fair to outstrip nearly all the Southern States before another decade. George Ross Brown, of the Little Rock Gazette, at a press banquet in Memphis the other day, responded to the toast "Arkansas," and in the course of his remarks told some things and gave some statistics touching his State which may prove of interest, if not of value, to people who may be contemplating the reading of homes farther south:

"We have a fertile 200 miles across from north to south, and we raise every product known to the temperate zone and supply semi-tropical fruits in abundance. Of strawberries and melons we ship carloads every day to the markets of the North. Prior to 1872 we were practically without railroads, and now the State is gridironed with them, and we have more miles of navigable rivers than any other State—3,000 miles. The resources are greater than any other section of territory of the area on the face of the globe. Can you find another place where fortune awaits you out of seventy-five counties bear manufacturing minerals? Can you find another State where long fortunes are won the big premium wherever shown and where fresh new fortunes are in prizes in such rapid succession?

"Can you name another State showing eighty different varieties of timber and 5,000 square miles of heavily timbered land? And we are erecting one new wood-working establishment every two days. And, by the way, Arkansas produces more cotton per acre than any other Southern State. Poor old Arkansas!

"We have pine trees enough to make 100,000,000,000 feet of lumber, and last year the output of our mills brought in $20,000,000 and furnished our already over-taxed railroad lines with 100,000 car-loads of product, and besides we also made heavy shipments of logs to European countries via river to New Orleans. Unknown, idle, traduced Arkansas!

"A word about our free schools, for often we are referred to as illiterate. We had last year 2,102 free school-houses and 274,707 pupils. We expended on our free schools $897,6.3. The increase in schools is 236, in pupils 16,761, and in funds expended $30,7.0. Arkansas is becoming enlightened!

Why He Wore a Ring.

"Isn't that rather a peculiar ring for a man to wear?" asked Mr. Madison Square of Mr. Broom Corner, as they met in one of those up-town cafes where they don't sell cafe.

"Dunno," replied Mr. Downes, gloomily. "I tried it on a girl and she broke my head. I think it was what she wanted."—Puck.

Darwin Outdone.

"Him what?" asked an Indian of a visitor at the Central Park menagerie, pointing at a baboon that was swinging by his tail from a perch in the cage.

"Baboon," returned the gentleman politely.

"Ugh!" grunted the Indian, after watching the animal intently for a few moments, "half Chinaman, half cat!"

THE HIGH TARIFF ON WOOLENS.

How Far a Forty Per Cent. Customs Duty Protects Manufacturers.

Mr. J. S. Moore, the well-known writer on tax tariff, revenue and cognate subjects, contributes the following to the New York Times:

When the President in his message called attention to the burdensome tax on necessary clothing worn by the people the cry of "free trade" was at once raised. Of course the "cry" was an omnipotent "falsehood," because the President did not recommend free woolen goods, but simply stated what is a fact—namely, that most oppressive taxes were paid by the people. When the Mills bill was published, which proposes free raw wool and a tax of 40 per cent. ad valorem on woolen fabrics, another "cry" arose from the protection and trust oligarchy. This time it was not exactly "free trade," but the proposal was holding toward free trade. But the most wicked, impertinent, and lying statement of the woolen protectionists is that a reduction of duty to 40 per cent. must reduce the wages of the hands employed in the woolen mills. Now, let me once more plainly and clearly prove that 40 per cent. ad valorem actually protects the home manufacturer of woolen goods.

I shall, of course, have recourse to the official returns of the census of 1880, and I beg my readers to judge these facts impartially. First, the returns of wages were given by the manufacturers themselves. Second, the year 1880 was a year of prosperity, when high wages were paid. Yet, in 1880 there were employed in the United States the following hands in manufacture of woolens:

Males above 16 years	75,464
Females above 16 years	26,614
Children	2,187
Total	104,265

The wages paid during the year 1880 in the above hands were $64,371,551. The material used amounted to $164,371,551. The total value of finished goods was $267,252,913. Now, if we deduct the $164,371,551 of material from the value of the finished goods—namely, $267,252,913—we get a balance of $102,881,362, and the wages amount to a little more than 62 per cent. The duty at 40 per cent. is a duty of 22 per cent. on foreign woolen fabrics, we virtually protect and pay the "total" wages paid by the home manufacturers.

If we give the woolen manufactures free wool and place them on a par with the English woolen manufactures the home woolen mills will be in a better world or should have the full advantage over the foreign manufacturers. But the Mills bill proposes free wool, and at the same time protection, or, in other words, to protect the home manufacturer to the extent of nearly double the wages he pays. And yet, in 1880 the duty was but 40 per cent. ad valorem, and it was a tariff without turning a hair. Now, I do not believe that there is abroad, but often when the passenger is in a hurry, or the roads are bad, or the distance is great, four or even five are harnessed abreast. There is no tongue, or pole, but only a pair of thills, no matter how many horses. One is hitched in the thills and does the steering; two others are fastened to the axle or the whiffletree, and their traces are kept together by straps. Very seldom do they trot, but commonly go at a gallop mile after mile.

In the wider spaces it is much more agreeable, notwithstanding the cold. The sledge is much more comfortable than the wheeled vehicles, and one can sleep in a nest of furs that provided for the purpose, and often frost bitten, but a Russian thinks a little frost is good for the system after a mosquito bite. The latter would probably annoy him the more. He does not go to a fire to warm when frost-bitten but rubs the part with snow until the friction thaw it out, and no ill consequences follows.

But the natives of all classes are capable of enduring an almost incredible amount of heat and cold. They dress warmly in furs and flannels, but even such garments would not reconcile an ordinary man to the extreme temperature which sends the mercury down to thirty or forty degrees below zero, day after day and week after week, almost continuously from November till April. The Russians seem to be entirely excluded to as first cousin to the polar bear, and his habits and endurance seem to establish the relationship. He will drive a sledge across the bleak plains, with the wind howling at the rate of thirty miles an hour and the mercury at forty below zero, and apparent discomfort, and he will take you to a village twenty miles off for the theater, or a house in which there is a reception, hour after hour, and dance with the girls the while, when the mercury is down to forty below zero.

The Genuine Russian Bath.

The Russian bath, as we know it, cannot be had in the country from which it takes its name. In New York or Chicago it is common. The subject is placed in a chest, with his head sticking out through the top, and steam is turned on in his body for awhile, then he plunges into a pool of cold water, and is thoroughly rubbed by an attendant. Such baths may be had in Russia, but I could not learn where. The real Russian bath is that which the moujik takes, and from which ours get its name, is considerably different. The moujik crawls into his oven, which is built large enough to accommodate him, lies there till he is afloat in his own perspiration, and then runs out naked into the open air and rolls in the snow.

This extraordinary procedure is adopted as a cure for disease, as well as for the purification of the person, and is said to be effective. The upper classes have baths in their homes as we do, and have physicians of great skill to treat them when they are sick, but in the rural districts there are few doctors and medicine, and diseases are treated—sometimes cured—and wounds are dressed, either by what is known as a "Feldsher," or a "Znakharka."

The former is usually some old soldier, retired from the army, crippled or disabled by disease, and has some knowledge of surgery which he has learned in the barracks or the hospitals. He can set a limb with some skill, is familiar with the standard remedies for fevers and other common ailments, and understands the uses of ordinary physics.

The "Znakharka" is a midwife, a fortune-teller, a village gossip, a dealer in herbs, an interpreter of dreams and signs and omens, a manipulator of charms and amulets, a sorceress, who exercises the evil spirits, and a witch, who practices all forms of demonomy. She usually treats the women and children, while the Feldsher treats the men. In addition to the exercise of sorcery, and the practice of the healing arts, she is also useful in negotiating marriages among the peasants. In her capacity of confidential friend and gossip she knows what hearts are loose and may be tied together, and when a love-sick young moujik, she confides in the "Znakharka," who endeavors to bring them together, and the young moujiks often seek her mediation when the maidens of the village are indifferent to their attentions.

Poor Old Arkansas.

Half a century ago, when the first Legislature elected in Arkansas after she was admitted into the Union was in session, an affecting incident of the House of Representatives between Col. John Wilson, the Speaker of the House, and a member named Anthony, in which the latter was killed. The wages used by speakers of those days were as a bowie-knife, and from that day to this Arkansas has borne a hard name in the North, and by many has been called the "Bowie Knife State." But notwithstanding the handicapping under which she has been compelled to move in the race of progress, she bids fair to outstrip nearly all the Southern States before another decade. George Ross Brown, of the Little Rock Gazette, at a press banquet in Memphis the other day, responded to the toast "Arkansas," and in the course of his remarks told some things and gave some statistics touching his State which may prove of interest, if not of value, to people who may be contemplating the reading of homes farther south:

"We have a fertile 200 miles across from north to south, and we raise every product known to the temperate zone and supply semi-tropical fruits in abundance. Of strawberries and melons we ship carloads every day to the markets of the North. Prior to 1872 we were practically without railroads, and now the State is gridironed with them, and we have more miles of navigable rivers than any other State—3,000 miles. The resources are greater than any other section of territory of the area on the face of the globe. Can you find another place where fortune awaits you out of seventy-five counties bear manufacturing minerals? Can you find another State where long fortunes are won the big premium wherever shown and where fresh new fortunes are in prizes in such rapid succession?

"Can you name another State showing eighty different varieties of timber and 5,000 square miles of heavily timbered land? And we are erecting one new wood-working establishment every two days. And, by the way, Arkansas produces more cotton per acre than any other Southern State. Poor old Arkansas!

"We have pine trees enough to make 100,000,000,000 feet of lumber, and last year the output of our mills brought in $20,000,000 and furnished our already over-taxed railroad lines with 100,000 car-loads of product, and besides we also made heavy shipments of logs to European countries via river to New Orleans. Unknown, idle, traduced Arkansas!

"A word about our free schools, for often we are referred to as illiterate. We had last year 2,102 free school-houses and 274,707 pupils. We expended on our free schools $897,6.3. The increase in schools is 236, in pupils 16,761, and in funds expended $30,7.0. Arkansas is becoming enlightened!

Why He Wore a Ring.

"Isn't that rather a peculiar ring for a man to wear?" asked Mr. Madison Square of Mr. Broom Corner, as they met in one of those up-town cafes where they don't sell cafe.

"Dunno," replied Mr. Downes, gloomily. "I tried it on a girl and she broke my head. I think it was what she wanted."—Puck.

Darwin Outdone.

"Him what?" asked an Indian of a visitor at the Central Park menagerie, pointing at a baboon that was swinging by his tail from a perch in the cage.

"Baboon," returned the gentleman politely.

"Ugh!" grunted the Indian, after watching the animal intently for a few moments, "half Chinaman, half cat!"

ACCORDING to Camden, gaming was introduced into England by the Saxons, and the loser was often made a slave to the winner, and sold in traffic, like other merchandise.

A Large Estate.

A broad land is this in which we live, dotted so thickly with thrifty cities, towns, and villages. And them all, with ever-increasing popularity and helpfulness, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, giving hope and health to the sick, where, there, is disease and poverty. Wherever there is humanity there is the best field for this superb American Remedy. Consumption, Scrofula, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, yields to it, if enough is the early stages of the disease. Chronic Nasal Catarrh yields to it; Kidney and Liver disease yield to it! If you want the best known remedy for all diseases of the blood, sold by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and take no other.

A Fact Book.

Scintillating with Sarcasm and Brilliant Thoughts.

[New York Letter.]

Chap. I. "The Sunny Land of Florida. Chap. II. "Overwrought" goes to Europe. Chap. III. "Has Recuperated" and Has Gone. Chap. IV. Has a row with his Doctor.

I have read a deal of sarcasm in my day, but I never read anything equal to the sarcasm contained in the above, the last-named book, written by one myself. I showed the manuscript to a friend, a personal friend, the "sister-in-law" of an august lady, and he gave you a synopsis.

"Sarcasm," said he, "is the cloak with which superficial physicians cover up a multitude of ill feelings which they do not understand, and do not much care to investigate. It is also a cover for sick stomachs and tongues. When they advise their patient to travel or that he has overworked his brain and is probably suffering from malaria, it is a confession of ignorance of disease."

"The patient goes abroad. The change is a tonic and he comes home hale and hearty. Consumptions, Fickle appetite, frequent headaches, severe colds, cramps, sleeplessness, irritability, tired feelings, and general dullness are the symptoms of a sluggish liver, and are the warning attacks of rheumatism which follow in its wake by regardless of all human feelings.

"It is muscular—in his back. Articular—in his joints. Inflammatory, no! how he fears it will fly to his heart.

"Now off he goes to the springs. The doctor sends him there, of course, to get well; at the same time he does not really want him to die on his hands!

"Has would but his business!

"Better for a few days. Returns. After the winter, neuralgia. Headaches. Bad blood; constipation; has pneumonia; goes to Florida. Sunny Land. Has a row with his doctor; is irritable; is irritable; is irritable. Is a bear; everything about him seems to go wrong; becomes suspicious; mutters aloud; talks to himself; talks to everybody and everything.

"Great heaven!" he cries, "why have you kept me so long in ignorance?"

"Because, I answer, I have tried your fare five years ago. I thought best to keep you quiet and let you die."

He dismisses his doctor, but too late! His disease has fastened on him.

"But him, what become of him?

The other day a well-known Wall street broker, who is a man of considerable means, who prevailed Knight's disease is becoming, two or my friends, I was informed by one of it. But it is not incurable, I am certain, for my friend, who was given up by all the physicians and recovery was impossible, is now in good health and attending to his business. This gentleman, formerly represented in Congress a district in Brooklyn. He knows, he appreciates and believes the value of that preparation, because his nephew, who is a son of Duncan Cox, Consul General, was pronounced incurable when the remedy, Warner's Safe Cure, saved his life. Sarcasm, I repeat, "I was very skeptical, but since taking that remedy he is well.

"I happen to know what it was that cured Mr. Cox's nephew, because I was with Mr. Morgan & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., when the order was sent for the safe cure.

"Well, I suppose I must be convinced, but I prefer the same means.

"Sarcasm is a poor substitute for a good medicine, and the public prefer to be cured by the same means.

"Sarcasm is a poor substitute for a good medicine, and the public prefer to be cured by the same means.

"If, in my case, I should, I am yet enough of a believer in the medicine, because it has been made a peer solely by reason of its literary achievements is Lord Tennyson.

It is clearly seen in England, however, that the Sunny Land is a place for thoroughly well-fitted to be a powerful and practical physicians in these days. The idea of a man becoming a legislator for life, merely by right of birth, is a thing of the past, and a time when the masses of the people have learned that the Sunny Land is the Salisbury, a high Tory, and very tenacious of the privileges of his order, is in favor of making some changes in its composition. "We belong too much to the Sunny Land to be surprised at that, with respect to a large number of questions, we are all too much of one mind."

The reform of the House of Lords, indeed, is one of the questions of the day, and, as I said, the Sunny Land is not one of the questions that will probably come to a settlement, for the necessity of reform is perceived, there is an immense amount of conservatism to be overcome before the movement can be successful. Among the suggestions that have been considered are the creation of more life peers in order that more power ability may be secured, and all fields of knowledge and action may be represented, and the creation of territorial peers as a whole choose a portion of their number to represent them in the House. The House of Lords, if it should be reformed in two ways, would be made to be more in accordance with the spirit of the age, and, in the first place, it would be fitted to perform its task in the system of the English Government.—Youth's Companion.

Blessing Sacred Lambs.

There is a curious ceremony which takes place at Rome every year on St. Agnes's day—the blessing of the lambs the sacred lambs, whose fleece is used for the Pope's pallium. The lambs are provided by the canons of St. John Lateran. They are first taken in a grand carriage to St. Agnes' church, outside the walls, to be blessed; then driven to the Vatican, where they are formally presented to the Pope, and afterward given over to the care of some of the convents, where the nuns seen them till Easter, when the fleece is shorn and the sacred vestment made, while the flesh is eaten by the poor.

The ceremony we went to see was very short; two little white lambs, their fleece carefully washed and combed, were carried in, each tied with red ribbons into an open basket, on a correspondent of the Times of Greenville and Carnarvon are debaters who are not excelled by more than two or three of the greatest speakers in the Commons. Many of the peers, moreover, have served in the Commons, and have either succeeded to titles employed in the House of Lords, or have been created peers on account of ability or party services. Manufacturers, bankers, brewers and other business men have been raised to seats in the House of Lords, and yet science and medicine are unrepresented in the House of Lords, and they were carried back to their carriage, the people thronging round and seizing bits of wool as souvenirs, as they were taken through the congregation.

MORAL strength is the highest kind of health.

The British House of Lords.

A few weeks ago a young English peer, of high rank, was caught cheating in a horse race, and was expelled from the jockey club. He had entered a horse in a race, and in order, dishonestly, to make money, had directed his jockey not to let his horse win. This disgraceful incident happening to a man who, by right of birth, had the power to aid in the making of laws, has, it is said, called general attention to the defects of the upper branch of Parliament—the House of Lords.

It is not, indeed, the only incident which has taken place in recent years involving a peer in personal disgrace. At the present time a peer is lolling on the continent so as to be out of the reach of the law. Instances of peers being made bankrupts have not been rare in recent years, and cases of hopeless moral depravity, on the part of noblemen, have again and again been made public. In a body comprising between five and six hundred men, however, most of whom have been born to rank, and are peculiarly subject to the temptations of great wealth and luxury, it is perhaps not surprising that some should go wrong; that there should be extravagance, dissoluteness and dishonesty on the part of weak peers.

But the House of Lords also contains a large number of able, useful and upright men. Its Chairman of Committees, and its ablest debaters, are men who have shown a great deal of talent and pure personal worth. The house, not long ago, was found to contain twenty-one peers who had served as Viceroys in British colonies abroad; six who had governed large cities; twenty-three ex-ministers of the house, two ex-lord chancellors, two field-marshals, eight able judges, forty generals, and twenty-six admirals; and twenty-four who were or had been members of the Commons.

In political eloquence, the hereditary element seems not to be represented with the popularity elected lower house. The duke of Argyle, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of Rosebery, the Granville and Carnarvon are debaters who are not excelled by more than two or three of the greatest speakers in the Commons. Many of the peers, moreover, have served in the Commons, and have either succeeded to titles employed in the House of Lords, or have been created peers on account of ability or party services. Manufacturers, bankers, brewers and other business men have been raised to seats in the House of Lords, and yet science and medicine are unrepresented in the House of Lords, and they were carried back to their carriage, the people thronging round and seizing bits of wool as souvenirs, as they were taken through the congregation.

A Hot Stomach Bitter?

Bottling up electricity so as to be able to carry it around and use it at pleasure is done with "Jersey lightning," is one of the modern marvels which stagger the average mind. A simple, popular explanation of the "storage battery" is not easy to give, to make it clear to the reader which has some knowledge of the correlation of forces and of the different forms of energy. But even the non-scientific may get some idea of "storage" of electricity if he understands that an electrical current has the power of decomposing metals and rearranging their particles. In this process whatever energy the electrical current possessed is absorbed or "stored" up in the new form, just as the sun's heat is stored up in coal. A storage battery consists essentially of metallic plates immersed in an acid liquid; through these is passed an electric current generated by a dynamo-electrical machine driven by a steam engine; a chemical change is set up which is continued until a state of chemical equilibrium is produced. If, now, the proper connections be made between the metallic plates—which are in two sets, positive and negative—a reverse action is begun, and the metallic particles resume their original form and compounds, and in so doing the energy originally derived from the steam engine is given off. Man is again given out for use in any of the many forms in which the electrical current might have been primarily employed, as in driving an electric motor or furnishing electric light.—Chicago News.

VERDICT OF THE JUDGE.

Great Excitement In and About a Justice's Office at Chester, Mass.

For three years I have been troubled with a cough and a lame back. I have tried and got no relief permanently until I tried Dr. Wood's Pulmonic Syrup and Kidney Cure. The first bottle of each has relieved me wonderfully, and I shall never be without them. I have tried a great many other remedies, but none have given me such lasting relief as these. I have recommended them to many friends and getting, and for the last eight months I have not thought of my lame back, or coughing, thought nothing could be done for me. Lindsay, Ont., Canada, Feb. 1, 1887. I have been troubled with a cough and a lame back for years. It is to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now known to mankind. Dr. Wood's Pulmonic is the last trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one at this season, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

is proven to be so vastly superior to any other sarsaparilla, or blood purifier, that one hundred and fifty times as much is spent in the manufacture of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of any other preparation of the kind. Nearly everybody needs a good spring medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla is equal to any emergency. It accumulates in the blood during the winter, keeps up strength as warm weather comes on, creates an appetite and promotes healthy digestion. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla and you will be convinced of its peculiar merits. It is the ideal spring medicine—reliable, beneficial, pleasant to take, and gives full value for the money.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla as a spring tonic, and I recommend it to all who have that miserable tired feeling." C. PARMELEE, 160 Bridge street, Brooklyn, N.Y.

FARM AND GARDEN.

A VARIETY OF TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED.

Laying Out Farms Into Symmetrical Fields That Will Admit of Closest Economy of Money and Time in Fencing and Cultivating.

In laying out farms and in shaping fields the common rolling practice is to give them a square form or as nearly so as practicable, in order to economize fencing. A ten acre lot, for example, if square, will measure forty rods on each of the four sides and require for its entire inclosure 160 rods of fencing. By altering its form and making it twice as long and half as broad it will require 200 rods of boundary fence.

FIG. 1.—ONE HUNDRED PIECES OF SQUARE LOT.

But the oblong form has some special advantages, as every farmer knows, saving considerable time in plowing, harrowing and working with the cultivator. Country Gentleman, in commenting on the above, calls attention to the fact that in portions of the country like many of the western states, where the land has been surveyed into squares and right angles, it is easy to lay out farms in symmetrical fields, a form which may be adopted being represented by Fig. 1, where the fields are twice as long as wide, and every one is entered from the central lane or farm road through a gate. On the left of this road is a barn, orchard and long vegetable garden cultivated with a horse. On the right is a dwelling, cottage house and another fruit trees. The six principal fields may be brought into a convenient rotation of corn, barley, oats or peas, wheat and clover and timothy for two or three years in meadow and pasture.

FIG. 2—SQUARE FIELDS ON A SQUARE LOT.

Fig. 2 represents a farm of the same shape laid out with square fields, which would obviously be less convenient than the one shown in Fig. 1.

When, from uneven, hilly land this symmetrical form cannot be adopted, the authority quoted from suggests that the plan may be modified or varied to suit circumstances. For instance, if a hill is in the way of the farm road, it may be made to deviate and to pass around it, shaping the direction of the oblong fields accordingly; and a deep depression in the land may be avoided in a similar way, or by turning to the right or left and securing a moderate grade.

Permanent Pastures.

Numbered with the many excellent papers read at the New York institute's meetings this winter was one by Mr. Gold, of Connecticut, on "Treatment of Permanent Pastures." In this paper Mr. Gold called attention to the important fact that land in which pasture grasses fed, whether closely or otherwise, has much to do with their permanency in value. It is possible to feed a pasture so closely as to dwarf the grass roots and kill the large growing species. Too light stocking favors the growth of coarse and useless vegetation, choking out sweeter and richer grasses. Dairy cows, unless fed some grain, impoverish pasture more than young stock or fattening animals. The fields are apt to be too fresh in June and too bare in August. Rather than these extremes, feed some grain or sowed corn in the scant season and do not allow pastures to run too sod in June. Pasture is often benefited by a change of the live stock kept upon it. Sheep will eat and destroy the white daisy and wild carrot. The tread of sheep has a marvelous influence on the physical condition of certain light lands. Horses may be profitably changed around with cattle consuming much rank growth that is refused by neat stock. Young cattle may be advantageously pastured in connection with dairy cows, which have a habit of injuring their time about the entrance to the pasture. It is well to have trees in the more elevated parts, that in escaping the animals to leave their droppings where they are most needed.

For a real permanent pasture we must cherish and retain the very best grasses that are fitted to the soil, the climate and the treatment our pastures receive. Sometimes plowing and reseeding is the only resort. But consider other remedies first. Cut the bushes, trees and destroy such weeds as can be handled without plowing. Drain and irrigate. Dress with lime or ashes, and do not expect very sudden improvement.

Flower Seeds.

A very common mistake in sowing flower seeds, as well as other seeds, is in covering too deep. As a general rule, cover only to the depth of the thickness of the seeds, or with medium sized seeds like balsams, zinnias, etc., a half an inch or so is none too much. Such fine seeds as portulaca need only to be pressed into the soil with a piece of wood, or the palm of the hand. Always press the earth down firmly after sowing all flower seeds, else there is danger of their drying up before the roots can get a firm hold of the soil. Seeds of the hardier annuals may be sown where these are to grow, but, as a rule, it is preferable to transplant, as the plants are generally stronger and stand the drought better. During very dry weather, and when the seedlings are first set out, they should be watered frequently. Provide some support for all such annuals as require it, or the plants will become weak and straggling and do not make the show they otherwise would. The weeds should be kept down and the ground loosened often, so that the plants will receive the full benefit of the rains and dews, which they will not if the ground is allowed to become hard and baked.

The Currant Worm.

The best known remedy for the currant worm, which infests both currant and gooseberry bushes, is white hellebore. Now white hellebore is an altogether different drug from black hellebore, so remember and use the former. The cheapest and easiest mode of application is to mix the hellebore in water. Place a heaping tablespoonful of the powder in a dish, add gradually a quart of boiling water, stirring all the while to make certain that the hellebore is thoroughly saturated. Turn this mixture into a pailful of cold water, stir well and apply with a garden syringe or ordinary watering pot. The object is to wet every leaf; make two applications, a few days apart. While white hellebore is poisonous there is little or no danger from its use, as above directed. The chances are that before the fruit is ripe enough to eat the rains will have washed off all traces of the hellebore, and should any remain on the clusters the fruit will present a soiled appearance and be rejected in consequence.

The Grasses.

The grasses, for convenience, may be ranged in two general divisions. The first division comprises all the true grasses or plants with long, simple, narrow leaves and a long sheath divided to the base which seems to clasp the stem; or, rather, through which the stem appears to pass. The artificial grasses are mostly ligneous plants with a few stems which are cultivated and used like the grasses, although they do not properly belong to that family. The clovers of all the varieties, the alfalfa, etc., belong to this latter class.

In general, grasses ought to be cut not long after the time of flowering, for although there is a great deal of nourishment in the ripe seed, it is hardly enough to make up for the loss in the stalks and leaves, which are most valuable before the soluble materials, such as starch, gum and sugar, are gradually changed into woody fiber.

Fertilizing Corn.

The injury often done to the germ of the seed corn comes from contact with manure applied at planting time. Decomposed stable manure or well rotted compost will not generally do harm. Cotton seed meal seems to be very hurtful to small seeds, as we have learned at some cost in our gardening operations. In applying all concentrated manures, it is generally best to drop a little on each side of the seed corn as planted, not nearer than two or three inches. We prefer always to apply, at least, some portion of the fertilizer at the time of depositing the seed corn, and very close at hand, so that the young plant may be supplied at once with nutritious and soluble food, and pushed into vigorous growth from the very beginning.—Southern Cultivator.

A New French Canna.

Among new things in the floral line is "Gen. Boulanger," a French canna.

GEN. BOULANGER CANNA.

This new canna is pronounced by Peter Henderson as being the most distinct and beautiful of all the recent French varieties. Like most of this class it is dwarf, rarely exceeding four feet in height, but in profusion of bloom is said to be quite remarkable. The flowers resemble orchids; the general color is canary yellow, mottled and streaked with crimson and scarlet.

Facts Worth Knowing.

President Parker Earle's annual address before the American Horticultural society, at its last meeting, will be mailed to any address by all who send two cents in stamps for postage to the secretary, W. H. Ragan, Greencastle, Ind.

The Art Amateur makes the announcement to all lovers of flowers that "E. B. Sterns, botanist, 23 Union square, New York city, offers to name, without charge, plants in flower and ferns. Small plants entire, and pieces about one foot long of the larger ones, may be snugly folded in soft paper and sent by mail at a slight expense."

The observance of "Arbor day" is becoming popular. It is a good thing and ought to be encouraged.

The National exposition opens in Augusta, Ga., Oct. 10, and closes Nov. 3. Circulars can be obtained on written application to the secretary, Dr. J. H. Alexander.

It is told that President Head, of the International Range association, and others of the cattle trust, have made a contract with the French government to supply the French army with 150,000 cattle annually.

The American Magazine for May.

In the May number of the American Magazine there will be a remarkable discussion of a question of vital importance to every American citizen. Two years have passed since the brave policemen of Chicago were cruelly murdered by the Anarchists. Two years, and neither the United States nor any single state has enacted a law looking to the prevention of a recurrence of the horrible deed. The people seem seem to have settled into a sense of security and safety not warranted by the circumstances.

During these two years the Anarchists have not been idle. Secretly, stealthily, they have spread their pernicious doctrines, formed branches of their baneful order, and laid their plans with the utmost care to prevent another failure.

Their leaders are not ignorant men, they are fanatics, with brains—the most dangerous class in the community. Many of them are in the secret commission and are willing to die for victory. They have counted the cost, and will fire the mines they have laid under our cities, even if they themselves are involved in the common ruin.

In this article the infernal plottings of these men will be brought to light. Their schemes will be laid bare. The author with terse and powerful diction, describes scenes that will cause many a heart to throb and a blanch many a face.

He shows us that we are treading on a volcano whose hidden fires may at any moment break out and overwhelm us. He forces upon the reader a reality most awful to contemplate and too frightful to endure.

If not already too late, the author would by this article arouse in the public sentiment that will compel our rulers to make such laws as are needed for the protection of the country and its families, for the very existence of our social system. It is a powerful and timely argument, exposure and appeal. God grant it may not pass unheeded nor be too late to accomplish its object.

The author is a prominent army officer who is well known in literary, military and social circles, and many will recognize the writings of one whose pen is as powerful as his sword.

A Democratic Magazine.

Belford, Clarke & Co., New York, announce that in May they will issue the first number of a monthly magazine, to be devoted to politics, fiction, poetry, general literature, science and art. The new monthly will be under the editorial charge of Col. Don Piatt and in politics will be distinctly democratic. It will give independent support to the democratic party and the present administration. The department of fiction will be a special feature; a complete novel will be published in each issue. There will be no illustrations and the price will be 25 cents per copy.

The Round or "Official" Calling.

"I shall be glad when these foul fresh fool years are over," said the wife of an official in high position in the executive branch of the government to me, "and we can go back to our home in the country. I prefer a quiet, domestic life to all this round of official calling. Washington is not my home, and my interests are not here." In saying this she but uttered sentiments I have often heard others express. More than one of the president's official household came to Washington upon his request, feeling it to be a duty they owed to the administration and to the Democratic party. A well known commissioner at the head of one of the great departments in this city said to me a few days ago: "I should not hold my present position through another administration, no matter who is elected president. It doesn't pay. It is all of an annoyance. I cannot afford to stay. My private business is suffering, and I want to get home and attend to it. It isn't altogether fun, honor and a good time presiding over a department as cabinet officer or acting as the head of a bureau, or even as a chief clerk."—Washington Cor. New York Graphic.

They Know Ingalls.

A St. Joseph paper editorially announced Senator Ingalls as a candidate for the presidency. When a friend ordered him the paper, with a question or so on the subject, he replied that he was engaged at the extraordinarily low prices at which ladies' hose were delivered in St. Joseph—4 cents for stockings of extra length. He believes that the women of Missouri have no excuse for going barefooted when they can buy stockings at such prices." He stops at this point and signs himself 'your friend, John J. Ingalls' but the letter is clearly intended to be shown to husbands, fathers and brothers who vote and influence the vote of their kinsfolks in the reach of their wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts of the fact that Ingalls delegation to Chicago. Mr. Ingalls has no distance as a lover, or wooing, but they understand him out in Kansas.—St. Louis Republican.

Ohio Republicans Embarrassed.

The Republican managers in Ohio are in agony over their bankrupt state treasury. They cannot get permission to struggle with the problem by themselves. During the last state campaign this paper frequently pointed out that they had driven the state over the verge of bankruptcy, and they denied it as the wicked professed to be indignation, but was really a weak vituperation, more they openly confess the fact. They want the state to borrow $1,000,000 to meet current expenses. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Getting Badly Scared.

Some of the Republican organs seem to be sorely frightened at the alleged candidacy of Judge Gresham for the Republican presidential nomination. They are already striving to force him out of the race.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Fish City one of the oddest towns in the country, having no existence except in the winter. It is situated on Saginaw bay—not on the shore but literally on the bay—and is a collection of board shanties built upon the ice. This season it contained 1,000 houses, and 1,500 men. One of men who do the winter fishing for pike, pickerel, lake trout and whitefish, and he says that the ice forms on the bay their construction is begun. The fishermen live in their shanties all the time they are built until the breaking up of the ice in the spring forces them to abandon them. There is a door in each hut, and in the floor a trap-door 20 inches square. When this is raised a hole of the same size is discovered. At the side of this the fishermen sits all day and a great part of the night watching for his game, which he captures by a dexterous use of the trap. From 2,000,000 to 2,500,000 pounds of whitefish are caught from the bay each winter.

A sort of phenomenon was discovered in Harbor Springs while driving piles. The men had sunk a 20 pile, would rebound after going a certain depth. It even raised the huge hammer weighing seven tons. Thinks there was gas in the bowels of the earth there, the citizens proceeded to drive a pipe down to the other rebounding a depth of 75 or 80 feet it was found that they had struck a flowing vein of pure spring water, sparkling and bright, of sufficient volume to supply the whole town and therefore sufficient to distribute it in all parts of the village which will be of inestimable value, both for culinary purposes and for fire protection.

Every woman could find both pleasure and profit in reading The Woman's Magazine. A certain sense of hominess pervades its pages, a personality you do not often find. There is a wide range of subjects presented of practical interest to women. No number repeats any other. There is always something fresh and charming. And none more so than the Easter number now before us. We will not mar your pleasure by even a list of the contents, but when you have sent 10 cents to D. Lothrop Company, Franklin St. and Rollins St., Boston, Mass., and have it for your very own, you will say we told the simple truth. Prove us.

In Consumption Incurable.

Read the following: Mr. C. Hoffman, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with abcess of lungs, and pronounced by consumption incurable. Commenced using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made." Sold by druggists.

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had a cough that would not let me sleep. My Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by the doctors, am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at Dr. Crouter's drug store.

The New York Evening Post

WEEKLY EDITION.

In accordance with its traditional policy of opposing unjust and unnecessary tariff taxation, the New York Evening Post will begin about the first of May to issue a weekly edition in paper, having for its principal aim the presentation of the tariff question.

This question has become the paramount issue in national politics. The existence of an actual surplus in the treasury estimated to exceed $140,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1888, and the further accumulation of money at the rate of $100,000,000 a year, threatens business interests, and a direct incentive to wasteful and corrupt expenditure in the appropriations of public money.

We attention of the people having been strongly drawn to this subject by President Cleveland in his last annual message, the most able, and the most decisive utterance on the dangerous condition of public affairs that has been increasingly felt in all parts of the country.

The Evening Post holds that the tariff should be reduced and reconstructed in order

(1.) To reduce the revenue to the needs of the people needless burdens on the necessaries of life and on the materials of our manufactures.

(2.) To remove the artificial stimulus to growth of our manufactures, which restrict our foreign trade, and which put them out from the markets of the world.

(3.) To remove the artificial obstructions to the free exchange of commodities, which restrict the free exchange of commodities between the people of this country and those of other countries.

(4.) To remove the causes of social discontent, by trying to every man the whole of his earnings to the benefit of any other class to secure similar benefits.

(5.) To destroy the monopolies now multiplying all over the country under the name of Trusts, under shelter of the tariff.

(6.) To diminish the temptation to bribery and corrupt and labor free to seek their highest reward.

(7.) To remove from congress the corrupting influences of a never-ending scramble for favors and advantages, under the tariff, to particular classes, which can be given only at the expense of the rest of the community.

(8.) To expose the false and growling lies that the American people, with the richest land and the greatest natural resources that the sun shines upon, cannot earn their living without a tariff to tax the other half of them for them.

Careful attention will be given to the news of the day throughout the world, but the intention is to make a first-class weekly paper with the special purpose of emancipating American industry and the American people from unnecessary taxation.

The subscription price of the weekly Evening Post will be one dollar per year; as it will be furnished only to those who shall by their subscriber remitting that amount before July 1, 1888, in advance, no per cent will be allowed on clubs of 50 or more. Sample copy sent to any address on request. Address,

POLITICAL NOTES AND NEWS.

Most of the republican delegates who went to Grand Rapids shouted for Alger because they thought they must, but to their friends the wind was expressed that Blains would be the next candidate. So far no other state has expressed a first choice for Alger.

The Chicago Herald completed its seventh year May 10th. The Herald is without exception the handsomest daily paper in this country, and the conservatism in its editorial and business management has given it an enviable standing among the readers and advertisers of the northwest. We can recommend the Herald to all who want a first-class daily newspaper.

The Lansing city council is a fine specimen of democratic rule and has the casting vote. On the night for the election of subordinate city officers one republican purposely absented himself, and as the charter calls for a full board at the night of election, the absence caused a deadlock in the proceedings from 8.00 in the evening until the next afternoon, the democrats remaining in their seats until the marshal could find the absent member. After his "resurrection" a full set of democratic officers were elected.

One democrat, so far, has made a speech against the Mills tariff bill—Foran of Ohio. He declares his dissent from the spirit and purpose of the bill and denied that it was such a measure as demanded the united support of the representatives of the party. It would prove destructive to the prosperity of the country. One republican has spoken in favor of the bill—Nelson, of Minnesota. He denounces the protection system and the present tariff because while it enriched the few it prevented the expansion of our industries and because it was especially unjust to the agricultural interest. Mr. Foran is from an Ohio district which is interested in manufacturing and wool raising, while Mr. Nelson represents an agricultural district, where the farmers believe that free salt, lumber and wool will be about the best thing for them. The views of such representatives contained by the whims of their constituents.

Inspiration of the Moment.

As I was about to have put pen on paper I am reminded of a story I heard of a celebrated orator and his inspiration. He was asked what plan he adopted in preparing his speeches. He replied: "I have a very excellent one always, and always mean to follow it, but the red in this document, and I have just to let the boys loose on them, with the advice to do their worst, and I do it is with myself. I have an exalted idea of the ability of the gentlemen I have prepared, and I intend always to do my best to live up to the reputation I have chosen for myself." Inspiration is a gift

TERRIBLE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

Seven Persons Perish by the Explosion of a Car-load of Dynamite.

A CAR-LOAD of dynamite and one of giant powder blew up a train of freight-cars at Leacock, Pa., causing the loss of seven lives and injuring about twenty-five persons, three of whom will die. Twenty-one houses were demolished and glass was shattered for miles around. The scene presented an appalling sight, the debris of the freight-cars and the houses, together with here and there little heaps of ashes and charred remains of the dead, disclosing a frightful picture. So great was the upward force of the exploding powder that the wheels and axles of the cars were thrown a distance of two hundred yards, and one axle fell through the roof of one of the houses on the lower street on the hill above. Traces of the debris may be found a quarter of a mile away. One of the train men was blown several rods, but was not badly injured. Loss, $75,000.

TWO-POUND HAILSTONES.

Many People Killed and Injured by Their Fall in India.

DISPATCHES from India announce that Delhi and Moradabad had been visited by disastrous hail-storms, about 150 persons having been killed. The hailstones were flat and oval in shape and some of them weighed as much as two pounds. At Jacobabad, in Bengal, twenty persons were killed, 300 severely injured and 2,000 houses were destroyed by hailstones.

Base-Ball Record.

THE national game has been fairly launched for the present season. Popular interest has by no means abated, and every indication points to a most successful season. The following table shows the standing of Monday of the clubs of the four leagues in which Western readers are interested:

League.	Won.	Lost.	American.	Won.	Lost.
Chicago	11	2	Cincinnati	12	4
Boston	8	3	Louisville	11	4
New York	8	4	Brooklyn	11	5

Flashes from the Cable.

MR. PENDLETON, the United States Minister to Berlin, has fully recovered.

THE league branches of Limerick, Ireland, have condemned the papal rescript.

A WAX figure of Gen. Boulanger in a shop window in Berlin attracts constant attention from crowds.

VICTORIAN SARDOU, the dramatist, in an interview said he thought the French Republic would soon be broken up.

ERICSSON are the Russian has three corps of soldiers upon her western frontier. Opinion in London is that Russia intends showing an aggressive eastern policy.

Condensed Dispatches.

WILLIAM McCOY, on trial at Wilkesbarre, Pa., for the murder of Thomas Brennan, has been found guilty of murder in the second degree.

DUNCAN McDONALD, of Cape Breton, the last known survivor of the battle of Waterloo, in which he fought under Wellington, has died and is buried at Sydney, in the province of Nova Scotia in 1853.

AN expense package containing $41,001 in currency, shipped by the American Exchange Bank of New York to the Treasury in Washington, was found to have been strangely converted into brown paper by the time it reached its destination.

JOHN DEAN was murdered at Helena, M. T., in 1870. His slayer has remained undiscovered. Mrs. M. A. Eckert, an old resident, died recently, and before her demise confessed to her nurse how the crime was committed.

THEY ALMOST FOUGHT.

Congressmen Brumm and Bryce Nearly Come to Blows in the House.

THERE was a scene of excitement in the House on the 5th inst., after Mr. Woodburn, of Nebraska, had closed his remarks on the tariff bill. He had incidentally recorded that Lynch in Pitt street, New York, had appointed to the British minister for having entertained the Prince of Wales, and had referred to Congress in regard to the judicial murder of an American citizen in England. Mr. Brumm, of Pennsylvania, followed at Woodburn, said the statement as to Hewitt was false, and Lynch was a man who was well known to most members of the House. Mr. Bryce, gesticulating wildly, shouted that it was a lie, and he was prepared to do anything on the Republican side rose to his feet, and Mr. Brumm (Democrat) Pennsylvania, was loudly called to order. Bryce at first was inclined to be pacific, but changed his mind when he saw the excitement he had created. Brumm, in his place at Bryce, said Hewitt acknowledged the lady to be one of his friends and apologized for it. He said that if Bryce desired it he said he would go to the cloak room with him and be ready to answer to his call whenever the two could be standing within arms length and shaking hands. Bryce said he was satisfied and was so polite that they would come to blows. Mr. Cox, the Speaker, said the House of Representatives would not be a place for a duel, and he was sorry that such a thing had occurred. Bryce and Brumm parted on this friendly footing.

FIRE at San Diego, Cal., destroyed the stores of S. G. Hopkins, hardware; Charles Hamilton, groceries, agricultural implements, etc., and Frederick Hamilton, hardware, and slightly damaged other stores. The total loss was $150,000; total insurance, $85,000.

TREASURY CLERKS were on the rack on Monday, the 5th ult., the name of Melville W. Fuller, of Illinois, to be Chief Justice of the United States Supreme court, the Washington special to the Chicago Inter Ocean says:

When the nomination reached the Senate, by a singular coincidence, Minister Pirlo and Senator Gray were sitting together on one of the sofas. The nomination was immediately made the subject of general whispered comment throughout the Senate. Mr. Pirlo was the nominee's most ardent friend and most earnest advocate from every standpoint. Mr. Fuller's qualifications and fitness were urged upon the Republican side of the chamber, while the political friends of Mr. Gray urged the selection of Minister Pirlo. Mr. Gray and Mr. Pirlo are both of Chief Justice as a political office from Mr. Cleveland, but he has been twice offered it at different times by the President of the United States, and has declined it. Mr. Pirlo is a member of the Commission of Public Buildings, all of which he declined. It is understood that he and Senator Gray worked together not talking seriously.

THE EASTERN STATES.

THE New York Commandery of the Loyal Legion elected Gen. Schofield Commander.

THE Massachusetts Supreme Court has denied a rehearing of the case of Mrs. Sarah J. Robinson, who in November pounced on the head of the murder of Arthur Freeman, for her divorce law. This means that Mrs. Robinson must hang unless the Governor and Council commute the sentence to imprisonment.

THE experience of the New York elevated railroads as defendants in damage suits emphasizes the importance of securing right of way either by purchase, lease, or condemnation proceedings. Large sums of money are being quietly paid out by the Manhattan people in settlement of claims, as recent decisions of the courts establish the fact that damages can be collected for loss of rental buildings in the past and in the future, and for all damage to the property itself, besides punitive damages for trespass in the original invasion of the streets.

THE strike at the Edgar Thompson Steel Works at Braddock, Pa., has been declared off by the Knights of Labor.

THE WESTERN STATES.

WILLIAM GARLAND, of Lafayette, Ind., one of the oldest hardware merchants in that State, has made an assignment. His assets are $7,000; liabilities unknown.

A STORM of wind struck the little village of Lacona, in Warren County, Iowa, demolishing a two-story building used as a store and burying in the ruins a farmer—Leonard Wilson. He was dead when taken from the ruins. Two other men were slightly injured. Several buildings were unroofed.

A CHARTER has been filed at Topeka, Kan., for "The Farmers' Federation of the Mississippi Valley," the farmers' trust. The capital stock is $20,000,000, with shares at $10 each. The charter is signed by citizens in fourteen States and five Territories.

HOOVER & ALLENCY, merchants of Youngstown, Ohio, have failed, with liabilities of $300,000 and assets of $200,000. The Second National Bank of the same place, which held considerable of the paper, was forced to suspend.

ALBAN O. MYERS has been committed at Columbus, Ohio, for contempt of court in publishing objectionable articles during the railway street forgery case. He was fined $500 and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. An appeal was taken.

ON the farm of the Widow Freers, near Arlington, Neb., occurred a horrible catastrophe. Fire broke out in the barn, and when citizens reached the spot two hours later they found in the ruins the charred remains of seven human beings, distributed among the burned carcasses of the live stock. The entire family, consisting of four adults and three children, has been burned to death, probably in the attempt to rescue the cattle from the burning stable.

FIRE destroyed the Los Angeles Cal., Cracker Company's block and one dwelling, causing a loss of $65,000, with but $16,000 insurance. John Schultz, a watchman, is supposed to have perished in the flames.

AT Lacrosse, Ind., in the trial of Henry Augustine for the murder of Samuel Brown, one of the jury became insane, flaxy up the two fellow-jurymen were going to murder him, and not improving, the Judge dismissed the jury.

FIRE at San Diego, Cal., destroyed the stores of S. G. Hopkins, hardware; Charles Hamilton, groceries, agricultural implements, etc., and Frederick Hamilton, hardware, and slightly damaged other stores. The total loss was $150,000; total insurance, $85,000.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

AT Summerville, Ga., Henry Pope, colored, who was to have been legally executed, but had been reprieved by the Governor, was taken from the jail and hung by a mob, regardless of the respite.

GEORGE MOORE, a tiller, shot and killed a deputy marshal at Warner, Alabama. Officers from Jacksonville, received Monday in the caboose of a freight train, with the intention of taking him to Birmingham, the caboose was detached and the prisoner taken out and hanged and riddled with bullets.

A CYCLONE passed over the eastern portion of Ouachita County, Arkansas. It struck Joseph Herron's place, wrecked his house, and destroyed his fencing, but no lives were lost. The storm traveled from the southeast to the northwest, and its track was about 150 yards wide. Trees were twisted and torn from their roots and buried almost like straws. Damage is also reported at S. Blake's and other places in the neighborhood.

JOHN L. BLACK and Samuel Black, brothers, who went from Alabama nearly thirty years ago to Nevada, and had acquired a large amount of real estate in Virginia City, had a quarrel which resulted in the death of the former. Two shots rang out in a building which the brothers owned, and then Samuel came staggering from the house with an iron wrench in his hand, went to the Sheriff's office and surrendered. His brother's body was found in the house with the front part of the skull broken and with a bullet wound. Samuel claims that he killed his brother in self-defense.

AT New Orleans, C. W. Moore, President of the spurious "Honduras Mining Company," H. Y. Mulles, Vice President; and J. W. Quary, the Secretary and Treasurer, were indicted by the United States Grand Jury for devising a scheme to defraud.

THE FOREIGN BUDGET.

THE Chinese are not wanted in Australia. The Governor of Melbourne has called on the landing of 268 immigrants brought from Hong Kong.

AT Loughrea, Ireland, William O'Brien, member of Parliament and editor of United Ireland of Dublin, was convicted and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. Mr. O'Brien appeal from the sentence. The offenses act by advising the people in a proclamation issued by the Irish National Land League, which proclaimed the most brilliant abuse of the Land Act, and the most personal feeling entertained for Mr. Fuller as lawyer and his ability to do the work of the Democrats or Republicans.

How Mr. Fuller Received the News.

(From the Chicago Times.)

"I didn't expect it, and I didn't want it, I am so surprised that I can't think of anything to say. What it means to my partner, I can't tell, but it means the place, and I didn't believe all the Democrats in the Pacific Railway Commission would be willing to see me appointed." Thus spoke Mr. Fuller, the Democrat, who was appointed Chief Justice of the United States Supreme court, to a reporter of the Times. "The chief justice's salary is $10,000 a year, I believe, I don't know." Mr. Fuller's law partner, Mr. Gray, said:

"I am not a Democrat, or any Democrat in office," replied Mr. Farwell, "but I will tell you what I think. If you will consider I believe it will get every Republican Senator to vote for it. Fuller is a Democrat, but he is a lawyer, and he is a gentleman. He is a lawyer and gentleman of the highest character. I know him well. I know his ability, and I know that he will give our Supreme court a good name. I know that he will give the Republicans no cause to be ashamed." Asked what the president would do for Democrats if he should do this, Mr. Farwell said: "I don't know what he will do, but I know he will do what is right." Asked if he would be in favor of the appointment of a Democrat, Mr. Farwell said: "I am not a Democrat, but I know Fuller, every man of them, and I know that he will do what is right. He is a Democrat."

Mr. Farwell was asked if he thought that it was a wise thing for all the Democrats in the Senate to vote for any one, and he thought Mr. Farwell would have to endorse such a man.

Washington special to Chicago Tribune:

The Democrats that brought about Mr. Fuller's appointment were various. The immediate cause of the nomination was the Democratic caucus of last night, at which Mr. Fuller was endorsed without trouble. They did not go to Mr. Cleveland for the name, but they did represent that his name would be one that the Senate would confirm without trouble. They did not go to the White House, but they did represent that his name would be one that would be acceptable to other citizens of Illinois without distraction of factions. Mr. Cleveland was not in Washington when the caucus was held. The President is continuing Mr. Fuller. "Well," replied Senator Farwell and Cullom that he would be the White House to urge the President to appoint Fuller, "I don't know what he will do, but I know he will do what is right." Asked if

THE type-founders association recently raised the price of all kinds of type about twenty per cent.

TOWNS along the Mississippi river and its tributaries are flooded with high water, and great damage has been done to property.

HON. W. R. BURT of Saginaw is receiving a boom for the nomination as governor on the democratic ticket, and so far there appears no tangible opposition.

GEN. L. G. RUTHERFORD of Hart presided as chairman of the state convention at Grand Rapids, and during his short speech on taking the chair he suggested the name of John C. Black, commissioner of pensions, for second place on the national ticket.

THAT President Cleveland will have no opposition in the St. Louis convention is incontestibly shown by the enthusiasm with which the democrats are indorsing him at their local conventions. He is the "first, last and all time" choice of the party. Whatever feeling against him may have at one time existed among certain elements of the party has wholly disappeared.

Democratic State Convention.

Charlevoix county was represented at the convention at Grand Rapids last week by G. W. Crouter of Charlevoix; H. S. Newson, of Hayes; F. E. Boosinger, of East Jordan; and E. Shay, of Bay Springs.

Dr. Crouter was made chairman of the ninth district caucus, which met on Thursday morning, and nominated the following district vice-presidents, committee men, and delegates:

Vice President—Moses R. Dunning, of Manistee.

Member of committee on permanent organization—P. or Jackson, of Antrim.

Members of committee on credentials—C. J. Robinson, of Lake.

Member of committee on resolutions—L. N. Keating, of Mackinaw.

Delegates to St. Louis—A. V. Mann, of Muskegon, W. P. Nisbett, of Mecosta; alternates, Geo. Wilson, of Mason; Fred Judson, of Oceana.

Member of State Central Committee—R. R. Barker, of Manistee; L. J. Law, of Wexford.

At the convention Thursday afternoon, I. M. Weston of Grand Rapids, Geo. L. Yaple of Mendon, H. H. Chamberlain of Borrion, and Peter White of Marquette, were elected delegates at large; and R. A. Montgomery of Lansing, L.G. Rutherford of Hart, Frank A. Dean of Charlotte and I. C. Holden of Saginaw were successively elected alternate delegates at large.

The resolutions are quite long, and will probably be given in full on our ready-print next week.

The following is a full list of delegates and alternates as nominated in the several district caucuses, and approved by the convention:

First District—Edwin Haag, Rufus W. Gillett. Alternates—Frank E. Ashley, J. W. Fryer.

Second District—I. H. Salsbury, Lenawee. Chas. E. Wattson, Washtenaw. Alternates—Geo. W. Stimson, Monroe; C. P. Cook, Hillsdale.

Third District—John G. Parkhurst, Branch. Col. Hugh Riddle, Jackson. Alternates—R. J. Frost, Calhoun; A. D. Baughman, Eaton.

Fourth District—Harvey G. Sherwood, Berrien; W. G. Howard, Kalamazoo. Alternates—Frank W. Lyle, Allegan; Lester W. Baker, Van Buren.

Fifth District—Thomas F. McGarry, Ionia; Jas. Savidge, Ottawa. Alternates—Joseph Stevenson, Kent; J. C. Knapp, Allegan.

Sixth District—Byron G. Stout, Oakland; E. M. Wilsons, Livingston. Alternates—Josiah Buckbee, Genesee; W. M. Stevens, Ingham.

Seventh District—Alexander McAlpine, Saginaw; Fred W. Hubbard, Huron. Alternates—Abraham Smith, St. Clair; A. M. Clark, Sanilac.

Eighth District—Freeman Estey, Isabella; J. S. Crosby, Montcalm. Alternates—Jerome Turner, Shiawassee; Mason Anderson, Midland.

Ninth District—A. V. Mann, Muskegon; Wm. P. Nesbitt, Mecosta. Alternates—Geo. Wilson, Mason; Fred Nellson, Oceana.

Tenth District—Joseph Turner, Bay. J. Mann Pier, Crawford. Alternates—Judge W. H. Sharpless, Iosco; C. W. Perry, Clare.

Eleventh District—A. Finnigan, Missaukee; A. J. Scott, Houghton. Alternates—C. A. Parker, Ontonagon; Jas. Gallagher, Mackinac.

Youthful Political Ardor.

The great hope of the Republican party this year is a combination of standard oil, tin lamp, lampwick, and youthful enthusiasm. A tremendous importance is attached to the small boy and a torchlight. The Republican club idea castly has the call with the grand old party over all other campaign expedients

The result of the Republican club convention in New York some time ago was the formation of a great national league of Republican clubs, and since then the work of organization has been actively going on all over the country. A Mr. Foster, who fills the honorable position of president of this league, has just returned to New York from his "extensive tour of the west," and a Republican paper of that city notes with much satisfaction the success of his work. "Mr. Foster's opportunities for observation were unrivaled," and he reports "that the movement is making the most satisfactory progress." In all the cities that he visited he "found the same hopeful condition of things," and he believes that the number of clubs that will be organized for the coming campaign will greatly exceed the league's most fervid expectations.

There is a great deal of ardor in the young Republican. He is not crushed by defeat nor daunted by the gloomy hues of the Republican future. Even the teaching of observation that, in the event of party success, it is only the few gorgeous fellows who ride horseback and gallop fiercely up and down the line that get the offices, is no discouragement to his patriotic bosom. He is always ready to shoulder his torch and to walk, though the walking be bad, and to perform to the full extent of his lung power the required amount of hurrahing. The Republicans, no doubt, will turn out some tremendous processions. There will be a mighty rallying of the hosts, the streets will glow with burning kerosene, and the nights will resound with outbursts of enthusiasm.

But, although they may outdo all previous brilliant efforts of this kind, as evidently they are now bent on doing, will the Republican club idea elect a Republican president? The political power of illuminated standard oil, of the blare of brass bands, of flags and banners, and of noisy enthusiasm, it is feared, may be exhausted without achieving party success.

There is a quiet and sober after time in the somber days of November, when the grass is yellow and sere, when the dead leaves are falling, when the summer song bird has flown, and snow flakes are chasing each other in the chilly air, when the great issue is to be decided at the polls without these exciting accompaniments and without the aid of the myriad of youngsters under age who filled the torchlight processions and made most of the noise.—Chicago Herald.

Of Humble Origin.

The Democratic party can ask nothing better than a general adoption by Republicans of the tactics in favor with Ingalls, Dolliver, Foraker and other orators of the opposition. When these men sneer at the humble origin of Grover Cleveland they cast reproach upon the chief glory of American citizenship. Had his beginnings been much more obscure than they were there would have been nothing in the fact on which to base the contemptuous flings now so popular in some circles. The American roll of honor is a long one, but it contains the names of few men who at birth were not poor and apparently not in the line of fame or greatness.

As a matter of fact, however, Grover Cleveland was respectably born. He was reared in an honest, industrious and intelligent American family. He came on to manhood as hundreds of thousands of Americans have done, and went about his life work decently and quietly. When called to public place he discharged his duties with fidelity, and nothing in his career is more creditable to himself and to the American system than the fact that his promotion was so rapid as to excite the wrath of lifelong pretendants for place and pelf.

Grover Cleveland has never been investigated by congress. John James Ingalls cannot say as much.—Chicago Herald.

The Next Republican Defeat.

It will be interesting to watch the antics of Wm. B. Allison and John Sherman in the United States senate for the next few months. Both are presidential candidates and each has received the indorsement of his party in his state. Allison's is the most emphatic indorsement, as it is well known that whatever honor favors Iowa men receives are granted through the grace of Foraker. Allison has long been one of Blaine's pets, and if Blaine is not a candidate himself and desires the election of the next Republican candidate, it is not unlikely that his influence might be for Allison. But if Blaine is not the candidate himself he cannot afford to have any other Republican elected. Blaine cannot afford to let it go to history that he was defeated in 1884 and another Republican elected in 1888. Blaine must shift the blame from the candidate of 1884 to the party, and this can only be done by another Republican defeat in 1888.—St. Louis Republican.

Foraker's Little Boom.

All doubt about Governor Foraker being on presidential lists has been removed. Some of the newspaper men, scouting the battle, are reviving and elaborating the story of the governor's coffee sack breeches. If the governor should, unfortunately for him, be nominated for the presidency, the "Little Breeches" story will never die out. There will be times when he will want to join Tecumseh Sherman when that famous general prays for death while the band is playing "Marching Through Georgia."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Blaine's Shattered Health.

While Mr. Blaine may not be in a critical condition of health at present, it is evident that his physical powers have been so much impaired as to make him hesitate, at least, about accepting the severe strain of another presidential contest, and judging from the weight of testimony that comes from Americans abroad, it is reasonable to assume that his health is hopelessly shattered. — Philadelphia Times.

An Elephant on His Hands.

One thing that tends to reduce the Republican presidential booms to an equality is the pretty well assured fact that the successful boom will lead its possessor to disaster and defeat. The man who gets the Republican nomination this year will have something of an elephant on his hands.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

What They Want.

The Democrats of the country want a Democrat, and, if possible, they want to be sure of this, beyond the ruggedness of his Democracy.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Hon. James Birney, of Bay City died May 8th, after a week's illness with kidney and heart troubles, in his 70 years. He was a son of James G. Birney, who ran for president on the liberal ticket in 1840, getting 7,000 votes. The deceased had been a resident of the Saginaw valley since 1853, and was elected state senator in 1858, lieutenant governor in 1860, and then served as a circuit judge four years. In 1875 he went as United States minister to the Netherlands, returning in 1882, and had been practicing law since. He was president of the city board of education at the time of his death and he leaves two daughters.

Dr. M. E. Wadsworth, who was appointed state geologist by Gov. Luce, was born at Livermore Falls, Me., in 1847, and graduated from Bowdoin College. From 1872 to 1885 he was one of the instructors at Harvard and the Agassiz Museum. He received the degree of Ph. D. from Harvard in 1879. He has served on the geological surveys of several states, and has been engaged actively in the study of the mineral resources of Michigan. He is an author of advanced workers in petrography in this country, having published over eighty articles and works. He has traveled extensively in Europe, is now connected with the Houghton mining school, and is the intimate friend of the late State Geologist Wright, is peculiarly well adapted to carrying out the work now in hand.

Some people claim that the lowering of the water in the lake is caused by the local option law in the adjacent counties and the increased consumption of water in consequence.

Retired His Prospects.

Colonel D. R. Anthony, editor and principal proprietor of the Leavenworth Times, is the ultra anti-saloon candidate for the republican nomination for governor of Kansas and has been most bitter for years against those not in love with prohibition. Last night thieves broke into the cellar of his handsome house in Leavenworth and carried off the major portions of its contents. This morning he went below on business and discovered the raid and his wrath soon aroused the neighbors. Then it was learned for the first time that the stolen goods consisted of several hundred dollars' worth of the finest bottled wines, flasks of the choicest of whiskeys and brandies, and bottles of the best beer. The prohibition leader did not attempt to conceal his loss, and the matter soon became common gossip. It is likely to ruin the Colonel's chances for the gubernatorial nomination, before this most excellent body.

Who Favors Tariff Reform?

Who is that has cold chills for fear the tariff will be reduced. The workingman? The independent newspapers? The farmers? The business men? The people? Oh, no. The tariff league, a political organization owned by the iron and steel monopoly furnishes most of the printed matter against tariff reform, and such organs as the New York Tribune help on the work; the real newspapers are for reform. Look at the New York World, Herald, Evening Post, Sun, Times, and News; the Chicago Herald, Tribune, News, Globe; Cincinnati Inquirer, Boston Herald and Detroit Free Press and News. They are the recognized journals in existence and they are for tariff reduction.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Postmaster General Dickinson.

The Postmaster-General seems to be in full sympathy with the Boston and New York merchants who desire a better mail service between the two cities, and is doing all that he reasonably and properly can to forward the fast mail service. Postmaster-General Dickinson has made Postmaster Corse a very liberal allowance for clerical force, and the postmaster will be able to further improve the service. This new official at Washington is certainly acting as though he appreciated the existence and needs of Boston and New England.—Boston Globe.

THE PANAMA ABYSS.

A Crisis Near at Hand for M. De Lesseps' Gigantic Enterprise.

An Array of Financial Figures Large Enough to Stun an Ordinary Person.

Interview with the Chief Engineer of the Slaven Dredging Company.

He Asserts That the Work Can Be Done Only by American Men and Money.

It has cost some hundreds of millions of dollars to demonstrate to Count Ferdinand de Lesseps that stone has not the degree of permeability possessed by sand. It was no trick at all to dig a hole through the granulated plain of Suez; but canalizing the solid rocks of Panama is quite a different thing. This is at last admitted by De Lesseps, and he now proposes to change his work from a sea level to a lock canal. But will the undertaking, even in its new shape, ever be a success? Can its promoters ever raise the money same needed for its completion?

Le Genie Civil, the most prominent engineering periodical in France, has an article in a recent number on the subject of the proposed alteration in the plan of the canal. The statistics it presents must certainly startle the Gallic enthusiasts who have been inveigled into dumping money by the cart-load into a big ditch which promises to remain for all time "without form and void." Following is a synopsis of statements made by this French scientific authority, which, by the way, is not hostile to the enterprise:

"The five divisions into which the line of the canal at Panama is divided contained at the outset 125,000,000 cubic meters to be removed. The accomplishment, up to this time, has been as follows: In the first division, from Aspinwall westward, three-fifths of the excavation, and in the fifth division, from Panama eastward, one-third; and in the second and third divisions, from Tavernilla to Emperador, one-eighth each, and in the fourth division, La Culebra, two twenty-sevenths. Of the total accomplishment of 30,000,000 cubic meters out of the 125,000,000 to be extracted 10,000,000 come from the Atlantic and Pacific sections, where the earth is soft and the dredges encounter no serious obstacles. From the three central and difficult divisions 11,000,000 cubic meters have been extracted after seven years' operations, and out of a total of 95,000,000. Even if the substitution of a canal with locks should reduce the total remaining excavation in these sections to 40,000,000 cubic meters, as claimed by the company, it would require twenty-five years to complete the work at the same rate of progress. In the time even at the present rate, the aggregate interest on the existing debt, unencumbered, would amount to 500,000,000, and the world would have, for the requirements of its commerce, an incomplete canal, not more than fifteen feet in depth (4.57 meters), and burdened with debts exceeding $1,000,000,000."

The face of M. de Lesseps appears in the illustration accompanying this article, and beneath it yawns that fearful hole, the Panama Canal. The most daring of the world's engineers, it is mournfully appropriate that his greatness should be doomed to burial in the most stupendous work that man ever attempted. For it seems to-day absolutely certain that the canal will never be completed. The money expended to date—almost entirely from the people of France—amounts to 1,000,000,000 francs ($217,000,000) and nearly every franc has been expended. All except $18,000,000 paid for the railroad has gone into the abyss. To complete the excavation, the experts say, will require 800,000,000 francs more; to build the locks and fit up the ports 200,000,000 francs more; and to provide the necessary dams and reservoirs 200,000,000 francs more, making a total of $1,200,000,000 francs still to be raised and expended. But, estimating the time required to complete the work at five years, the company will have paid 65,000,000 francs of interest on its outlay at 6 per cent, which, at a total of 1,565,000,000 francs, will be added to the 1,000,000,000 already gone—an aggregate of 2,625,000,000 francs!

And even this is not all.

In order to raise 1,200,000,000 francs, the company has had to issue obligations amounting to 1,057,500,000 francs, and if the additional 1,065,000,000 required should be raised on similar terms, the total obligations would be 4,121,864,000 francs, or $817,725,500!

But this total, enormous as it is, is deduced in the main from the figures most recently stated by De Lesseps. Tested by results, his figures must be multiplied. His original estimate for the entire cost of the canal was $120,000,000, which he raised; after that, sum gave out, he increased his estimate to $214,000,000, then to $240,000,000, and finally to $300,000,000, where he stopped.

The two greatest obstacles to the work are the peculiar hill section of the isthmus called the Cuebra, which is formed of greasy clay that slides, and the Chagres River, which the canal crosses twenty-eight times, and which is often converted into a resistless torrent by the heavy rainfall. The deadly climate is another obstacle, but high wages have kept the force of man and officers at a total exceeding 11,000, the dead being rapidly replaced. It is here interesting to note that the principal hospital maintained by the company has cost over $830,000.

LETTER FROM ASPINWALL.

An Interview with One of the Contractors on the Great Ditch.

(From the Boston Globe.)

ASPINWALL, April 10.

The great question which interests everybody at Aspinwall, Panama, and all over the Isthmus, is the one in connection with the opening of the Panama Canal.

Count Ferdinand De Lesseps has named 1890 as the year when he intends to sail across his water route from ocean to ocean, but it is very doubtful whether Ferdinand believes in his prophecy.

M. Jacquier, Director General of the Panama Canal Company, stationed at Panama, declines to speak on the subject except when closely questioned by admiring Frenchmen, and then, of course he joins in and with enthusiasm shouts 1890.

M. St. Aune, chief engineer of the French company, however, does not agree with his superiors, and told me that he expected to be present at the ceremonies incident to the opening of the Panama Canal in 1893.

Frank Germann, Chief Engineer of the American Dredging Company (Slaven & Co.), goes still further, and states that the Panama Canal can never be a canal as long as De Lesseps and his associates are the recognized leaders of the great enterprise, but at the same time points out that the canal could be finished within four or five years from date if American engineers would undertake its management.

I asked Mr. Germann to give me his opinion as to the future of the Panama canal. He said:

"Nobody here who knows anything at all about the canal believes that the route will be opened to commerce in 1890, as De Lesseps has promised the stockholders of the company. For that matter, the canal is to-day just as far from being opened as it was two years ago. Our work here is progressing rapidly, and we intend to complete the same as required from us per contract this year. All there is left for us to do now is to excavate the portion you see here before you between the Dingler and the City of Paris, and then we will have to go over the entire route once more, commencing at Colon and working up to Bohio, in order to make the canal nine metres deep. The mean trouble with the enterprise lies in its management, and I am willing to say that De Lesseps will never finish the canal."

"Can the canal be finished at all?"

"Certainly. There is nothing on the whole route, no engineering difficulties so great that they could not be overcome. Let De Lesseps step out and a responsible business concern take charge of the work, and I can see no reason why this canal could not be completed within four or five years."

"All that is wanted down here now," said Mr. Germann, "is an American company with American capital at the head of the concern, and the Panama canal will be the great canal of the world. I know that De Lesseps himself is no engineer; he is a financier, and the old man would gladly give his last dollar to have this canal finished, yes, he would take the cost from his back if he thought that by doing so he would push the canal work along. But he is surrounded by a number of his officers who lead him on, and thereby enrich themselves, while at the same time they ruin the reputation of Count Ferdinand De Lesseps."

From personal observation, as well as good information obtained during my stay along the Isthmus of Panama, I have come to the conclusion that all the engineering difficulties can be overcome, and that the Panama canal could be finished within four or five years, provided the present management would step out and leave the finishing of the great water route to some good company.

GEO. C. RORDER.

BOULANGER.

Some Interesting Points Anent That Man on Horseback.

Those Who Come in Personal Contact with Him Charmed by His Manners.

It is curious to note the ceaseless interest with which the world follows French history and politics. Events in Paris echo round the world in a way commanded by no other capital in the metropolis. Mr. Frederic Harrison, who like all the Positivists, regards France with something like filial love, contrasted the commerce and the conquest in 1871; all eyes, he said, were fixed on Paris, none on Berlin; the vanquished was the object of attention, not the victor. It was quite true, but the inference he drew—the superiority of the French over the Germans—was not just. France is an interesting country because of its contrasts. It does by short leaps and bounds what in other lands is achieved after centuries, or at least generations, of growth and development. In 1789 France leaped from the England of the Tudors to a point far beyond the England of the Guelphs. The suddenness of the change was fascinating in itself. Principles of political liberty which had been taught soberly and cautiously in England, France leaped at in a century before were suddenly flashed upon Europe, was set at a twinkle in a language known by every aristocracy in every country; they were not new by a, but they were new to Italians, Germans, Spaniards and Danes. There is another cause for the attractiveness of Boulanger. Our minds are so constituted that we are arrayed against him. Cast from his military position, they thought he would drop into obscurity; but the people, encouraged by the Bonapartists, who see their opportunity in the foreign state of the nation, have showered honors upon him. With or without his candidacy votes are cast for him, wherever elections occur throughout the country.

Such popularity is without precedent. Boulanger seems practically the master of France. It remains to be seen what use he will make of his power.

Boulanger Opposes Aggression.

A recent cable dispatch from Paris says that "Gen. Boulanger has written a letter protesting against the warlike ideas that have been attributed to him. He wishes now to declare distinctly that Democratic France is maligned by being credited with the rights of aggression, to which it he has ever been, and still remains, resolutely opposed."

GILMORE.

Portrait and Sketch of the Great Band Leader.

Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore, probably the most renowned and certainly the most popular bandmaster in the United States, was born near Dublin, Ireland, Dec. 25, 1829. At the age of 15 he connected himself with military bands, and at once showed a remarkable talent and aptitude for the work. The youngster thought of that he was taken to Cork to join a well-drilled British band. After that engagement was at an end he went to Salem, Mass., and became leader of a band there. He soon found, however, that his talents demanded a wider field, and he went to Boston, Massachusetts, where he organized "Gilmore's Band," and made such a success therewith that he was enabled to make an extensive and successful tour of the cities of the country. In 1861 he accompanied the Twenty-fourth Massachusetts Regiment to the field, and in 1863 was placed in charge of all the bands in Louisiana by General Banks. He originated monster concerts in this country, and was the projector of the great "Peace Jubilee," held in Boston, in 1869-72, and published an account of the first thereof. This account was published at Boston in the year 1871. Seven years after the latter date he made a European tour with his band, and created quite a furor in the large cities there. He is now Bandmaster of the Twenty-second Regiment, National Guard of the State of New York. Bandmaster Gilmore has composed and revised many marches and songs, the most renowned being his American National Hymn.

An eminent English politician, who is his hostess to-day, sat to "Punch" for a marvelous personal popularity, and I think he deserves it. I have been a habit of putting up at this hotel for years, and of our country to-day, with enthusiasm. He was this popularity by his personal charm and manner of speaking.

"The best informed people think that he has not the remotest desire to make himself dictator or to make himself anything. Politics he does not understand in the least. But the great point of the popularity of these days of judging is this: He saw that what the French may need, was to be put in good heart, and to feel the old esprit de corps, which has been damped by a long, ingrate peace. For this reason he assumed all his style so generally—the black charger, the dashing way of prepaids pas, is serais un misérable."

tions the ladies whom Carlyle nicknamed "high-class unfortunates." She is always commanding indiscretions. In high social circles, the steady matron or the happy maid offers little to the pen of the poet, the novelist, or the dramatist; but when impulse, accident, or calamity drives a woman or girl from the circle and shelter of home, then her emotions, her adventures, her hopes of fleeting pleasure, her pinacos of pain, fascinate readers as they follow a Manon Lescaut, a Fantine, or a Sapho through their vicissitudes and sorrow. That is the character side of the "brave General, with tears to prove his every battle;" the "picturesque General, with scores of decorations on his breast;" the "persecuted General," reduced from active command because of dangerous popularity; the "people's General," so opposed to the Government of France, which he has defied and outfaced, Boulanger, the god of the masses, the idol of the people, the man for a revolution.

The Young Ruler of China.

The palace of the Emperor's palace at any European has ever seen of it since the days of Marco Polo—a fabul, a fairy palace. High walls shut in the forbidden city; a moat surrounds them; and then there are the glistening yellow tiles, the roofs built by the old Mongols in imitation of their tents. There is the green hill with its trees and the palace roofs shining up it. The entrances are of deep blue, bright green, golden-dragon-ed, with bars and there a touch of vermilion. The sky is blue above, the sun shines, and there in the roadway sits a child, stark naked, its face no dirty that it is impossible to see what it is like, its head misshapen with disease. No wonder the present Emperor never cares to come outside, and is supposed never to have done so. The world inside must be far more delightful, if it matches with those glittering fairy roofs. Report does not speak well of the young Emperor. He is described as unwilling to learn, sickly and froward—very ready to fling things at people's heads if displeased, and altogether cut out to commit some great folly if he ever becomes really the ruler of China. He receives the high officers of the empire kneeling on their knees, he sitting upon his throne, but he has a curtain site the reigning Empress, leaves all and really ruling China.

The Lazarist fathers and the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, who alone of Christian missions have for centuries posted under the Imperial walls, and who of late years built themselves a church to whose high towers the Emperor strongly objected, are now moving into other quarters; and it is said the Empress intends to bring the fathers' house, and to use the church as an audience hall in which to receive foreigners. If this report is good be true, Peking may shortly see great changes. She has particularly asked for the organ to be left, and the high towers, from which, if not as now walled up, you could inspect the palace garden. She says now that she has always been fortunate since they were built.

This little incident may perhaps illustrate the Chinese state of mind. The Chinese minister lately accredited to a leading European court was taking leave of a very eminent English man, and, pitying him that his wife had gone to England for the education of their children, said: "You must be very lonely. But, of course, you have a number two." "Number two! no, sir," said the Englishman, "that that was quite out of the question. My wife would be in a great rage if I took a second wife, and my government would punish me severely. The Chinese diplomatist was astonished, but after a pause he said: "You Europeans have so much more intercourse with China now that we may hope you will soon become sufficiently civilized to act as we do." In this spirit the Chinese diplomatist started for Europe, and in this spirit he will probably return.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A High Hat Story.

Interpreters are a probability of the future, if high hats continue to be worn at the theater.

There was a young woman at the theater one evening last week with a hat on like the leaning tower of Pisa. Behind her was another woman vainly trying to see the play. Every few moments this woman would nudge her husband and say:

"Harry, dear! what are they doing now?"

Harry dear, with set teeth: "They have just thrown Jack over the cliff down into a raging 900 feet deep."

A little grunt of satisfaction and sweet silence for several minutes.

"Harry, dear, have they found his body?"

"It didn't kill him, Goosie. They are trying it over again," answers Harry dear.

A succession of pistol shots, and Mrs. Harry dear leaned back that hat in front of her, but fails ignominiously to get either over or around it.

"Harry, dear what are they doing now?"

"They are throwing him down an old mining shaft. Now they set it on fire."

"Oh, how lovely! and I can see a single thing. What are they shouting for?"

"His sweetheart rescues him. She is lifting him out of the burning mine. He is saved."

More silence, and Mrs. Harry contemplates the back hair of the owner of Pisa. Then more silence.

"Harry, dear, what are they doing now?"

"It is a bar-room in a mining-camp. A fellow is just trying to sneak a drink."

A golden silence for a brief space, then:

"Harry, dear?"

"W-h-a-t?"

"Did he get it?—Detroit Free Press.

CONVINCING GUARANTEES.

Which Are Justified by a World-Wide Experience.

To the public:

Having branch houses and laboratories in seven different quarters, and therefore have the world-wide experience, we, H. H. Warner & Co., justly conceive in making the following statements:

First—For the past decade we have held the key of disease originate in that system, which introduces nine solid into the blood, circulates through every organ, attacking and destroying the very organs which are the weakest. We have also held that if the kidneys are kept in perfect health most of the ordinary ailments will be prevented, or, if contracted, quickly cured. Other practitioners have held that extreme kidney disease is incurable. We have proofs to the contrary, however, in hundreds of thousands of cases, in every section of the globe.

Second—The kidneys being the sewers of the system, it is impossible to keep the entire system in good working order without their healthy action. We have held that Most people do not believe their kidneys are out of order because they never give them any pain. It is a peculiarity of kidney disease that it may long exist without the knowledge of the patient or of the practitioner. It may be suspected if there is any gradual departure from ordinary health, which departure increases as age comes on.

THE influence of the moon upon vegetation is an interesting problem awaiting solution. A recent writer upon the subject mentions that wood-cutters in Cape Colony and in India insist that timber is full of sap and dried until to be cut at full moon. Another observation of lunar influence in Cape Colony is the rapid spoiling of meats and other provisions when exposed to moonlight, though this may be due to the fact that the light serves as a guide to insects.

FARM AND GARDEN.

OF INTEREST ALIKE TO MARKET GARDENERS AND FARMERS.

All About the Cabbage Caterpillar Worm and Butterfly, with Remedies for All the Different Worms That Infest Cabbage Plants.

The cabbage worm is a garden pest that makes the website felt in many sections of the country. There are several varieties of this pest. The one illustrated in the cut is numbered with the same number as. This species has a wide range, and about the last of May numerous specimens may be seen over cabbage, radish or turnip beds or patches of mustard, where on the under side of the leaves they deposit their eggs. In about ten days the caterpillars are hatched. In about three weeks more they have attained their full growth, which is about an inch and a half long. These worms, being green, are not readily distinguished from the leaves on which they live. They eat indiscriminately any part of the leaf.

CATERPILLAR WORM AND BUTTERFLY.

Of the numerous remedies that have been suggested and tried for the cabbage worm since it first began to spread over the country, none play have with our cabbage fields, few, if any, have given entire satisfaction. It is, however, safe to say that the most satisfactory remedy thus far discovered is in the use of pyrethrum. The general experience with this insecticide is most favorable, and as high authority as Professor Riley unhesitatingly recommends it for all the different worms affecting the leaves of our cabbage plants.

Some have found not water very effective on a large scale. Living plants will bear without injury, for a few seconds, water hot enough to kill soft bodied insects. The water should be at the temperature of about 160 degs. when it reaches the plants. It will cool somewhat during application, and allowance should be made for this. The pyrethrum is, however, advised, and there is no reason why every farmer should not use it, for it or buhach, which is practically the same, is now very generally for sale throughout the country.

One Way of Removing Fence Posts.

Prairie Farmer gives the following description, with illustration, of a simple device for pulling fence posts:

DEVICE FOR PULLING FENCE POSTS.

"Take a two by eight inch plank, four feet long, and a log chain. Set the plank on the ground at a slant of about 45 degs., with top end against the post; fasten the chain around the foot of the post, and hitch on the team over the top of the plank. Hitch on the team and see how easily they will pull out a post. To save time, I generally drive the wagon close to the row of posts, fastening the chain to the hind axle, close to the remail nearest to the posts, and haul them into the wagon as fast as pulled. I like the idea of farmers giving such simple ways of saving time."

TIMOTHY AND RED CLOVER.

Timely Hints About the Two Great Forage Crops of the Country.

Timothy is usually placed at the head of all the meadow plants for producing hay of the finest quality. It is perennial in character, and when well established lasts several years without the necessity of plowing up and reseeding. Timothy, however, is not a good pasture grass, from the fact that it will not bear close grazing as well as many others. Its chief excellence consists in its production of hay of the purest and finest quality for all general purposes, and especially for horses, in which it has no rival. Wherever timothy flourishes it is universally preferred for hay and sells for the highest price.

Timothy is best adapted to a partially moist peaty or clayey soil, and does not thrive so well on light, sandy lands. When sown alone half a bushel of seed to the acre is the rule; it may be sown in either spring or fall, but autumn sowing is the more common practice. It is advised to sow seed not more than one yard wide.

A good way to test the vitality of the seed is to sprinkle the seeds on a hot fire shovel, when, if it mostly burns up without a lively popping it should be rejected. Another good way to test not only timothy seed, but the seed of other grasses, is to sow a little in a box of fine earth and keep it warm and damp a few days until their character is determined. Growing the crop for its seed is quite common in the western states, and Chicago is the leading primary market.

Although red clover is not, strictly speaking, a grass, no true grass is entitled to a higher rank unless it be timothy; and, indeed, if we were wholly restricted to the use of only one of the two, it would be a difficult matter to say which the country could lost spare. The great value of clover as a manurial plant and renovator of worn out soils fully makes up for its efficiency is may have as hay for horses. For cattle, especially cows in milk, where its dusty character is not especially objectionable, it is usually preferred to timothy.

It is a common claim that there are more than 100 species of clover, but in this country only a few are cultivated, and of these the common red clover (trifolium pratense) is the species most generally in use, and for general purposes is the best of all. It is easily grown on every properly drained soil. Soils too much exhausted or too poor to afford clover its nutriment naturally, with the addition of a dressing of barnyard manure to give it a foot hold, will, by its persistent use, be brought up to a condition of fertility, beyond any that can be obtained from sowing any of the natural grasses.

In furnishing vegetable mold and changing hard, compact soils for the better, red clover is wholly unexcelled. It is one of the most important crops for soiling on account of its rapid, early growth and the large amount of excellent green food grown on an acre.

Care must be observed when pasturing red clover while wet with dew or rain, as cattle are likely to eat enough of it to cause bloating, which not unfrequently results in the death of the animal. It is, in fact, unsafe at any time to turn cattle when hungry into a large growth of clover and permit them to eat their fill. Of course when it has become partially cropped, and the cattl! are accustomed to it, they may be allowed to graze at will. Red clover is not really a pasture plant, and its best results are realized by soiling or cutting for hay and seed. A very usual plan is to sow clover in the spring, using from 12 to 20 pounds of seed to the acre, according as the soil may be loam or clay.

Clover ought to be cut as soon as the blossoms assume a brownish hue and the swath should lie until well wilted, when it must be turned over, but not scattered or spread, and when sufficiently dry be taken to the barn. Clover is more liable to be damaged by rain than is either timothy or red top, hence care should be observed to protect it from storms.

Half a bushel of salt to the ton of hay is often sown upon the mow, when clover is housed in a green state. Its proper place in the order of value as a farm product is generally thought to be between timothy and blue grass. Clover seed when kept undamaged will retain its vitality for many years.

Considered at a Farmer's Institute.

The black knot on cherry and plum trees was shown to be a fungus disease penetrating the bark. The only safe remedy is to cut it off and then rub the spot affected with turpentine. The tomato rot was also declared to be a fungus, the preventive being sulphur powder.

Col. F. D. Curtiss spoke upon pigs as a dairy and fruit farm necessity, and how to feed them lean. He advocated a radical change, and said it was a mistake to think it impossible to keep pigs without corn. Corn is the farmer's ideal of everything, and it is all wrong. Pigs ought to be fed but twice a day, to give time for rest and an opportunity for digestion. The food should be strongly impregnated with phosphate nitrogen. Feed them with meals, turn them into rye fields, put them in clover fields and apple orchards—that is nitrogenous food. Follow up with sweet cornstalks and sorghum. The best quality of pork is made out of apples alone. He pictured the difference between the effects of carbonaceous and nitrogenous food, and such a pig could be fed so long on corn as to be starved to death.

Dr. J. S. Woodward addressed the farmers upon "Nitrogen, Potash and Phosphoric Acid." He said the air was the great storehouse of nitrogen; another source was the coal fields. He described the ammoniacal liquor of the gas factories, and said it was one of the best forms of nitrogenous manure. Potash is found in plants in the mines of Germany. Phosphoric acid builds up the frames of animals, and is found in the bones of animals. It also exists in the slag of iron furnaces, in natural deposits in the south, along the St. Lawrence and in the Canadas.

The Yellow Transparent Apple.

In the following cut is represented the form of the yellow transparent apple, which is now considered by some of our leading pomologists as altogether desirable fruit, and one well adapted to a wide range of country. The general appearance of this apple resembles that of the Early Harvest; it is handsome and of good size.

YELLOW TRANSPARENT APPLE.

Mr. E. A. Riehl claims in Orchard and Garden that the yellow transparent apple "is entirely hardy, or to use his exact words, 'is tender both in summer and winter.' He has found it to bear young and almost overabundantly, and thinks it less subject to the attacks of the codling moth than some other sorts.

Agricultural Notes.

R. G. Head, president of the International Range association, disputes the report that the loss of range cattle the past winter reached 50 per cent. He asserts that cattle in Colorado, Texas, New Mexico, Indian territory, Wyoming and a portion of Arizona were never in better condition at this season of the year.

Col. Curtis avers that good pork, with fat and lean evenly distributed, can be made by feeding the pigs on turnips.

A bill has been introduced in the New York legislature fixing a bounty of two cents per head for English sparrows.

In the ordinary conditions of town work and stable management, it has been observed that the wall of a healthy foot grows down from the coronet at a rate of about one-quarter of an inch per month, and that the entire wall of a medium sized hoof has been regenerated in from nine to twelve months.

WHAT DEMOCRACY HAS DONE.

A Few Points Which Will Be Interesting to Democratic Readers.

A subscriber asks The Herald to narrate the benefits which the Democratic party, as an organization, has conferred upon the country. He is consistently importuned with this question by well meaning Republicans, who aver that the party saved the Union, and therefore ought to remain forever in the office of Commander of the public liberties. Through a popular error of immense retention in this hasty age, first principles, as in this case, are entirely lost to notice, and young Democrats come forward with the following a natural instinct, can yet advance no reason why any school or any order has given why they should vote against the Republican party.

The Democratic party exists, and has always existed, because this is a republic. The very spirit of free government is lodged in the arrangement that there shall be at least two great bodies of men, each striving for the honor of serving the state as trustee of the governing power. Without an opposition the government must centralize and become despotic, as under Napoleon, when the legislature and the tribunates were gradually merged into a Cæsar's senate. Because the Democratic party preserved its organization throughout the civil war, every Republican of today may be thankful he is not under a monarchy with all public documents written and all solemn acts done in the name of a son of some favorite leader of the northern idea—some son who today, thanks to the Democratic party, fills a mission in life which may be more humble, but better comports with the merits of the man and the happiness of the people.

The Democratic party in its best estimate has always been liberal in the idea that the people should have the highest practicable attainment of home rule; that government should meddle in the least possible way with private enterprise; that taxes should be used for economical governmental expenditure, and should be collected only for the money that government profit through the contributions of the inhabitants assessed. The party has adjudged that the officers of the government are the servants of the people, and that criticism and punishment of a derelict officer are the duties of the people of the electors. These ideas are Jeffersonian and Jacksonian. Through fidelity to them the non-military leaders of the northern opposition during the civil conflict were assigned, proscribed and imprisoned. In its struggle for self preservation the party was regarded even the basic idea that a political opposition could exist. Those Democrats who could see as Lincoln saw, enlisted—as Grant, Sherman, Hancock, Meade, Hancock, Thomas, Rosecrans, Logan. Those Democrats who were unable to see as Lincoln saw went to prison. The election of 1868 buried the Democratic party still in existence, though so weak as to exercise a conserving influence on free government. After four further years of Republican post bellum rule, dedicated to a further destruction of Democratic principles, the country beheld the lowest estate of the Democratic party, when confusion reached its meridian, when the aspiration of free and honest government treasured as the dying, and only schemes for the enlivenment of sons were politically respectable.

But all the leaders of the Democratic party in our time have sent to have false and perfidious. Out of the lease and mist of the scandals that overshadowed the celebrated second term there rose the figure of Samuel J. Tilden, whose warnings sounded to a stricken and humiliated people as the voice of a statesman to be trusted in a trying time. His cry was for a return to simple government by a conduction of war taxation, for a severe accountability in public offices.

To that brave outcry, at that crucial moment, between corruption and self government—the outcry which brought the nation to its senses—the country is indebted for its existence to-day, and indebted as much as to the act of the Grant, the Sherman, the Thomas, the Meade, Democratic soldier or the private Republican soldier, who held the state together a decade before. Because there was still a Democratic party, it was not possible for the "bosses," who had degraded every part of Republicanism, to wear a crown whipped from public place and the stewardship of the nation begun at a date, it may be, more remote than hoped.

Today The Herald's subscribers may still be the true Democratic picture of the recognized and only leader of his party, holding his personal opportunities as nothing, and pronouncing to a profligate legislature and to a country that, it must awaken or perish—pronouncing to the fearful and anger of all Republicans in authority, and to the inconvenience of distinguished statesmen, who ought to bear friendship rather than betrayal—pronouncing the gospel of free home rule in these memorable words in his message of Dec. 6, 1877:

"The strong and plain duty which we owe the people is to reduce taxation to the necessary expenses of an economical operation of the government, and to restore to the business of the country the money which we hold in the treasury through the perversion or governmental powers.—Chicago Herald."

Emperor William Never Smoked.

The late emperor of Germany never smoked, which was chiefly because the fact that his digestion was absolutely unimpaired; but whenever any of his officers dined or took supper with him he was wont, when the coffee was brought in, to ask: "Has any one of you gentlemen a cigarette to spare?" and selecting one from the cases eagerly proffered to him, to light it, to draw from it one puff of smoke, and then, let it go up as though inadvertently. Knowing full well that nine-tenths of his guests were confirmed smokers, precluded by etiquette from indulging in their favorite habit until the sample dinner was over, the kind-hearted sovereign, the emperor waived his own strong dislike to the smell of tobacco in order that they might not be balked of any accustomed pleasure at his table.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

The Population of Iowa.

Iowa lies as near as may be at the geographical center of the United States. As might be expected from this situation its population has been drawn from all directions. The census of 1885 shows that of 1,762,998 inhabitants more than one-half are born in the state. Of the 500,000 people who have emigrated to Iowa from other states, 20,000 were from New England, 160,000 in the middle states, 60,000 in the southern states, 240,000 in the other states east of the Mississippi and 20,000 in the western states and territories. Of the 270,000 foreign inhabitants of the state, Germany has sent much, 120,000, followed by Ireland, 42,000, and Norway, 27,000.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

POLITICAL NOTES AND NEWS.

Trusts and Pools.

Sir, let that deluded statesman, who believes that the high duties which we have thrown around our country can ever insure to the people low prices for commodities, behold the situation nigh. For years we have had these falls ringing with statements that by and by home competition would give us the lowest possible prices. The welkin has been made to ring with this declaration, iterated and reiterated, until even those who first proclaimed it have almost gotten to believe it. But look at our unfortunate situation and let this delusion be dispelled. While the government has thrown up its tariff walls without, monopolists have joined hands within for the purpose of putting up and plundering the people through the devices known as trusts, pools and combines. We have the steel rail trust, which cost the people of this country last year millions of dollars. It is not a trust to increase production, but to restrict it; it is not a trust to give cheaper commodities to the people, but to put bigger profits into the pockets of the monopolists. It has closed furnaces that were successfully running; it has aided by the tariff, increased by more than $1,000 the cost of every mile of railroad built in the United States for the last five years; it has thrown men out of employment and brought the wages of living of thousands of workingmen. Why, even the existence of this trust has been known, but listen to this quotation from The Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel association, a paper printed in the interests of the iron and steel producers of the United States, and at their cost.

"The tariff has strengthened our market for steel rails" we find the following:

"STEEL RAILS.

"One of the makers reports sales during the week aggregating 6,000 tons. Outside of this no transactions whatever are reported, and the market is extremely dull both east and west. The board of control has decided upon an increase in the allotment of 200,000 tons, which will relieve the pressure on some of the eastern mills."

It would seem from this very business like statement that the "board of control" is not misnamed, and absolutely controls the output of steel rails in this country. It determines when it shall be increased and when restricted, being carried only to sustain prices up to the cost of foreign goods with the duty added.—McMillin, of Tennessee, in the House Debate.

Stick to the Truth.

Our esteemed contemporary The Mail and Express commends The World's zeal in urging congress to reduce the revenue of a dangerous surplus, but it insists that this can only be done by abolishing the internal taxes.

We confess to surprise that our highly esteemed contemporary should favor so immoral and unjust a policy as that which would exempt whisky from taxation in order to perpetuate war taxes on the food, fuel, clothing and shelter of the people. It is bad enough to have internal taxes on liquors, with no religion to speak of, favor the abolishing of the taxes on clothing, sugar, salt, lumber, glass and crockery, but for a moral reform agent that heads its editorials with a text of Scripture, and "blows the silver trumpet," to advocate a system is quite startling.

A more scrupulous regard for what is known in secular and jocular circles as the truth would prevent such blunders as Brother Shepard. It is not in accordance with the truth to say that the Morrill bill is "a free trade" measure, or that it "may operate to increase the revenue." It will increase the revenue, but it will not be higher than it was under the Morrill tariff. The additional revenue this would surely cut off revenue. So would the reversal of the tariff on sugar. The repeal of the tobacco tax would increase the profits of the trust. It is a measure of revenue reduction and tariff reform as well.—New York World.

Protectionist Contradictions.

The laboring man's interest and the employer's interest are, in a certain sense, antagonistic. The laborer is desirous of receiving as high wages as possible, while the employer would like to have wages low; and the consumer wants to purchase the product as cheap as possible. Here we have the state of things when along comes an all wise congressman, and he proposes to make everything lovely. To the laboring man he says, "I will make your wages high." "What are you doing with me?" says the manufacturer. "Do not fear," he replies, "I will make wages low for you." "What!" exclaims the laboring man, "make wages low! Why, you just said you would make me wages high." "Yes, but listen to this quotation from The Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel association, a paper printed in the interests of the iron and steel producers of the United States, and at their cost.

SHERMAN'S INFLATED BOOM.

It is made of airy nothing

A Warm Summer Ahead.

The Courier-Journal wishes to put itself on record for once as a weather prophet, and here makes the prediction that we are going to have an unusually warm summer. There are more reasons than one for believing this, but one ought to be sufficient to convince those who are skeptical concerning weather lore that we do not speak at haphazard.

A few days ago there appeared in our esteemed Blaine contemporary, The New York Tribune, a dispatch saying that un less the Hon. John Sherman shall secure a united delegation to the Republican national convention from Ohio he will withdraw from the contest for the presidential nomination of his party. Of course, this was aimed on its face. Nobody who knows Mr Sherman credited it. Nobody acquainted with the situation in Ohio believed that he could get a united delegation from that state. Nobody who has watched the persistent elaborating which he has done for years in his efforts to secure the presidential nomination could have been convinced that anything short of death could cause him to withdraw as a candidate as long as he could see the remotest chance for his nomination. And so nobody, perhaps, was prepared for the entirely superfluous and uncharacteristically weak denial which Mr Sherman hastened to hurl at The Tribune, in which he actually grew so torrid as to brand the dispatch as "an unmitigated lie in substance and detail."

Now, we submit that when the Hon. John Sherman, of all men, begins to erupt in this incandescent style, before the spring has fairly opened, and while the frost is yet in the air, there is the best grounds for saying that the summer is going to be unusually warm, particularly for the Hon John Sherman.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

In Death's Last Agony.

As a drowning man, indeed, doth Red Republicanism catch at the straw of sectional agitation, while yet a little longer it bobs up and down amid the waves of public opinion. It reaches out blindly right and left, having lost all sight of the political bottom. Always a sentimentalist, its decay is marked by a rush of blood to the head, and very bad blood at that, such flabby and nawish fiction about the heart, which it mistakes for patriotism. Already the cold perspiration of death bespangles its brow, while the Rolls, the Ingalls and the Shermans run up and down the shores of the ocean which must soon hide it, beating the air and making the welkin ring with shrill hideous with their cries, and, in their frenzy, recalling those withered hags of years that little Patrick Henry thought he encountered on the blasted heath, but which, as we now know, merely got up for the occasion by a mean dress shifter of stage effect. In Shakespeare's world was the dreaming dream, however, they succeeded in imposing upon the superstition of a credulous soldier of fortune as their modern prototype, and that succeeded in imposing upon the credulity of the people of the United States. It really is a pitiful spectacle, and it will need no great stretch of imagination and journalism that they should imagine that they can.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

All Kinds on Hand.

The political situation appears to demand that Mr Blaine should be in perfect health, and he gives no country the strongest possible assurance that he feels like fighting cock. Some years ago the political situation demanded that Mr. Blaine's state of health should be truly pathetic, and he got up a sensational case of sunstroke to meet the occasion. Mr Blaine is always prepared to furnish health in every variety at the shortest notice, and the political situation can always get any kind of health from him that it calls for.—Chicago Herald.

Should Teach Them Two Things.

The state election in Louisiana and the municipal election in New Orleans on Tuesday convey a lesson which it would be well for the bloody shirt orators of the north to consider and digest. They ought to convince them that there is no hope whatever of their breaking the solid south so long as they direct their streams of bitterness and abuse into that quarter, and the other that efforts to overcome stand just as good a chance of success in the Democratic party as out of it.—Brooklyn Citizen.

In Its Last Throes.

When the Republican party of Ohio turns to such men as J. Warren Keifer, Charles N. Valiandigham, Sam Rowe and "Shorty" McDonald to lead it out of the wilderness it must be in a sad strait. There is no wonder decent men turn from the party of great "moral ideas." Their cup of sorrow is filled to overflowing.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Cold Comfort.

Ohio Republicans declare that John Sherman is their beloved son and choice for the president, but the indorsement is such a one as a snowball might be expected to extend to an icicle.—New York World.

Facts for Workingmen.

There is a tax on every pound of iron you buy and every yard of cloth you wear. This tax takes just so much money out of your pockets. It makes your wages just so much less IMPORTANT TO PATENTEES.

A Resolution Introduced in the Senate Contemplating Radical Changes.

A BILL introduced in the Senate of the United States, declaring that all patents granted are for the active use of the public, subject to the rights of the inventor, discoverer, or assignee, who shall receive the consideration for the use thereof, and must be put into active use. Failure to do so within five years from the date of issue shall be held to be an abandonment of it, and thereafter the article patented shall be public property, and the patent ipso facto void. Corporations and combinations for the control of articles patented are prohibited under the pain of a fine not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, and by imprisonment for not less than six months. The Attorney General is charged with the enforcement of the law, and proceedings are to be summary.

DESPERATE BANDITS.

They Attack a Western Passenger Train —A Lively Fusillade of Shots.

SIX train robbers, supposed to be Mexicans, attacked the south-bound Sonora train as it was slowing up at a small station called Adna Zaros, A. T. The robbers opened fire and killed Fireman Forbes and wounded several others, one of whom, Conductor Atkinson, has since died. Messenger Hay was badly wounded in the bowel and back and will die. Wells, Fargo & Co.'s box, containing about $164, was taken. The railway officials have offered a reward of $1,000 for the capture of the robbers.

ZEPHYR DAVIS.

He Is Executed in the Chicago Jail.

ZEPHYR DAVIS, the young colored man who murdered Maggie Gaughan, a working girl, several weeks ago, in Chicago, was hanged in that city. He admitted his guilt. His last words on the scaffold were, "I believe in God."

Floods in the Mississippi.

THE overflowing waters of the Mississippi River are doing great damage in the towns and farming lands along its banks. At Keokuk, Iowa, the river is destructively high; while at Alexandria, Mo., the town and adjacent country are submerged. Davenport, Iowa, Dubuque, Iowa, Quincy, Ill., Rock Island, Ill., Muscatine, Iowa, and Clinton, Iowa, are all suffering severely from the inundation. Floods are also reported from Des Moines, Iowa, Winona, Minn., and Burlington, Iowa.

The Moors Apologized.

A DISPATCH from Gibraltar concerning the settlement of the dispute between the United States and Morocco says: "After the withdrawal of the claims for a money indemnity an apology was tendered to the American Consul, and orders were given for the immediate release of the persons whose arrest gave rise to the trouble."

Steel Works Burn.

THE large brick building which contained the steel works and rolling mill of Dunham's extensive saw works at Tecony, Pa., was totally destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $300,000; insured for $100,000.

Sparks from the Wires.

MORE than 4,000 immigrants arrived in New York on Saturday from Europe.

TWO convicts escaped from Lake Fale, Minn., were poisoned to death by eating wild asparagus.

AFTER eating their fire, one of a party of trappers died of starvation. The party left Edmonton, N. W. T., last fall.

THE St. Louis Wire Mill Company, of St. Louis, filed a suit against the Washburn-Moen Company and others for $500,000.

The House Still Debating the Mills Bill.

THE tariff discussion was continued in the House on the 12th inst. Mr. Hangen, of Wisconsin, spoke in opposition to and Mason, of Tennessee, in favor of the Mills bill. The Ways and Means Committee had a conference, at which the Democrats consented to extend the tariff debate another week. They yielded to receive a considerable number of amendments, but both parties insisted that it should really be the beginning of the end. The members who had proposed amendments were anxious to insist upon their right to bring in the five-minute debate, if they could not deliver their speeches. The Senate bill granting the right of way through Indian Territory to the Southern Kansas, the Texas Railroad Company, passed the House, as did a bill for a bridge connecting the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North. The Senate was not in session.

THE EASTERN STATES.

GRANT & FOSTER, dry-goods dealers of Scranton, Pa., have assigned, with assets $30,000; liabilities, $80,000.

DAVID W. VICKERS and Robert G. Hall were hanged at Moyamensing Prison, Philadelphia. The former killed a sailor; while Hall in a fit of jealousy murdered his mistress. Mrs. Lillian Rivers, and then cut his own throat, but survived the wound. It is claimed that Vickers was insane.

NATHANIEL W. T. HAVOT of the banking and brokerage firm of Walter T. Hatch & Co., New York, dined at a public resort with the handsome wife of Charles W. Seofield, formerly a broker in good circumstances. After supper the woman invited Hatch to her apartments, but her husband became violent, and for a time Hatch was concealed in a room. His lady was found in the yard of the premises the following morning, and the coroner's jury rendered a verdict that he had been killed by falling from a window while trying to escape from Scofield. The police at first suspected that Scofield had thrown Hatch from the window. The victim was a married man 55 years of age. The affair produced a great sensation in New York.

AT Buffalo, N. Y., Hiram F. Everest and Charles M. Everest, of the Niagara Oil Company of Rochester, under conviction for conspiracy to injure trade and commerce by attempting to blow up the Buffalo Lubricating Oil Works in 1881, were fined $250 each by Judge Haight in the Supreme Court. H. F. Everest's fine was immediately paid.

THE eighth day of the Twenty-fifth General Conference of the Methodist Church opened at New York, with Bishop Mallalieu presiding. Dr. Wilder, of Illinois, offered a resolution calling for a general election in 1890 to settle the question in regard to the admission of women as delegates. The motion was voted down. The Rev. Dr. Gray, of Williamsport, Pa., offered a resolution providing that the Bishops shall be appointed to contiguous districts rather than to be sent, as now, to different parts of the country. After considerable discussion the resolution was referred to a special committee to consider.

ARTEN experimenting with imported preachers Plymouth Church has decided to fill the pulpit of the late Henry Ward Beecher with an American, Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, who for some time past has been serving with marked success as a temporary supply, has been chosen the permanent pastor of Plymouth Church, and has signified his intention of accepting.

THE high-license bill passed by the New York Legislature has been vetoed by Governor Hill.

AS SUCCESSORS to Dr. Moffatt (resigned), the Rev. George T. Purves, of Pittsburgh, has been elected to the chair of ecclesiastical history in Princeton Seminary.

JOSHUA COWLING'S will has been probated at Utica, N. Y. It bequeaths all his property to his wife and heirs, and making his wife sole executrix.

CYRENUS H. F. HOVEY, of the Willimantic (Conn.) Savings Institute, has been arrested on an indictment containing twenty-five counts, alleging misuse of deposits, false entries, the appropriation of $25,000, and the suppression of certain credit accounts. The loss to the bank has been paid from the reserve fund, and it is now asserted that the institution is sound.

HIRAM MUELLER, an unsuccessful stock broker, was found dead in bed at his home in Brooklyn, with a partially filled phial of morphine by his side. It is believed he committed suicide. Mueller's widow is a cousin of the executed murderer, August Spies.

AN explosion of natural gas in St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral at Buffalo caused a fire which speedily destroyed the building. The loss is about $250,000, while the insurance is less than $50,000. Many other churches in the city and for a time created consternation. Firemen and others were wounded, but none seriously.

IN the Methodist General Conference, at New York, the Rev. G. N. Powers, of Kentuck, Iowa, handed in a memorial on civil-service reform, demanding that the conference shall so legislate upon the selection of delegates as to restrict office-seeking and declaring that civil service reform is needed in church, as the tendency is toward office-seeking by members, who fail to the common level of politicians in seeking office. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Church and the Church.

THE Congregational Association of Ohio, which has just closed its session at Akron, passed resolutions severely censuring the policy of the Government in interfering with unseen vessels in the matter of teaching Indians in the vernacular, and indicating an intention to apply to the Supreme Court for an injunction in case the interference continues.

THE Missouri Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the lower court in the case of Henry Lindgraf, convicted of murdering his sweetheart March 5, 1885, and sentenced to be hanged June 22.

THE Wholesale commission house of William T. Coleman & Co. has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, says a San Francisco telegram.

FRANK S. Johnson, managing partner of the firm of Johnson, Lathrop & Company, failed, the firm was unable to realize upon assets sufficient to meet the demands of creditors. Johnson's friends say the evil operations of his partner was urgent, they had decided to make an assignment in order to protect the creditors of their property. Johnson places his assets at $100,000 and the liabilities at $200,000, the liabilities in California, with the exception of a number of small amounts, is confined to two individuals and the following banks: Bank of California, the bulk of which $600,000 is secured; Bank of British Columbia, $100,000; Bank of Montreal, $100,000; the Bank of British North America, $100,000.

THE time has been when a broken neck meant instant death; but a young Englishman, Reginald Ford, at Sioux City, Iowa, who was thrown from a vehicle and dislocated his neck, had his vertebra pushed into place by a man who came to his assistance, and if he escapes death from concussion of the brain he can stand up in the dime museum and show one as one of the very few persons who ever had their necks broken and lived to tell how it was done.

PATCH of the insel cent house of William T. Coleman & Co., of San Francisco, to the extent of $900,000 is held in the East and South.

AT Watertown, Wis., Mrs. A. Schinke, aged 66, and the mother of eight children, committed suicide by hanging herself.

THE Illinois Supreme Court has affirmed the judgment and sentence of the Chicago Criminal Court in the boodler cases. This sends ex-County Commissioners Van Pelt, Leyden, Orba and Wasserman and ex-Warden Varnell to the State Penitentiary, where their criminal associates, ex-Commissioners Weis and McClaughry, are already serving their sentence of two years. Ex-Warden McGrath, another of the gang, is an exile in Canada. In the case of Ed McDonald, another of the gang, the Supreme Court has yet to take a hand.

AT Des Moines, Iowa, William E. Shaffer, aged 27, son of John R. Shaffer, Secretary of the Iowa State Senate, committed suicide by shooting. Despondency is the cause assigned.

COMMODORE RITTSON, of St. Paul, one of the most prominent business men of the Northwest, dropped dead in the dining-car of a train between Chicago and Harvard, Ill. He was on his way home from his stock farm near Philadelphia. Mr. Rittson had just ordered his supper, and was preparing to eat when he expired. He was born in Canada in 1834, and had lived in St. Paul since 1854. He had acquired a large fortune, and was the owner of one of the finest horse-breeding establishments in the country, which cost about $1,000,000.

MICHIGAN DEMOCRATS.

They Indorse Cleveland, as Do Conventions Held in Several Other States.

A Criticising Resolution Promptly Tabled in the Tennessee Convention —Political Notes.

The Michigan Democratic Convention assembled at Grand Rapids, and was called to order by Chairman West of the State Central Committee. L. G. Rutherford, of Paw Paw, was the Michigan representative of the Democratic National Committee. The usual committees were appointed, and Hon. Don M. Dickinson was continued as permanent Chairman. Several speeches were made, and the name of Cleveland's name was loudly cheered. The interest taken in the convention was heightened by the factional fight between the Stephenson and Stone factions, the selection of ex-Mayor Chamberlain, of Detroit, as a delegate-at-large, John J. M. Weston, of Grand Rapids, and George L. Yaple, of Manistee, had been chosen delegates-at-large by acclamation, and half a dozen other names were made for the two remaining nominations. Among the names presented were those of Chamberlain and Peter Dale Ball of Marquette. The latter gentleman succeeded one delegate, and Wells was then chosen by acclamation on the last ballot by the Stone and other district delegates were instructed to vote for Edmund Haug and Rufus W. Gillett of Detroit.

Charles B. Wickham and J. H. Salisbury, of Ann Arbor, were chosen delegates-at-large, and Charles Kiefer, of Saginaw, and Richard Albrecht, of Frost and A. D. Baughman, of Ionia, were chosen by acclamation. Albert Albrecht, F. W. Lyle and W. T. McGeary, of Marquette, were chosen by acclamation. Joseph Hill was chosen by acclamation.

Will the friends of the JOURNAL give us a lift now?

THE St. Ignace Republican says the "appointment of Hon. Peter White, of Marquette, on the board of visitors to the West Point military academy, is an excellent one."

THE Cheboygan Democrat makes a this timely observation: "Six thousand immigrants landed at Castle Garden last Friday, and not a cent of duty was collected from any of them. Protection for labor."

SPEAKER CARLISLE made the closing speech in the tariff debate last Saturday, and it is conceded on all sides that he made made many friends for himself and many converts to tariff reform by the masterly yet fair and generous manner in which he treated the subject.

THE battle between Cleveland and the champion who shall be set up against him will not be a battle for men. It will be a victory for high or low taxes. The republicans have been so placed that they cannot furnish a candidate who represents a reduction of the levy of $371,000,000 without lightening whisky and tobacco.—Chicago Herald.

THE Charlotte Leader learns of a case of a widow, Mrs. Sarah Robinson, who formerly lived in Brookfield township, Eaton county, who was dependent on a son, and this son lost his life in the war. A pension was applied for and followed vigorously in her behalf by herself and friends, but without success. Six years ago Mrs. Robinson died and nothing more was done about the claim in question. Yet under a democratic administration, a party that the g. o. p. so loudly denounced as antagonistic to the best interests of the soldiers, found pigeon-holed and covered in the dust the pension claim of Mrs. Robinson, but notwithstanding the antiquity of the affair, they found sufficient evidence for them to grant her a pension and acting upon this and not knowing of her death, granted her a pension of twenty eight hundred dollars of which a portion will be returned to the pension department. This surely does not look as if all friends of the soldiers were contained in the old republican party, and interested in the administration of the affairs of government.

PETER WHITE, of Marquette, one of the delegates at large to the St. Louis convention, in an interview at Grand Rapids during the conversation, said: "There is no question about November. The February vote was not an accident. That was the coldest day we had last winter, and if it had been a mild day Breen would have surely been elected. Trains were ready to take several hundred lumbermen who were back in the woods from ten to twenty miles to the nearest polling places, but with the thermometer 40° below zero the men said they could not stand it. And I could not blame them either. No it was no accident. It was a general change of sentiment. A few days before the election I met some miners on the street, with one of whom I was acquainted. I spoke to them, told them I know they were republicans, but asked if they couldn't manage to get on one anti-republican slip. The leader replied: 'We will not need any slips. We were talking the matter over at a meeting the other night and the boys have come to the conclusion that times have never been so good, work never so steady, nor wages better than they have been under Cleveland's administration, and we can make up our minds not to vote any anti-Cleveland ticket. I found that sentiment very general, and you can rely on it the Upper Peninsula will do better in November than it did in February.

Exit, Local Option.

The decision of the supreme court in the "local option" case disposes effectually of the law passed a year ago giving each county in the state the right to decide for itself whether it will prohibit the sale of intoxicants or not. It does not strike at any particular section of the law, which it wipes out as completely as if the legislator had never wrestled with the subject at all. It is unconstitutional, the court says, because it conflicts with section 20 of article 4, which provides that a law shall embrace but one subject that shall be expressed in its title. The title of this law does not express the object. It defines the act as "an act to regulate the manufacture and sale of liquor in counties," when such is not its object. Therefore, say the court, the law must go. There are other objections to it, some of them important; but this is enough to finish it.

The decision can hardly be called a surprise. The defect for which the law has been set aside was noted and commented on immediately after its passage. It was the chief reliance of the council representing the parties who sought to set the law aside, and more than half of their brief before the supreme court was devoted to that single point. There was a pretty general feeling that the court as constituted would sustain the law if it were possible; but the feeling was also pretty general that it would be found impossible, as it apparently was. There will therefore be little surprise at the decision.

There will be some regret; but there will be less than might be supposed. Those who have voted for the law in the "dry" counties will naturally regret their lost time, money and effort; and as they probably believed the law was destined to work a reformation in their counties, their regret will be keen. But on the part of the political prohibitionists there will be no regret. The leaders of the third party awoke some time since to the fact that the local option law was a republican false pretense, the sole object of which was to secure prohibition votes without sacrificing the saloon vote. In their last state convention they openly declared that this was what the republicans passed the law for. They have never had any special confidence in the law anyway, regarding it at best as a pitiful compromise. They have never wanted it to succeed; because they have felt that if it did succeed, the day of state and general prohibition would be postponed. There will be no tears, therefore from the political prohibitionists over the decease of local option.

As for the republican party which passed the law it will regret the supreme court decision even less, if possible than the political prohibitionists will. Before that decision was rendered the law had utterly failed in the purpose they intended to subserve. It not only did not secure for the party the prohibition vote, but did secure the condemnation of the prohibition leaders, who saw through the sham. At the same time it was made, through the weak babble and drivel of some of the party organs, to alienate the saloon vote. Between the two stools the party had fallen to the ground, and it is not going to grieve because the supreme court has stepped in and removed the stools.

It may be doubtful whether we shall have any renewal of the local option law, though it is probably practicable in the light of the supreme court decision to pass one that will stick. The prohibitionists certainly will not pass one even if they should get control of the legislature, which they are not at all likely to do. The republicans will not try to get the whiskey and anti-whiskey vote with a single enactment until they have recovered fully from the effects of the first attempt; and that will be a long time first. As for the democracy, who are tolerably certain to control Michigan legislation next winter, they will probably prefer to give high license a fair trial rather than devise any new scheme.

These are the probable political effects of the supreme court decision. Among the practical effects the first will be an increase in drinking in the "dry" counties. But if those who voted to make the counties "dry" will take hold heartily in sustaining the license law they can give their counties quite as much freedom from the evils of intemperance as they could possibly have done under local option. In a county where a majority of the voters are opposed to the use of ardent spirits under any circumstances as a beverage there ought to be very little difficulty in keeping the drink habit at the minimum, under any law or no law.—Free Press.

Special Train to St. Louis.

I. M. Weston, chairman of the democratic state central committee has secured a special train for delegates and all others who desire to attend the democratic national convention, to be held at St. Louis Mo., June 5th, 1888, from Chicago to St. Louis, via Illinois Central railroad.

The route selected to St. Louis from Grand Rapids is the Chicago & West Michigan Railway to Chicago and the Illinois Central railroad from Chicago to St. Louis Mo. Coldwater has been all torn up over the breaking of a barrel of "crackers" consigned to a leading prohibitionist. Now it appears that the bottled beer, which the barrel really contained, was for the prohibitionist's wife, her physician having prescribed it.

The policemen in six towns Monday night, and in the morning the marshal got a chance to dispose of them, which he did. The Prop. Charlevoix being short of hands they were put aboard hunting freight, it was their 60 days in the county jail and they preferred the former.—Cheboygan News.

English sparrows are creating sad havoc with the native birds in various parts of the state. These pests are increasing very rapidly, and in addition to killing off our insect-eating birds are doing a great deal of damage. A law for their extermination should be devised to get rid of them.

The farmers of Cheboygan county are wearing long faces. Winter lingered so long in the lap of spring and then was followed by the wet weather, so that they have not been able to do their spring plowing and seeding, and they are wondering where their profits for the season are coming from.

The prospects of a very light wheat crop in Tuscola county are becoming daily more and more apparent. Secretary Wormley, of the county agricultural society, predicts that the county will not harvest more than an average crop of eight bushels per acre, for the number of acres sown last fall. Many wheat fields in different localities have been plowed up and planted to spring crops.

A visitor to our sanctum this week had the hardihood to inquire if the people of this city were preparing to celebrate the Fourth of July. We have been watching our exchanges to see if any of the inmates of the State asylums had made their escape, as we certainly thought our visitor must be crazy to talk of the glorious fourth with the snow falling as lively as in January.—St. Ignace Democrat.

The month of February was in one respect the most remarkable in the world's history. It had no full moon. January had two full moons and no old March, but February had none. Do you realize what a rare thing in nature that was? It has not happened since the time of Washington nor the beginning of Christian era nor the creation of the world; and will not occur again, according to the computation of astronomers, for 2,400,000 years.

The supreme court of Michigan has decided that property within a city or incorporated village are responsible for the condition of the sidewalks, and should any accident happen to an individual though a defective walk the victim has grounds for damages against the property owner. The case in question was the city of Detroit vs. Chaffee, verdict for $2,500. Now that property owners are made responsible, poor sidewalks will become the exception rather than the rule as at present. Several thousand dollars paid out in damages for a broken leg would build good walks opposite the property, no doubt for a whole generation of years, and even the most niggardly class of property owners will perceive the wisdom and economy in having excellent sidewalks.

Alick Rosenthal gives clothing a new this week. Alick is a live-wire and wants people to know it. Hustlers always get to the front.

The cash house building at Boyne is well under way, but will not be as large a building as the former one, though a much better location.

John Ward delivered $93 worth of fruit trees in one day recently, and collected nearly all as he delivered. This is not a bad record for these times.

The Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad Co., will, in a very few weeks, begin work on the handsome $250,000 depot they intend building at Grand Rapids.

The steambarges Leland and Thos are now making tri-weekly trips from St. Ignace with ore, the former going to Elk Rapids and the latter to Ironton furnaces.

Landlord Ball is serving some good meals these days, and it would be a natural benefit if City Officials put some of their business men and their wives should drop in occasionally and get better squalished.

Horton's Bay has a new man and new appearance this spring. A number of new buildings are up and others under way. All they need now is a more sidewalk to be a model town.

Persons who are in the habit of killing robins and woodpeckers as a spring pastime are violating a state law, and are liable to a fine of $5 and ten days imprisonment.

O. D. Hilton has planted this spring 75 pear trees, 25 plums, and 50 apple trees. Next year he intends to plant as many more fruit trees. The fruit interests of this region are booming.

W. B. Flower of Petoskey was over Saturday looking up a location for a photo. gallery. He asserts his intention to come here permanently if he can dispose of his interests in Petoskey.

The rebuilt steamer City of Charlevoix has developed into a most magnificent carrier and far exceeds in speed any boat ever on the Northern Michigan line.—St. Ignace Republican.

James Rogers returned to Charlevoix this week and is at work with Cameron and Burns. One by one, the boys will come back, satisfied that there are worse places than Charlevoix.

Frank Tucker's Metropolitan theater company were favored with good houses Saturday and Monday evenings, and as usual gave general satisfaction. They can be sure of a good house whenever they come.

The steamer Westover has a season contract to carry pig iron from the Pine Lake Iron Co. to Cleveland. This is her first season on fresh water. She has for a number of years plied on the Atlantic coast between New York and Boston.

Joseph M. Clark calls attention in another column to the vacant lots of the Upright & Hurlbut addition which is destined to make fine homes for men of small means. The prices of these lots are generally low, and the terms are made easy as possible.

A story is passing around quietly that a promising young gent of East Jordan and one of Charlevoix's fairest marriageable daughters went to Boyne recently to get a license, but as the county clerk was out fishing they were compelled to return without the coveted permit, and another trip will be necessary.

The Boyne Citzen has a paragraph descriptive of Salt River Valley, Arizona, as seen by T. J. Hill, which will not tend to boom the settlement of Boyne and vicinity very much. Perhaps, however, Bro. Chapin is buying up all dissatisfied holders at 50 cents on a dollar and hopes to realize on his investment when the boom here is really on.

Attention is called to the practice of depositing rubbish,—rakings from streets, alleys, and back yards,—in holes and vacant lots, within the corporation limits of Charlevoix. If this stuff is bad for health lying around loose, is it not infinitely worse piled up to rot and breed disease. Far better to have the stuff piled up where it can be burned, and the ashes and remainder plowed under. This is a matter for the health officer, if not for the village council.

The propeller Petoskey will leave Chicago every Monday at 1.00 p. m., arriving at Harbor Springs on Tuesday at 6.00 p. m., returning, will stop at Charlevoix at 11.00 p. m., arriving at Chicago Thursday at 12.00 noon. Leave Chicago at 11.00 p. m. stopping at Charlevoix at 12.00 noon Saturday and arriving at Harbor Springs at 6.00 p. m. At ports between Ludington and Harbor Springs and on Traverse Bay, the boat stops but one way each trip.

Building Notes.

Cameron and Burns built an addition to J. J. Kanasy's residence last week.

Painters are this week priming the outside of Parker & Way's new picture gallery.

Burns, Stevens & Co. have finished their wind-mill tower, and have the mill in operation.

Cameron and Burns are this week crowding work on the addition to the M. E. parsonage.

James Gellick has made quite a transformation in the interior appearance of his saloon building.

W. H. Francis has completed the addition to Mrs. A. B. Wood's cottage and is now working on Mr. D'Ooge's cottage on the Van Vleck lot.

James Lawrence is building a cottage for the warden of the Charlevoix resort, on the upper terrace, near the middle of the grounds. A garden patch is also being prepared.

Fifteen rooms for the help have been made in the attic of the Belvedere, only four of which have windows in them, though, we think, they don't raise a row it will be a little strange. A row of dormer windows though would be just the thing, to give the girls more light and air.

The cottage next to the Belvedere formerly owned by E. H. Gross, is being plastered this week from bottom to top. Mr. Green's interest has been bought by the association and the building is to be considered as an adjunct to the accommodations of the Belvedere, and be occupied and cared for as are the rooms of the hotel.

Boyne.

BOYNE, May 21.—Weather fine.

R. S. Hubbard is spending his out on streets shaking lands with old friends, and looks refreshed after his winter's rest at home.

The frame of the new court house is now raised.

Mr. Conkling's Fee.

There is a story of two Rochester men who lately were in New York on legal business. It occurred to them to consult Mr. Conkling, and they did so at some length and very much to their satisfaction. As they rose to go the spokesman said: "Mr. Conkling, we thank you for your advice, which is very valuable to us. When main open from 6 a. m., to 10.00 p. m. we shall send you a check for $500." "Oh, no gentlemen," said the ex-senator don't do that. I am only too happy to be of service to you, and make no charge. You are quite welcome, but when I do charge, my fee is $5,000."—Rochester Union.

CATHERINE THE GREAT.

A Woman of Whims, Humor, Candor, Vanity, Courage, and Talent.

The Hermitage, the Principal Museum of Petersburg—Choice Collection of Antiquities.

The Relics of Prince Potemkin, the Most Famous of Catherine's Lovers.

[WILLIAM ELEROY CURTIS, IN CHICAGO NEWS.]

On one side of the Winter Palace of Petersburg is the Neva River, so close that one could throw a stone from any of the windows into the water, and on the other side a semi-circle of vast and ugly rococo palaces, surrounding an enormous parade ground, in which fifty thousand troops have been maneuvered and inspected at one time. The palaces are imposing only because of their immensity, there being a dozen or more of them with several hundred rooms each, all built by the Czars at one time or another for themselves or their poor relations, and now occupied by government offices or for the quarters of troops. The city is reached through an enormous arch, similar to the Arc de Triomph in Paris, although not so large, and surmounted with a bronze chariot and a lot of prancing chargers—favorite model in all the capitals of Europe.

ARCH OF TRIUMPH.

It was to this parade ground that the great Catherine came from the Winter Palace when she led the revolution against her husband, and sword in hand, straddling her horse like a man, demanded the allegiance and support of the mob.

"I am your Queen," she said. "Whoever obeys me shall be loved as a loyal subject. Whoever refuses shall die like a dog."

Catherine was one of the vainest, most extravagant, most licentious of women, without a doubt. She had forty lovers with whom she lived as publicly as if the relations had been sanctioned by marriage, had children by seventeen of them as she herself claimed, and founded an order of nobility for the classification of her illegitimate heirs and their posterity, of whom she was very proud. It is said that she built, at the government expense, and gave to her favorites more than a dozen palaces, and distributed among them 92,000,000 rubles of public funds. When one of her paramours died, as was several times the case, she went into mourning for him, and gave Catherine, but few; there have been wiser women, but few; and there may have been greater women, but history conceals their names.

She was the only foreigner who ever ruled over the Russian race, being the Princess Sophia Augusta of Anhalt-Zerbst, married and brought to Russia by Peter III., the son of the Empress CATHERINE AT 70.

Elizabeth, and grandson of Peter the Great. He was a poor weakling, whom his wife could not tolerate, so after a honeymoon of six months, she headed a revolution against her own husband, and had him strangled by two of her favorites, Count Orloff of diamond fame, and Gen. Baratinski. Then, with grim humor, she forced the assassins to walk each side of the coffin that inclosed his remains, and carry the pall. Orloff was perfectly composed during the entire ordeal, but the other man fainted repeatedly and had to be carried away. Catherine sent him into exile for his cowardice, and it was only when he made his confession at death that the manner of the murder of Peter was known. Catherine reigned for fifty-two years, and the epoch in the history of the empire in which she is the chief figure, was the most prosperous it has ever known. She achieved victories over the Turks and Tartars, added many thousand square leagues to the area of her dominions, and did much to improve the condition of the people.

She wrote books of stories for children, some of which are still in use, founded hospitals and asylums for unfortunates of all sorts, erected fortresses which she herself designed, established public libraries, and did much to elevate the taste of the people in literature and art, besides carrying on wars and amours. In her retirement she reached her golden age, the nobles were rich and their Queen set them an example in extravagance which they did their best to follow.

A RUSSIAN COSTUME.

The Hermitage, as it is called, although the name is a misnomer, was the palace of Catherine, at least it was her favorite place of residence in Petersburg. She had a dozen other palaces scattered about. It adjoins the Winter Palace, being connected to that building by corridors, and is by far the handsomest piece of architecture in the capital except that cathedral of St. Isaac. It is one of the few structures of stone, is beautifully carved externally, and internally finished with great extravagance and better taste than most of the Russian palaces. Catherine called it "The Hermitage," for it was here that she used to retire from the cares of state, and give herself up to ease and pleasure. Here she entertained the greatest men in Europe, poets, philosophers, travelers, and statesmen; gave infernal dinner parties and balls; not as an empress, but as a society queen; here she had a little theater in which were given plays of her own composition, acted by the ladies and gentlemen of her court; poets came here to read their verses, artists to show their paintings, and the walls of the beautiful structure could talk, they might tell tales that would astonish the world, for there were rots here, it is whispered, that would shock the moral nerves of the universe, for Catherine never had things half done. The Hermitage was to her what Sans Souci was to Frederick the Great, and the palace of the Trianon to Louis of France.

Catherine's Rules of Etiquette.

In little ante-chamber adjoining her great drawing-room there hangs a little frame, inclosing a list of rules to be observed by all who enter the Hermitage, written in Catherine's own hand, of which the following is a translation:

1. Leave your rank outside, as well as your hat, and especially your sword.
2. Leave your right of precedence, your pride, and any similar feeling, outside the door.
3. Be gay, but do not spoil anything. Do not break or gnaw anything.
4. Sit, stand, walk, as you will, without reference to anybody.
5. Talk merrily, but not very loud, so as not to make the head of anybody ache.
6. Argue without anger and without excitement.
7. Neither sigh nor yawn, nor make anybody dull or heavy.
8. In all innocent games, in whatever one proposes, let all engage.
9. Eat whatever is sweet and savory, and drink with moderation, so that each can find his fogs on leaving the room.
10. Tell no tales out of school. Whatever goes at one one may go out at the other before leaving the room.

Whoever broke one of these rules, on the testimony of two witnesses, had to drink a glass of cold water and read a page of the Telemachiades—a much ridiculed Russian poem. Whoever broke three of them rules the same evening had to commit six lines of the book. Whoever broke the tenth rule could never again be admitted to the Hermitage.

The Treasures of the Hermitage.

The Hermitage is now the principal museum of Petersburg, what the Louvre is to Paris and the British Museum to London; and if it had been constructed for such a purpose could not be better adapted for the display of the treasures of art and antiquity that have been collected by the later sovereigns of Russia around the magnificent nucleus Catherine left in the building. The building itself is a par-allegoram 550 by 375 feet, inclosing two large courts which Catherine had arranged so that they could be flooded for skating parks in winter and gardens of luxurious foliage in summer. The entrance is a noble vestibule supported by ten massive caryatides, in Finland granite. The main hall is supported by sixteen splendid monoliths of granite, terminating in capitals of Carrara marble carved in Florence, while the grand stairway, in three large flights, is hewn of great blocks of the same marble, which causes every one who sees them to wonder how they could be brought from Italy before the days of railroads.

The rooms on the ground floor are filled with the choicest collection of antiquities outside the British Museum, including two enormous pieces of Siberian malachite, the silver vase of Nichopol, and the golden vase Kertch, both of which, like many other pieces in this collection, are well known to every antiquarian in the world, and have been the subject of no end of scientific discussion. The upper rooms are finished in marble, jasper, and precious materials, and are full of pictures. The collection of Italian masters is second only to that of Florence, and includes many of the best examples of Raphael, Titian, Rubens, Rembrandt, Murillo, Tintoretto, Leonardo da Vinci, Vandyke, Van Dyck, Teniers, Poussin, Claude Lorrain, Ribera, Salvator Rosa, Vernet, Greuze, Vanloo, Gerard, Lancret, Pater, Watteau, Boucher, Fragonard, Vigée Lebrun, Lawrence, Reynolds, Gainsborough, Landseer, Turner, Wilkie, Murillo, Velasquez, Zurbaran, Ribera, Ribalta, Morales, Cano, Ribera, Ribalta, Morales, Cano, Ribera, Ribalta, Morales, Cano

FARM AND GARDEN.

FACTS WORTH KNOWING ABOUT MATTERS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

An Unpatented Device of Easy Construction for Holding a Cow's Tail in Fly Time, That Promises to Lift a Burden from Summer Milking.

There are numerous patent devices for holding a cow's tail while milking. There are also many ingenious ones, and equally effective, for which no patent has been taken. In Ohio Farmer is described and illustrated the simple plan shown in the cuts.

The device represented in Fig. 1 is simply a stout cord with a loop at one end and a small wire hook at the other. The cord is just long enough to go twice around the tail, then around the thigh and then hook. If this is too simple, get two pieces of stool wire 8 or 10 inches long, of the size of a knitting needle; bend and loop them together as shown in Fig. 2. One end is sprung around the tail and the other around the thigh above the hock. Neither of these is patented; so was born unhesitatingly when flies begin to worry the cow and make milking a nuisance.

Hamburg Fowls.

Conspicuous among all laying breeds of fowls stands the Hamburg, for they are exceedingly prolific layers. Their eggs, however, run small as regards size, and the fowls do not bear confinement as well as some other breeds. These fowls are remarkable for their beauty, and this fact, along with the drawback of small sized eggs has had its influence in placing the Hamburg as a fancier's fowl rather than a common purpose bird.

SILVER PENCILED HAMBURG HEN.

As show birds there are several varieties recognized, among which are the gold penciled, silver pencilled, gold spangled, silver spangled and black. The silver pencilled variety represented in the cut is an old one—one of the best known, in fact, to fanciers. The black Hamburgs are considered the best for commercial purposes.

SILOS AND ENSILAGE.

Some Facts Regarding a Subject That Is Remaining Popular With Many Farmers.

So many different forms of silos are in use varying in cost and capacity, says The New York World, that lengthy descriptions of them cannot be given, nor is it necessary to give the general principles understood. For a silo of moderate capacity, which is to remain permanently for one from one to year, it will be best when it can be located inside of a barn or some other building, and indeed, in most other cases, to have it all below ground by making an excavation of the size wanted. If the ground is firm cement on the smooth dirt, but if liable to cave in then a brick or stone wall will be required, which must be cemented on the inside. Instead of such a silo over those wholly above ground consists in the ease with which it can be filled from the first floor instead of elevating the ensilage in some way to the top of one above ground. In taking out from an underground silo only so much of the top should be removed at a time as is necessary for getting at it conveniently, and the ensilage can be raised in a large tub or square box swung by blocks and tackle, with the aid of a small windlass.

A silo can be made of any form so that air and water are excluded, but it will be found best to make the width about one-third of the length, and the depth may be from twelve feet upward as desired. Large and expensive silos are usually divided into compartments, with various appliances for cutting, filling and emptying, according to the ideas of the owners. It is claimed that for a cow that has pasturage for half the year 275 cubic feet of ensilage will generally be sufficient. In locating a silo and determining whether it shall be above or below ground, the convenience afforded for cutting, filling, emptying and feeding should be primarily considered. In addition to the advantages named, an underground silo once properly made is a permanent affair, while one made of lumber above ground and exposed to the action of the atmosphere is liable to shrinkage and openings, and a large mass of perishable material in close contact with the boards will soon cause decay.

The corn plant is so universally preferred for ensilage in this country that it is unnecessary to discuss the merits of the different grasses. Well grown stalks and partly cured are more desirable than those so thickly sown as to be spindling and watery. The seed may be drilled in rows, three feet apart, with stalks eight inches apart in the rows, with the ears begin to glaze and should be hauled in and cut into inch lengths or less and shoveled in and thoroughly trampled down as fast as cut. It is desirable that the corners of the cemented silo should be rounding rather than square, and that the ends and sides slope gently toward the center, making the diameters at the bottom about a foot less than at the top, when the settling down of the top will prevent any crevice being made at the sides by the shrinkage of the mass below. The ensilage may be covered in various ways. One is with boards covered with earth and stones; another with straw two feet deep and the straw covered with muck or sand. An impression seems to be gaining ground that the very heavy weights once thought necessary, may be dispensed with, provided the covering is sufficient to exclude the air, as the tendency of the finely cut mass is to become compact from its own weight. Cutters costing from $50 or less upward, to be driven by light horse power, can be had from dealers in agricultural implements.

How to Feed Horses.

Horses have small stomachs; remember this. A good plan is to divide corn rations into three daily portions, the hay two. May object to giving hay just previous to work, as it distends the stomach and causes the animal inconvenience.

Delicate feeders must be tempted to take their rations, and such should never be fed too strongly at one time. "A Scotch plate is a rule very generally observed in England—everything cleaned up before placing other food in the racks or mangers. A little linseed boiled to a jelly and mixed with the corn is seductive. Hay dampened and salted will tempt others. Bran, a double handful, are a relish in weakly subjects, pale malt for the convalescent or indisposed; damp bran and oats are engaging for others. Some grooms give carrots and tares in small quantities. Carrots superlicidase diabetes if given in excessive quantities. The peculiar habits of horses demand the attention of all horse owners and grooms. A sufficiency of flesh is all that is required, and not "hog fat," or "beastly fat" as some phrase it.

Give Milk Cows Plenty of Water.

Milk stock are averse to any great amount of exercise, and do not ordinarily take any more than is necessary in supplying themselves with food. Give them plenty of food and an easy access to water and they will quickly fill themselves and spend most of their time at rest. When water is situated in out of the way places on a farm, cows will often go thirsty for a considerable portion of the day rather than make a special journey to obtain it. This has been observed by all practical farmers, and yet it is curious that many who are conversant with the fact neglect to take proper advantage of this peculiarity in the habits of the animal. It is an important object with the dairy man who desires the highest success to promote, as far as may be (without resorting to artificial means), the taking of an abundant quantity of water by his herd. Milk cannot be made without water, and when it is secreted largely a large amount of water is absolutely required.

A Convenient Cattle Stall.

Among farm conveniences recommended at one of the western farmers' institutes is the cattle stall here illustrated. The Minnesota Farmer describes it as follows:

Each animal requires a space three to four feet in width, according to size. The platform upon which the animal is to stand should be about five feet long, including a space of one foot in width slanted, for the hind feet to stand upon. The spaces between the slats should not be more than three-fourths of an inch in width. Every stat should rest edgewise upon end supports; that is, the wide way of the slats should be in a vertical direction. Under this grating a space four to six inches in depth is left open as far back as the solid floor. All the dung falls beneath, and can be scraped out with a hoe or some tool made for the purpose. Behind the stalls a trench of eighteen inches or two feet in width, and about eight inches in depth, is left for collecting the manure. Next to this again is left a walk of convenient width through the stable. If desired another set of stalls can be arranged in a corresponding position to this wall. The use of stanchions of course is optional. Many prefer a strap around the stall fastened to a chain or rope.

Things Farmers Tell One Another.

A. B. Allen says: The first thing in the morning is to water the horse, which should be done before feeding, otherwise it might work more or less of the food just eaten undigested from the stomach.

A Vermont maple sugar maker says that the great point is to keep the sap pure and clean so as to retain its original color; this once lost or lessened cannot be regained.

A Connecticut farmer claims for common unblanched mustn. that it affords satisfactory covering for hot beds, and at a much less cost than glass.

A Maryland farmer tells that low wagons wi' wide tires make easier work in hauling out manure.

John M. Stahl believes that no improvement in southern agriculture would be of greater advantage than making sheep rearing an important industry. No animal is so well adapted to the purification and enrichment of worn out lands that should be "pricked out" in a bed, with suitable heat for their needs, says W. D. Philbrick.

A New York horticulturist reports having applied liquid manure to a peach orchard last year with excellent success.

Slipping Away.

The most ominous outlook yet for the Republicans comes from the recent numbers of the Michigan Farmer. The ground appears to be rapidly slipping away from beneath their feet. Carried at the last state election by a mere scratch, and coming almost within hand's reach of an absolute Democratic victory, there have not been a few Republicans from time to time who have seen the storm cloud gathering, and who have honestly endeavored to warn of the peril awaiting it there unless something was done to patch the mesh. What could be done? Not a few Republicans saw the watch towers pointed out the road that it was necessary to travel, and briefly formulated a creed which at least had in it, if nothing else, prudence and common sense. In substance this creed was: Let the war issues go. Cut out the cancer of sectionalism by the roots. Bury the bloody shirt. Unite the country, thereby subjecting it to statesmanship instead of partisanship. Reduce the war taxes. Modify the war tariff. Be economical. Give agriculture a chance to breathe freely once more and get out of debt. The farmers are not prosperous in Michigan. They do not know exactly why, yet they feel that something hurts them.

They look to congress for some sort of relief or attempt at relief, and what do they get? Such speeches as that of Ingalls—savage, malignant, full of an undying and unmoonshiny hatred, and predicting another civil war, with all of the murderous and atrocious surroundings which belong to civil war. The old, old story over again of a snake for a fish and a stone for a dinner.

This is the way some honest Republicans have talked of the real political condition of Michigan, after the feasting there, of the tremendous upheaval going on there, and they have told only the simple truth. We have watched the Democratic rollcation going on in Michigan for years, and we have seen the Democrats have advanced and the Republicans have retreated. In Ubleraace at home also has had a great deal to do with this. Prohibition not a little also. The same fell spirit which has made the radical machine in Kansas a synonym for everything that is polluted in politics, puritanical in act, debasing to national credit, rascally in administration and putrid in misexegesis, attempted also to reach its hand in Michigan. A Republican revolt, joined to a solid Democratic phalanx, crushed it for the time, but it is now convalescent and prepared to come back again. Hence the result of the recent municipal elections. Hence to weather wise Republican eyes the signs they see of a gathering storm cloud.—Kansas City Times.

A Political Revolution.

If the Democratic party of Rhode Island was beaten at the polls in the contest for state offices, it is the Democratic party a notable triumph in the adoption by the necessary three-fifths majority of the proposed amendment of the constitution repealing the arbitrary clause which excluded from the privilege of the suffrage all foreign born citizens not taxed for at least $134 worth of property. The effect of this victory will undoubtedly be to change the political complexion of the state within the next three years, and, probably, to make it doubtful at the approaching presidential election.

According to the latest census figures there are in Rhode Island 85,717 men of voting age. Of these the number of native born is 53,976, and of foreign born 31,916. Under the law as it at present stands no man is entitled to exercise the elective franchise unless he is registered and has paid a poll tax of $1. The Republican amendment makes changes in this respect. It simply removes the property qualification and leaves foreign born citizens, who have paid interest and paid the poll tax, on the same footing as native born citizens. The question of most interest excited by the adoption of the amendment is as to the effect it is likely to have on the political fortunes of the two great parties in the state. * * * While the amendment is at least makes the state doubtful this year, there is every reason to believe that at the presidential election of 1892 it will cast its vote for the Democratic candidate. Of the naturalized foreigners there are 19,000 Irish, 6,000 English and 900 German. The Irish to a man will probably embrace the opportunity to vote against Britain, and their accession is the chief ground for assuming that Rhode Island is doubtful at the ensuing three years, and completely changes her political complexion.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Let Them Show Their Hand.

If the Republicans have a policy for the management of taxation and the surplus for which they claim the support of the people in preference to the Democratic policy, why do they not embody it in a bill so that the people can examine it and estimate what it may be worth? Why do they confine their opposition to mere statements and empty discussions, which involve no party responsibility, and can bring to their party no credit or party responsibility?—New York Star.

Republican Despondency.

The Republicans are already full of gloom regarding the appointment to the vacancy on the supreme court bench. A large share of their distress is due, no doubt, to the fear that they dare not control the appointment this year, and can't trade it off for political support as they did on a former occasion.—Chicago Times.

The Kind of Victory He Won.

They say that Senator Sherman won a victory at Lima. Napoleon claimed to have won one at Leipzic, and quietly remarked to Bernadotte: "Another such victory and I am lost."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Dissolution Near.

Pennsylvania is said to be the birthplace of the Republican party. Pennsylvania, as things now look, is bringing on the death of the party she horned.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Moving Right Along.

The Democrats seem to have voted very well in Indiana. The party is making progress.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

POLITICAL NOTES AND NEWS.

ALBERTY, the present democratic administration has paid fifty million dollars more to the soldiers in pensions than was paid in any four year of republican administration.—Cassopolis Democrat.

SAM RANDALL lost his grip in Pennsylvania. The democrats of that state in their convention last week, elected a solid Cleveland delegation to St. Louis, and gave hearty endorsement to President Cleveland and his tariff message of last December.

THE Lansing Republican says that not far from 6,000 new voters have been manufactured in the Upper Peninsula, and as they will mostly vote the republican ticket, that party will secure an old time majority in November. To insure success the republicans must secure new blood and plenty of it.

"WHEN President Cleveland, in his annual message, forced the issue of tariff reform," says the New York World, "Mr. Blaine became at once as logically the candidate of the protectionist republicans as Mr. Cleveland himself became by that act the invitable candidate of the Democrats. Mr. Blaine instinctively recognized this in his immediate reply from Paris to the president's message. He is as pre-eminently the champion of a perpetual high tariff as Mr. Cleveland is the champion of a lower tariff. With one burning issue for the campaign, the logic of the situation seemed to suggest the nomination of the two men who most perfectly represented the conflicting ideas and divergent policies underneath this issue. Hence Cleveland, and hence Blaine."

THE senate committee has favorably reported the bill prepared by Postmaster-General Dickinson for the erection of postoffice buildings in towns and cities where the postoffice receipts for three years preceding have exceeded $3,000 annually. The bill meets the strong support of prominent senators and is received with great favor in the house. Congressman Whiting said today: "It is pretty well proven that aside from saving to the government and is a matter of justice to smaller cities and towns. I have thought for several years, the policy of building government buildings in the large cities only was wrong. The smaller towns and the country contribute, necessarily to the prosperity of the large cities, and they should be required to bear the cost of public buildings for them alone when their own convenience, classification of business and stable property justifies the expenditure on the permanent location of a postoffice building. If the postmaster general succeeds in this measure he will have inaugurated a policy of the greatest importance. It would revive business by the employment of labor and the purchases of material in every part of the country. It would be well distributed at most to the people. It would be a just way to spend the surplus, and in my opinion, be the proper way to use it. It would be a great stimulus to and in supplying a circulating medium should the surplus, through decreased taxation, become exhausted. It is a greater project than any postmaster-general has had courage to undertake, and if successful will do honor not to the name of Dickinson alone, but to the state of Michigan."

The Monopolists Vigilant.

The servants of the Money Devil are always at work. Let the people better themselves. They have only to assert their power to lay down such policy and legislation as will bring in the coming presidential election as will insure the completion of the good work so lately begun by our Democratic administration and carried forward by the Democratic majority in congress. Let your texts, O, Israel!—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Unnatural Situation.

This social situation is not normal or permanent. There is something the matter with it, and the matter is taxation—before and behind. In front is the false government of bounty, and behind, taking 28 per cent. on all things, plus four times as much for "protection." In the rear is the oil ring, the coal ring, the gas ring, the sugar ring, the railway ring, taking absolutely every penny of the wage earner's savings.—Chicago Herald.

Novel Anti-Tariff Argument.

The fact that the different sections of this country with their differing wages rates get along prosperously without any trade barriers between them is a fact worth thinking about.—Providence Journal.

Ladies Not Admitted.

The general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in session in New York decided that ladies cannot be admitted to seats in the conference or have a voice in its deliberation. Here we have an example of Bourbonism that is simply unparalleled. By Bourbon we mean one who never learns anything and never forgets to whom the force of obsolete precedents usages and customs, is all powerful, no matter how absurd. What would become of the Methodist church—or any other church, for that matter—if it was not for the ladies? Where would the money to run them come from were the ladies to strike, and resolve to get up no more fairs, socials, suppers, grab-bags, picnics, excursions, sewing societies, and other schemes by which two thirds of the expenses of the churches are raised on? What would become of the poor of the churches if not the christian ladies look after them. What would become of the prayer meetings did not the ladies attend, and what would become of the church services and Sunday school did the ladies grow indifferent and stay empaled their offspring and husbands to attend. If the ladies are not fit for lay delegates in a general conference, they should strike long enough to teach the selected and self-made rulers a lesson. It would not take long.—Cheboygan Democrat.

An Aid to Memory.

There is one thing those can do whose taste for reading has been trifled with by too much indulgence in the stimulating novel and light reading so that they find when they attempt to read some standard work from a master of the English language that they are unable to hold their attention to the work or fail to appreciate it, and that is when they sit down to read let them take any dictionary, a 25 cent one will do, and when over they come to a word they do not thoroughly understand, making a whole sentence ambiguous, let them look it up in the dictionary, and they will see the beauties in the English language that they never dreamed of before, and they will understand what they read thoroughly. This is all that is necessary to obtain proficiency with practice. Readers will be soon inclined to find how many words they think they understand have, in some cases, almost an entirely different meaning from what they understand. In this way it is astonishing how fast one's vocabulary increases and how much more fluent in speech and pen it becomes, even to the indolent and superficial of readers, and will, in the growth of your knowledge of words, comes understanding, appreciation, and respect for author, who were considered dull and stupid before.

What the Republicans Must Do.

Why should not the democratic party make such a platform that its candidates can make a campaign in the southern states in the coming year? Why not show the white men in the south why they ought to work with the Republican party?

This very question is a virtual admission that the Republicans have not in the past acted in good faith toward the southern whites—a charge which they have always been ready to deny in the past, but which many of the most extreme Republicans are willing to confess today. They are now trying to force on the Republican party the policy of dealing honestly with the south. They will find this easy matter to bring about. We would only be too glad to see them succeed, for the bloody shirt laid at rest and a Republican bid made for southern support—not that we think it would succeed—we are here. After having acted in bad faith with the south for years, they can scarcely expect it to believe their first profffers of friendship and not to think them mere tricks to catch votes. The Republican party must do more than merely promise this, must do something practical—demonstrate its good will by years of good acts—before it can make any impression here. It will take more than mere promises to remove from our minds the feeling produced by the ten years—1868 to 1878—during which the Republican party dealt out to the south such injuries, losses and hardships.—New Orleans Times Democrat.

Bracing Up John Sherman.

Murat Halstead says that the defeat of Sherman's friends, says that in Lima, in the Eighth Ohio district, was only a bit of playful badinage on the part of the young Republican bloods of the district. He forgets the old adage of the frog and the mice. Lima is one of the young bloods means death to Sherman in spite of Mr Halstead's remark that the only man who could divide the Ohio delegation with Sherman has put himself out of the race.

Nobody disputes that the Ohio delegation will come to Chicago solid for Sherman—externally. But on the deciding ballot the Ohio delegation will be on the side of the road ready for scrambling for a place on the rack.

It is not a good combination to the Sherman boomers in the north. It may interest them to know that The Louisville Commercial has taken a poll of the chairmen of the Republican county committees in Kentucky, and the returns show that, with Blaine out, nine-tenths of them are for John Sherman. On election day Kentucky will cast a plurality of 30,000 votes against whoever is running against Grover Cleveland. Sherman's strength is greatest where the Republicans have the least show.—Chicago News.

W. C. T. U.

Annual Address of County President, Mrs. Franc J. W. Stone.

The following is the address of Mrs. Franc J. W. Stone, president of the Charlevoix county W. C. T. U. as delivered at the recent convention at Boyne:

Dear Sisters of Charlevoix County:

A second time in our history, we are gathered from our distrest homes, to consider the question that lies so near our hearts: "The Coming of Christ's Kingdom," and the deliverement of King Alcohol.

When I look over assemblies of this nature and purpose, and see before me the earnest faces of our women, who form the larger part of our congregation, I can but wonder where all the brothers are!, and do women constitute the majority that need saving? Are we that particular class addressed, when Jesus said, "this thing ought ye to have done, and not left the other undone."

I know we have many good whole-souled men on our side, that stand by us faithfully in all our lines of work. We appreciate them and know how difficult it would be to do without their protection; but the number seems so few, in comparison with the mothers, wives, and sisters, that we wonder when faces are true indeuss to the intense anxiety of the heart, and whose prayers are raised in earnest, pleadings to the throne of the "Most High God," for the redemption of their loved ones, from the "sin that takes hold on death" and destroys "body and soul."

Has the father so duty toward the child, only that he be fed with earthly food, and clothed with earthly raiment?

Have they no part nor parcel in this struggle for "God and home, and native country?"

It makes a pleasing story, to read of the "Mothers Influence," and the "hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," etc.

I think men have rather enjoyed the idea that all the responsibility of character-moulding and building up the home life, belonged to the mother, and every since the days of Eve, for all the mistakes made therein, the cry has been, "the woman thou gavest me," forgetting this other sentence "Vengeance is mine," and the great will not hold him guiltless, "who neglects to put forth his hand to save his own."

Woman's world is her home; her husband and children are the subjects she serves with loving loyalty. Under the license has this home world of woman's destroyed, and the old adage of ruling the world, becomes a myth or poetical fancy, since each mother is required to furnish new recruits each year, to fill the ranks of those who go down to drunkard's grave that Uncle Sam's revenue may not grow less, nor gover ment offices less occupied.

Women are tired of this dual world when fathers with ballot in hand vote the destruction of home, and mother on bended knees are pleading, "How long, oh Lord, how long."

We propose to arrange matters on a basis of equality, where husband and wife can share alike the influences and responsibilities of this home, and the setting up of Christ's Kingdom in the hearts of the children.

In this there is strength.

I was very forcibly reminded of this one-sided history and idea of home, last summer, during the early part of winter, when nearly every woman stopped with the question—what are you not starting a petition for local option? I said, are the men ashamed of the child that they seem to shoulder the responsibility of the adoption upon the women? Supposing we take hold, and make it a recognizable thing; bring before the people in proper form and shape, the work we attempted you have the power to prve some very important temperanly; and if your votes declare the whole arrangement illegal and unconstitutional.

I was further reminded of our work through the subsequent campaign.

Ah, I remember too well, the wading through snow drifts to our meetings, the tiresome and weary days, we worked for a Constitutional amendment, only to be defeated by that little slip of paper in the hands of party men, saloon keepers, drugsists and scheming political tricksters, who never intended anything else, but utter defeat.

Members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; we are pledged to prohibition from God; study it, plan it, talk it, interest others in it, and by so doing you will soon find that instead of your having to push the work, it will push you, and the surprise will be at the amount of work you find to do when you put yourself in readiness to receive it.

Our local superintendents should immediately correspond with a district or state superintendent representing their work. It is their special business to help you. You will receive very helpful letters, full of encouragement, with samples of leaflets to assist you in your particular department. Do not wait for our district or state officers to hunt you up for they are not supposed to know the names of local workers. Oftentimes these busy sisters send letters to every union, and not knowing the names, the letters are not received by the proper persons and become lost, or thrown aside by those receiving them as of no importance. When receiving letters from the district or state officers report at once. It is only through the help of our local workers they are prepared to report properly to the state and national meetings. Through this very carelessness the work we actually do is never reported at all and in consequence the whole are weakened. There is no excuse for any sister to stay away from the union for the want of work; there is a place for all. The fields are already white for the harvest and the laborers are few.

I hope that every sister attending this convention will go home fully prepared to interest herself in this work for 0-1 and hoss and nuttree land. I am glad we need not report the condition of our union in our county. Some are discouraged many times when only two or three persons attend, when the work seems so great. Dear sisters, never yield to discouragement, let not your faith falter. Do we not constitute a link in this great net-work of organizations which cannot be broken without weakening the whole. Christ said, "Could ye not watch with me one hour." And having once enlisted under His banner to fight the dodgeys of our bosses, let us never turn back but be ye faithful to the post of duty, ready and willing to go forward until victory is ours and the blood stained banner of sin, shall be trailing in the dust beneath the trampling feet of millions, freed from the galling chains of depraved appetites. Contemplate, if we can, that great day of rejoicing, when our round-the

The Great Mississippi Freshet said to Have Caused a Loss of Nearly $4,000,000.

This mighty flood in the Mississippi, which will be remembered as without a precedent in its destruction and suffering created, is slowly abating and it is thought that the worst of the high water is passed, says a Quincy (Ill.) dispatch.

Hundreds of families have been rendered homeless, and thousands of acres of growing crops ruined, to say nothing of the loss of cattle, horses, farming implements, wrecked houses, etc., generally. A trip through the submerged region of Illinois and Missouri shows the suffering already published have not been exaggerated. From the northern part of Pike County to the land on the Illinois side of the Mississippi, a distance of 200 miles, the region embracing 500,000 acres of the most fertile soil in the world, the region is now not less than six to ten feet in depth. Along the bluffs on the eastern edge of the county, there are hundreds of families who escaped, leaving all beds, bedding and household goods, and in many instances even their wearing apparel, behind them. Many of these were well-to-do, prosperous farmers, and now they have little or nothing. Much sympathy is felt for the unfortunates, owing to their sudden exposure, but prompt measures have been taken to relieve the destitute. Nothing can be the great subject in the country is not the dead losses, but the aggregate will reach $4,000,000 in round numbers. The damage to levees, houses, and railroads will approximate 500,000.

BLAINE.

He Is Again Interviewed by a Newspaper Correspondent.

T. C. CRAWFORD, the London correspondent of the New York World, has again interviewed Mr. Blaine in Paris.

I have seen Mr. Blaine several times within the last three days, says Mr. Crawford. He looks in my opinion, like a winner. As regards the true question, whether he would accept, I can be sure that Mr. Blaine adheres to his Worcester letter, and does not withdraw one word of it, and does not intend to do so. I have no authority to say more than that, as Mr. Blaine did not authorize me to interview again on this subject. His interview under was so explicit that the best opinion here is that nothing is left to be explained. Mr. Blaine is enough to satisfy the most doubtful of Mr. Sherman's friends. The entire impression his conversation gave you since correctly represent his present state of mind.

Of his health the correspondent says:

It needs no medical expert to pass upon the origin, clear look of his eyes, his good color, and the vigor shown for every one of his seventy years. He has to-day the health that comes to a man as a reward for a life of simple habits and labor.

TWO BODIES CREMATED.

Five Successful Cremations at St. Louis.

Two bodies have been cremated at the St. Louis Crematory lately, making five successful incinerations since the furnace was put in operation. The body of Robert Martin was cremated with Masonic honors. The ritual was changed to conform to the retort where "the grave" is the common form. Otherwise the services did not differ from those at the grave. The body of Frederick Grafunstein was also cremated.

The Sunday Law Enforced in St. Louis.

The Sunday law as applied to saloons went into effect at St. Louis, Mo., on Sunday last. A few saloon keepers kept open until forced to close by the police, but the law was voluntarily observed for the most part, the Brewers' Association having acquiesced in the law. The same law prohibits work on Sunday and amusements of all kinds, but no effort will be made to enforce these provisions or say except the one against the sale of intoxicating drinks.

REED AND CARLISLE.

They Make the Closing Speeches in the Great Tariff Debate.

The great tariff debate was brought to a close in the House on the 19th inst. Messrs. Reed of Maine and Carlisle of Kentucky making the final oratorical efforts in behalf, respectively, of the protectionists and tariff reformers. A large number of members were absent, many of them, doubtless, ready congressmen, having little pieces in gay color, a few ladies, should hundred House employes, and a number of general ex-Congressmen listened to the discussion. Speaker Carlisle and Speaker Reed, the latter had the honor of the first and last speeches made by Republicans, the former made by Democrats. The speech of Mr. Morrison was deprived of his usual Congressional prestige by the absence on the part of the protectionists. Mr. Baker, as he stood before the Speaker's desk, was the two had a friendly conversation, for Mr. Blanchinger did not allege or hinge that Baker had personally taken part in any immoral or improper transaction, and that he benefit the great corporation, for it would be done by Mr. Insell, of Maine, and Mr. Mulvey were not fully realized in the speech of either, yet both were far above the average and in the language of characteristic, the one that their respective friends could rightly claim for them. Mr. Carlisle's speech was a wonderful array of facts and figures, and that winds blood effect but below that of Mr. McKinley, as a logical presentation of the protection argument, it was a good philosophical discussion of the question. Mr. Reed's speech was one of a strong Republican nature, but had failed to cover the whole ground, and in its enumeration of McKinley and Randall to the details of the bill. Democrats said they thought Mr. Carlisle exerted any previous effort so had made, which was very high praise.

THE EASTERN STATES.

FANNY DAVENPORT has sued the Manhattan News Company in New York for infringement in publishing "La Tosca" as a novel.

CLARA SPARGRAM has brought a piece of land in Philadelphia for $150,000, and will at once proceed to erect a sugar refinery.

IN the Methodist General Conference at New York a motion was made providing that hereafter it shall require a two-thirds vote to constitute an election of Bishop. After considerable debate the motion was carried by vote of 220 to 135.

GEORGE, alias Harry, Benson, the Paris ticket swindler, committed suicide at New York by jumping from the second tier of the Ludlow Street jail to the floor below.

Time and again during the proceedings leading to the conviction of Mrs. Mary Jane Cox, it was declared that to return thither was equivalent to signing his death warrant, and that he would rather one man go back. Benson a swindling career was perhaps the most marvelous of any man in the history of crime. The son of Hon. Joseph Benson, a member of Congress, some years ago, he was given a brilliant education, and at an early age he entered the office in Paris, where he made his mark at once. Before he was twenty-one he was a partner of one of the Parisian dailies, and at the age of twenty-one he had made a fortune, which he drifted at the rate of $10,000 a year for his subsequent criminal career, as he was unable to procure the means of indulging his extravagant and criminal tastes. There he perpetrated a prodigious series of swindles, and finally, in December, 1884, he forged the name of the mail in the City of Mexico by selling $50,000 worth of bogus Paris concert tickets. While a prisoner in Ludlow Street jail he attempted suicide by setting fire to his clothing in his cell.

The greatest gathering in the history of the Presbyterian Church assembled at Philadelphia on the 17th inst. The General Assembly, which began its centennial session on that day, is the largest and most important Calvinistic assemblage ever seen in this country, and its deliberations promise to have an unusually important bearing upon the status of American Presbyterianism. There was a lively contest for Moderator between the venerable Dr. McCosh, of Princeton College, and Rev. Dr. Charles L. Thompson, of Kansas City, the Western man captured the plum by a good majority.

ONE man was blown to pieces and two seriously injured by the explosion of a magazine containing 300 kegs of powder, at Stockton, N. J. Scores of houses were ruined by the tremendous concussion.

MISS SCOFIELD, involved in the death of Frederick Hatch at New York, has been discharged by order of Judge Lawrence.

THE WESTERN STATES.

THE flood in the great Father of Waters has produced widespread destruction of property in Illinois and Missouri. A dispatch from Quincy says:

The flood has done its worst and the expectations of our have been fulfilled. Both levees have broken and over 30,000 acres of the most fertile farmed and hundreds of head of stock drowned. People living in the doomed district, who were forewarned by the danger signals, were forced to flee for their lives, leaving all their household goods and stock to the mercy of the rising. Delirious escapes from the onward rush of the water are numerous, and many have had narrow escapes. The flood has swept many miles of the richest farming land in the Mississippi Valley. The farmers with their families were compelled to abandon their homes and flee to the bluffs for safety.

A TERRIBLE railroad accident occurred at Freeman, Ont. A telegram from the scene says:

The north-bound "thunderbolt" train stopped at Fountain for orders, and hardly came to a dead stop when a caboose and five loaded freight cars, which had broken away from a train on the Canada Southern Railway, which lay two miles away, came dashing down the long grade at lightning speed, crashing into the passenger express and the locomotive and first car in rear on top of the engine, smashing the engine and the first car into a mass of ruins, and the second car was thrown off the track, and the contents were scattered over the depot platform. The engine was in a shed of flame in an instant everything was in a shaded of flame, and the cars were burning in a few minutes, and all efforts were paralyzed by setting fire to his clothing.

Is an interview with a Detroit Journal reporter, Mrs. Obenauer, a prominent temperance advocate, details some of the dreadful doings among the vile dens of the upper peninsula, and blames Gov. Luce for not demanding the enforcement of the law up there.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S address to the Presbyterian assemblies, north and south, gathered at Philadelphia, elicited the admiration of both republican and democratic journals. The former comment on its sagacity, the latter on its good sense and piety. Those are three pretty good attributes, sagacity, good sense and piety.

A DEMOCRAT has occupied the presidential chair for more than three years, and yet it cannot be gainsaid that the country has never experienced a more prosperous era. And, moreover, the signs of the times indicate that this happy era will be continued for at least five years to come. All of which causes the Home Sentinal to reflect that the people can now go on with their business and not be afraid.

THE superintendent of the Industrial Home for girls reports that institution more than full, and suggests that county agents learn from her if there is room before going to the expense of taking a girl there and then learning that she cannot be received. It is expected that the new cottage will be ready for inmates about August 1st next, after which there will be an abundance of room. The board would recommend the county agents to make committing girls to the Industrial Home a means of last resort. Keep out all that can be kept out. If homes could be found in which to place girls who are arrested for some trivial offense, committed, perhaps, because of the lack of a real home, reformation might be sooner accomplished, for no reformatory is equal to a real home—not even the well regulated and conducted one at Adrian. Educate the people in this line. Counsel with good, motherly women of your acquaintance and have the young girl, who though arraigned for trial is no criminal, from the stigma which with all the effort to have it otherwise, even to naming the institution, must attach to an inmate of the Industrial Home for girls.

The Local Option Decision

Another hypocritical so-called temperance statute enacted by a republican legislature has been knocked on the head by the supreme court of this state.

There is but little doubt that the crude, incongruous and fraudulent measure known as the local option act was purposely drawn by such shrewd old prescriptions whisky republicans as Senators Hubbell and J. W. Babcock to supply the supreme court with abundant reasons for declaring it unconstitutional and void. The act was conceived in hypocrisy and was intended to serve only the temporary political necessities of the republican party. Nearly every lawyer of reputable standing in the state pronounced it unconstitutional upon an examination of its provisions. It is incredible that republican lawyers like Hubbell and Babcock in the senate and Markey and Deikema in the house were ignorant of its flagrant and glaring defects. They were probably only too well convinced of its utter inability to stand the test of the courts. They advocated it purely through a desire to give the "grand old party" another opportunity to pose as the "only real temperance party."

The fact that the court was unanimous in declaring the law unconstitutional is a matter for congratulation. It ranks the minority of Dems who enacted it appear in so strong and clear a light that even the most ardent republican partisan will hardly dare to excuse or defend them.—Lansing Journal.

Mills and Kelley Contrasted.

Whatever may be thought of the policy of the Mills bill, it is admitted that he presented his views with candor and ability and appealed to the practical business intelligence of the nation, rather than to partisan or past prejudices.

On the other hand, Judge Kelley is the father of the house, the oldest member of all in continuous service, the special student and champion of the protective policy and one of the most experienced of our parliamentary debaters. Of him much was expected in answering Chairman Mills; but it is obvious from the faint praise given by the regulation organs, from the incisive criticisms of the more independent journals of every faith, and from the outspoken condemnation of some of the ablest Republican journals of the land, that Judge Kelley has disappointed the friends of his policy and done much to alienate the more liberal Republican sentiment of the party, especially in New England and the west. The Providence Journal, the accepted organ of the manufacturers of New England, says that "Judge Kelley is behind the procession," and protests against the party following his "rambling lead." The Chicago Tribune, the ablest Republican organ of the country, declares that Judge Kelley's speech indicates that "the old man has sunk into his dotage," and criticises him as a "benighted, bigoted, chattering old crank." Nor is The Tribune alone in expressing its keen disappointment of Judge Kelley's speech. The Minneapolis Press is equally outspoken in protest against his indefensible stand in favor of the present extortionate taxes on the industry of the nation. In this city, where there is the liveliest interest in legitimate protection, two Republican journals—The Telegraph and The Call—distinctly dissent from Judge Kelley's policy, and not one of the party organs has heartily commended his carefully prepared speech.—Philadelphia Call.

Wages.

In another column of The Star today we give an extract from a recent speech by Mr Sherman on wages, wherein he expands and vindicates by illustration the truth first clearly and concisely announced by Mr Manning in his last annual report to congress, which is that high wages insure a low labor cost in the product.

That truth, as declared by Mr. Manning, is powerfully affecting the whole current discussion of taxation. It is seen in the recent speech by Mr. Mills. It is seen everywhere. When the voter has got well hold of that truth, he will quickly see that what our country needs and what our manufacturers need to promote our manufacturing industry, and really protect it, is to take off all customs taxes on the crude materials upon which our artisans and workingmen are employed.

That is not British Cobden club free trade, or a single tax on land levied to confiscate rent, but is protecting American industries and increasing American wages by American and not by English methods.—New York Star.

An Old Absurdity.

The claim that things are cheaper by reason of a tariff or tax on them is one of the most glaring absurdities ever received outside of a lunatic asylum. A protectionist points out that he can get things so much cheaper than he formerly did—therefore the tariff is responsible for the cheapness. If he would stop to think a minute it might occur to him that the past twenty five years have seen more inventions in the way of labor saving machinery and appliances for cheapening articles than any other period of the world's history and that in spite of the tariff tax articles are cheaper. This would be the result even if the competition for the home market had not driven every manufacturer in the United States to a wholesale and shameless adulteration, which more than neutralizes the cheapness of any article. We eat glucose sugar, wear paper shoes and shoddy cotton clothes, where in the good old days we got decent goods, which would wear.—Rockville (Ind.) Tribune.

Cheap Liquor or Cheap Clothing.

The Mail and Express certainly has the courage of its delusions. It now calls for a Republican caucus to frame such a tariff bill as "will carry the war into Africa" and convert the south to the Republican party. This it promises can be done within a few weeks. The buoyancy of faith and self confidence that causes every expression of such an opinion immediately after the Louisiana election is surely phenomenal. By all means let the Union League club programme be carried out. Let the Republican party declare itself against all relief to our industries except the distilling of whisky. Let the issue between cheap clothing and cheap liquor be thus made perfectly clear to the people as the corner stone of the Republican faith. And then see what the people will do with such a platform on election day.—New York Sun.

Whisky Versus Blankets.

During the war certain internal taxes were imposed as the contribution of the rich to war expenses, and since the war the reduction has been confined to those internal taxes, while the war tariff, be cause of its specific duties, has steadily increased.

The income tax, a tax on wealth, has been abolished; the railroad taxes have been abolished; likewise the tax on express companies and on insurance companies, and now it is proposed by the Republicans to remove the tax on whisky instead of the tax on blankets.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Silly Protection Argument.

It must be a silly man indeed who cannot see that if a tariff lowers the price of an article it cannot "protect" it. There is lots of logic in the argument that a tariff is needed to protect goods when its conclusion is the making of them cheaper! —Rockville (Ind.) Tribune.

Tariff Reform the Wisest.

Even on the low ground of party expediency, tariff reform, projected in a true Democratic platform since 1868, would be the wisest issue, according to the Louisiana verdict.—New York Star.

Dowagiac Times: Times are a little "tight," but it's a wonder that they aren't more so when we consider that our farmers are buying grain and baled hay at exorbitant prices. We are informed that nearly $80,000 worth of grain and feed have been imported here during the past six months.

A twenty-five foot black spar buoy has been placed to mark the shoal three-quarters of a mile southwest by west from Detour Light Sta'n, Mich. This buoy marks a danger to navigation in the St. Mary's River, which can be avoided by vessels keeping on the range made by Frying Pan Island and Pipe Island lights. The bearings are as follows (magnetic): Frying Pan Island north one-half east, one five-eighth miles; Detour Light Station southwest by west, one-quarter west, three-fourths mile.

Turned the Republicans Out.

After a quiet but earnest contest the democrats of Petersburg, Va., last Tuesday elected their entire city ticket, headed by Hon. Charles F. Collier for mayor, by 520 majority, and eight out of twelve councilmen chosen for four years. Thus the entire municipal government passes into the hands of the democrats for the first time in eight years. A large number of negroes hitherto republicans, voted the open democratic ticket. Some of the defeated republicans had been in office continuously for fourteen years. There is great rejoicing among the democrats.

The Tiogs Takes the Broom

CHICAGO, May 23.—The steamer Tioga covered a course from Buffalo at 8 o'clock this morning, winning the race from that city with the new steamer Hudson, and breaking the record at the same time. The Tioga's time from Buffalo dock was 4 hours and 40 minutes. The Hudson came in two hours and twenty minutes later. The race was for a silver cup and give the Tioga the broom for the fastest record on the lakes.

The Explanation We Want.

What the country wants Mr. Ingalls to explain is how it happened that, after supporting McClellan for president, he could bring himself to defame the memory of his dead chief.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Makes Little Difference.

It matters very little whether the Republican convention in this congressional committee names the candidate, since the Democrats will elect the next president, anyway.—St. Paul Globe.

Ingalls' Pathetic Refrain.

Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, still labors under the delusion that the south is in the habit of and marching on Washington. The idea has taken such strong hold of his mind that he forever hums the pathetic refrain, "Johnny, get your gun, get your gun."—New York Herald.

Not Much.

If Senator Ingalls so desires we can give him the name of a man who called Lincoln a clown and Grant a drunken loafer. The name is Murat Halstead. And he isn't much of a Democrat either.—Kansas City Times.

A Day in Bedlamville.

One day Death assembled his grisly court and called on each for a report from all his faithful agents. "Who best has done my work upon mankind?" demanded the monarch. Up rose the Kerosene Lamp, but before she could speak the Toy Pistol put her down and stood up for the King of Terrors. "I—I—he began, but was kicked clear out of the presence by the Empty Gun. "I am here, oh king," he began, but an American Pie choked him in the act of speaking. "Away, thou sniveling death" exclaimed a haughty voice, and the speaker strode into view, all the court protested itself with fear, and even Death made ready to vacate his throne. "And who art thou?" asked the monarch. "I am a Fire Escape." But with the applause that greeted his name a dark shadow fell upon the court, and as a figure of ghastly terror loomed in view, the court took to its heels, and Death, gathering his bones together for a good start, asked who trembling jaws, "And thou?" "I replied the new comer, "I am the Boss. I am the Life Boat." And with a terrible shriek Death fled.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

The Prop. Annie Laura went out last night loaded with hardwood lumber, drawing 11 feet 6 inches of water.

Business continues to boom at the cigar factory, and every report gives the goods a better reputation than before.

In laying your carpets this spring, recollect that we have plenty of old newspapers at five cents a dozen.

Geo. Weaver took a load of potatoes to Manistique on the Velocipede last week, and is to leave with another load this week.

J. S. Smithson, will, God willing, give an address in the Hilton school house, on Sunday June 3d, at 10.30 a. m., standard time.

The Sentinel's appeal for a soldier's monument in the Charlevoix cemetery will bring a generous response from every patriotic citizen.

An effort is being made to raise funds to build a sidewalk on the west side of state street from Horace Hull's corner to the cemetery.

Just received this week, at Geo W. Beaman's drug store, a full line of artists studies, including land scapes, floral, and marine. Call and see them.

Dr. Crouter has secured the necessary signatures to form a connection of Clarion with the telephone exchange, via Petoskey, which will be done at once.

Capt. Guard is considering the advisability of running on the East Jordan route, leaving Boyne City place at 6.30 and 1.30, making two round trips a day.

A. T. Washburne & Co. have the contract for furnishing the Green cottage on the Charlevoix resort with carpets and furniture, which, etc. throughout. It is quite an item of trade.

The W. C. T. U. and I. O. G. T. of this place combine in giving an entertainment at opera house Friday evening, June 8th. A small admission free will be charged. All are cordially invited.

"Best paint, fishing tackle, wire fencing, and Diamond wall finish," are items of business and prosperous which L. D. Bartholomew & Co. would call your attention this week. See eighth page for the latest news.

E. H. Green has raised the east wing of his residence making another bedroom on the first floor, with a stairway from the kitchen, besides enlarging the kitchen. A veranda will also be built on the south side of the wing. The north wing will also be raised in a similar manner.

F. D. Phillips, representing the Charlevoix Cigar Mfg Co. of Charlevoix, called in this week to get some cards printed, and incidentally passed around some samples of his cigars, which the force can recommend as some of the finest.—St. Ignace Watchman.

For little folks beginning to read there is nothing so good as Our Little Men and Women, published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston. The June number is before us and we can say this from personal examination. It is made especially for youngest readers and has plenty of short stories and pretty verses—all easy for the little ones to read and understand. It costs but one dollar a year. The publishers will send a sample for 5 cents—or of their four magazines for 15 cents.

W. J. Green, of Waterford, Mich., has rented the Central House, East Jordan, of W. J. Weikel, and will open it up June 1st. Mr. Green brought with him a carload of new furniture, which in addition to the furniture already there, will make it one of the best furnished hotels in the county.

Oh, no, Bro. Bonteenu, the City of Charlevoix is not so slow as some Petoskey people would like to make you believe. She makes her time just as easy as ever. But then, that complaint is only got with other expressions in Petoskey. They would have the stranger believe there is nothing right in Charlevoix.

W. C. Newman erected two of his automatic bridge gates at Bay City, and one at East Saginaw, and is to erect another at Bay City as soon as the bridge is ready to receive it. Mr. Newman says the gates appeared to give excellent satisfaction, and he has the unanimous endorsement of the committee in charge of the work.

While at Boyne City last week L. C. Hardy had a conversation with Charlevoix gentlemen from whom he learned that D. C. & E. railroad matters were progressing very favorably and prospects are bright for work commencing on the line within two months and being pushed to completion this summer.—Bellaire Breeze.

We neglected last week to call attention to the new advertisement of D. Sherwood, who has heretofore been mentioned in these columns, as having bought a new stock of boots and shoes and located in the opera block. Mr. Sherwood has a pleasant store, is centrally located, and will no doubt receive a full share of the trade of the surrounding country.

Jos. Beauvais expects to be able to handle the boat livery business this season better than ever. With thirty new boats, and with all the old ones repaired, repainted, and made as good as new, he thinks he can meet all demands. Last week his dock and boat house in rear of Beaman's drug store was given some repairs, made necessary by the present low stage of water in the lake.

Geo. Durance and others have held leases from J. Milo Eaton to property on the Eaton addition, of which Mrs. Sweetland now claims possession. Last week some difficulty arose concerning the moving of certain personal property, as a result of which Mrs. Sweetland was arrested last Friday, had a hearing before Justice Kane, and required to give bonds to keep the peace and pay costs of suit. The case will be appealed.

Will Balour is expected here next week to superintend the extension of the telephone line to Clarion, and to repair the line generally where necessary. Will is reported as having reached a very desirable point in the estimation of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company, and is considered one of their shrewdest, most reliable men. For the work in this place he made his first beginning under the direction of the Charlevoix office.

When the steamer Jos. Gordon begins her regular trips in a few days she will be certainly a new boat of different model and finish, larger, and in every way better than when she went into the ways last fall. Her cabin will be similar to the North Star, and about the same size, the pilot house will be located above the engine room, instead of at the extreme end of the boat, and the forward deck will be covered, and arranged for the convenient handling of freight. The cabin will be furnished with new carpet and cushions, and fitted up for the comfort of passengers. Capt. Gaskill is doing the work thoroughly, and with the intention of making the boat fill all the requirements of the Pine Lake trade.

Memorial Services.

The weather was never more favorable, and the boys of the G. A. R. turned out unanimously to witness the observance of memorial day than that of yesterday. The day was cool, bracing and fine, and the people turned out unanimously to witness the ceremonies, and to do honor to our departed and best friends now at rest in the city of the dead.

The program of service was substantially as given in these columns last week, the various schools and societies taking places in the procession. At the cemetery the customary service was held, with an address by the commander, Dr. D. C. Chamberlain, which has been highly complimented.

The floral offerings were numerous and pretty. Many of the graves were handsomely decorated with live flowers in urns, and cut flowers in crosses, bouquets, etc. Among the floral offerings sent from abroad, was a cross from the ladies of Grand Haven for the grave of Lieut. Frank Kanouvis, a member of the Women's Relief Corps; and a bouquet from Miss Christy Simons for the grave of Ellie Crouter. Mr. D. L. Porter sent a bouquet, after listening to the evidence and argument, the Judge charged the jury that the item in question was frivolous, and that they must bring in a verdict for the plaintiff, but left the amount to their own judgment. The jury returned a verdict of six cents, which the court deemed sufficiently under the charge. Mr. Hampton promises a full report of the trial in this week's Independent-Democrat.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Gill White of Boyne City, was in town yesterday.

A. Buttars, J. Milo Eaton, F. W. Mayne, and F. J. Meech, of Charlevoix, were in attendance at the Allen-Hampton libel suit at Harbor Springs last week.

Boyne.

BOYNE, May 28.—Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Thomas rejoice over the advent of a son.

The Presbyterian church received a coat of hard finish last week and is otherwise receiving repairs.

On Wednesday last David Kahun returned from Pennsylvania, where he has resided during the last year.

J. F. Fairchild has built an addition to his house, graded his lot, and otherwise improved his residence.

From the dock of the Boyne City mill, Wm. White shipped 200,000 feet of hardwood lumber, and 100,000 feet of hemlock lumber to Chicago.

Quite a number of our citizens were at Harbor Springs the most of last week attending the Hampton-Allen libel suit. The case was ably contested and resulted in a verdict of six cents in favor of the plaintiff, and as no more costs can be recovered than the amount of the verdict, Mr. Hampton's attorney, Judge L. C. Holden of East Saginaw, paid twelve cents costs and taxed up a receipt in full from the clerk.

The graduating exercises of the class of '88 of Boyne City high school, will be held in the Presbyterian church, Thursday evening, June 7.

Atwood.

ATWOOD, May 28.—Will Byers is home from Ohio.

Charlie Pearl has set out over a thousand strawberry plants. Guess he likes strawberry shortcake.

Chilt Stafford is at work on a strawberry bed. He says that he can grow plants as high as your knee.

Hon. H. Knight has the contract of building the M. E. church of this place.

Bayview.

BENZONIA, May 29.—Crops are looking splendid.

Seeding is nearly done.

There was a spelling school in district No. 6 last Friday evening, and all report a successful time.

There will be a box social at the Burgess school house on Tuesday evening, given in honor of several of the young people who are soon to leave the neighborhood.

Mrs. Edna Kane, Miss Keat and Mrs. I. S. Webster were visiting in Bay over Sunday.

Mrs. Lenox Dead.

When Capt. Lenox returned from his last trip, he found a sad gift very sick, but she appeared to be making a good recovery and he started on a trip to Chicago and Milwaukee. She continued to improve until yesterday morning, when matters took a decided turn, at about 11.00 o'clock she died. Telegrams were sent, hoping to find him at some port, so he could hasten home. She was about 35 years old, and leaves five children,—four boys, and a girl.

NOW FOR BUSINESS.

The Construction of the D., C. & E. R. R. to Begin at Once.

There has been considerable quiet work on behalf of the railroad during the past two weeks, and the directors are "mum" as to what has been done, but from what we can pick up here and there, we have reason to believe that the negotiations are so nearly completed that the contracts are being drawn, and will probably be signed in a few days.

Engineer Beardslee has been engaged by the contractor to superintend the construction, which is expected to begin at Petoskey in about three weeks, and the cars are to be running as far as Ironton within three months.

We hope to be able to state next week by authority of the officers what has been accomplished.

A Late Literary Event.

The latest novel submitted to this office for publication is the product of an ambitious boy, who, in the excitement occasioned by the thrilling adventures of his hero, forgets that such a thing as a spelling book is an existence. The story is written on ragged manila paper, in pokeberry ink, and the impression on the mind of the gentle reader is partial in the extreme. We make no formal announcement of the publication of this literary sensation, but spring a specimen chapter on our readers unaware:

CHAPTER FIFTH.

"Hist!"

The Boy Wonder of the Yellowstone led to the Dred Avenger. The Avenger followed.

"Do you smell blud?" he asked, hoarsely.

"No," was the answer, "but I cent footsteps, Dwen."

The to fell forward on ther faces, as the sound of footsteps seemed to be walking nearer. It was an unfortunate move. The Boy Wonder accidentally pulled the trigger of his sixteen shooting rifle, and the 15 shots ran out in rapid succession.

Instantly there was a wild yell from the throats of the murderous Blackfeet, and they sprang yel ned into the glade.

"We must kill," sed the Dred Avenger. "There is not ever too, or ever shall dy be. cause they stole the butiful Rose blossom from my ranch. I will reveal a grate secret to you, Boy Wonder. I am the father of that girl, an' if you will help me kill these murderous band of dusky Blackfeet and rescue her you can marry her. What do you say?"

"I will," sed the Boy Wonder of the Yellowstone, firmly. "Dis infernal savages are as shall dy. We shall shed ther blood."

"Hist—lasegi!" cried the Masked Terrer, who we shall know in the future as the Slayer of the grit.

Then the ten Indians was treated to a deadly surprise. The two white men drew their knives an' pistols, an' the unfortunate warriors dropped ded.

This is the end of chapter V, and we draw the curtain.—Drake's Travelers' Magazine.

Returned Without Thanks.

Mr. A. E. Olmstead, of Center market, was the recipient of a serviceable holiday present. Just one year ago Mr. O. had a new ax mysteriously disappear from his premises and he could never even surmise what modern Rinka had spirited the useful implement away. Early on Christmas morning he found the missing article tied to one of the outer doors of his residence, and attached to it a bit of brown paper, on which was written, in pencil, the following brief but touching words: "Take you a—d old ax. Santa Claus."—Connecticut Yankee Advertiser.

AUGUSTIN DALY.

America's Foremost Dramatic Manager, and His Leading Lady.

An Enthusiastic Reception Accorded the Daly Company in London.

Mr. Augustin Daly and his company of actors, who not long ago sailed for a long tour abroad, have been so thoroughly established in popularity during the past three or four years that they will perhaps never again be seen outside of the five or six greatest cities of this country and London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and other capitals of Europe. They draw crowded houses wherever they play, and naturally they play only where there is most wealth.

But, as a matter of pride, Mr. Daly and his actors are subjects of interest throughout the country. He has won tiently wrought dramatic pictures that without her public would soon pass out for a time at least, be lost.

Upon their reappearance upon the London stage they were most enthusiastically received. The London correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says of their opening night:

The Daly company was treated to an extraordinary reception at the Gaiety Theater. The extreme enthusiasm and warmth of their reception seemed to overwhelm even Daly when he was called on for a speech at the close of the play. No success yet achieved by Daly in London reached the appreciation given his company upon this occasion. All of his people had made their reputations before, but no one expected that they would be this time welcomed upon their return as if they were coming back home instead of to a foreign audience. Every seat in the theater had been taken, and when the curtain rose the theater was filled from top to bottom with one of the most brilliant and characteristic of first-night audiences.

In one of the principal boxes were his fame and fortune by the hardest of the family of Minister Phelps and different members of the Legation. In the audience there were quite a number of Americans, but the greater number were English people notable in society, literature, and art.

When Miss Rehan appeared she was cheered over and over again before she was allowed to proceed. Mrs. Gilbert was cheered many times. Between the acts London critics were most cordial in their praise, and the leading people were called out at the end of each act.

At the end of the play there was a great storm of applause, and demands for all of the members of the company. After they had all appeared and bowed to repeated cheers and cries of "Brava" there was a loud call for Mr. Daly. He appeared after a moment upon the stage, which had been deserted by the others of the company. When he came down the middle of the stage there was a demand for a speech. Mr. Daly spoke briefly and with great modesty. His little speech was greeted with another round of applause. The audience then moved out slowly, expressing openly opinions which indicated a most brilliant season for Mr. Daly's company.

LESTER WALLACK.

The Veteran Actor and Manager Retires from the Dramatic Stage.

Full of Years and Honors the Great Artist Will Rest from His Labors.

The formal retirement from the stage of J. Lester Wallack, for many years the most conspicuous theatrical figure in this country, has been announced. Edwin Booth played the part of Mr. Wallack's father in Boston, John Gilbert, now in the prime of his powers, and still an active member of the Abbey-Wallack stock company, was the Polonius; Joseph Jefferson, the first grave digger; Lawrence Barrett, the ghost; Eben Plympton, Horatio; Maurice Barrymore, Osric, and Herbert Kelcey (now even the small character of Bernardo. Madame Modjeska and Mrs. Bowers were the queen mother and player queen, and Miss Rose Coghlan was the Ophelia.

The Wallack house has led the advance of the drama in this country for sixty years. Lester Wallack having succeeded his father, James W. Wallack, who died in 1864. Its interests have borne the name. The house now called the Star Theater was built by the elder Wallack, and after 1864 remained under the control of Lester until his retirement from active management in 1887. In the meantime—in 1882—the theater now known as Wallack's, on Broadway and Thirty-first street, was constructed at a cost of $350,000 and was unprecedented in New York.

In light comedy and romantic parts, Mr. Lester Wallack, until the burden of years came upon him, was accepted as our greatest actor. In elegance he was inimitable. His first success was in "Monte Cristo," but his most probable plays were "Romance of a Poor Young Man" and "Rosedale," which he began playing many years ago and has often revived. Educated in England, Mr. Wallack proclaimed and upheld the taste for dramas and actors direct from England, and he claims for his school that has for years been a thing of the past; but it was only very recently that his house began to lag in patronage.

Mr. Wallack is in his 76th year, and he is incapacitated by rheumatic lameness; but his intellect, his vigor, his eye, and in private life his career is still precocious.

He Was from the West.

The following story is going the rounds of the various papers.

A few days ago a middle-aged man in decidedly homespun attire, wearing a felt hat much the worse for wear, and carrying an umbrella of the unfashionable description, entered the shop of one of the leading jewelers in the expensive Rue de la Paix, and asked to see a "river" of diamonds, as the large, broad necklaces are technically called.

The jeweler, very polite, but a little distrustful of the pecuniary ability of his peculiar-looking customer, showed one of the least resplendent "rivers" in his collection; but it was little more than a brook. The stranger rejected it aside.

"Oh! I want something better than that, he remarked, with a strong transatlantic accent, the jeweler thoughtlessly himself to inquire about the price.

The jeweler opened a large casket and displayed a real "river," but in a manner that said very plainly: "Take care, my good man; this was not made for you."

"Monsieur, this is worth thirty thousand francs" was what he really said.

"Take it away," said the stranger, pushing it aside as he had done the first. "I want something stylish. Real stylish, you understand. It's for a lady."

"Mon Dieu" ejaculated the astonished shopman, who did not suppose the gift was intended for a woman.

"I could show you another, but unfortunately it has been purchased by the wife of an ambassador, and it's worth eighty thousand francs."

The man from the West seemed disappointed, and again asked whether there was nothing really first-class in the shop. He was rewarded for his perseverance by a sight of a necklace, the majority of the stones in which were purchased at the sale of the crown jewels last May.

"This, now, will cost you one hundred and sixty thousand francs, or, if you take the other two pieces that go with it, the lot will be two hundred and twenty thousand francs."

"Looks like real stuff, that! Guess I'll take the lot with me from the West."

"I am sorry," remarked the nouveau riche stranger, "because this, you know, isn't really first class. However, as I can't wait, I'll make it answer. You may send it to my hotel. What's your address."

The jeweler took the card handed to him, and when he had read the name was most profuse in apologies for not having recognized his wealthy customer. It was one of the heaviest capitalists of the "Wild West," whose great trait, it is said, is to figure in the approaching Paris Salon.—Paris Letter.

How He Raised Ten Dollars.

"Isaac, I'm dead broke, and I want to pawn my dog; it's all the security I have left," said an old sport to his Jerusalem uncle.

"And My Cott! Shadt of Abram! I don't dake togs, mine friendt."

"Well, you'll have to take one this time, old man. He's worth a hundred, and he'll make a good watch dog for you while you have him! Ain't he a beauty? Watch him, Handsome." And the sport dropped a pink bell-mouthed bull-dog inside the counter, then rolled around behind it himself, and took ten dollars from the cash-drawer. Isaac attempted to stop him, but the pink pet paused and showed the size of his bite me wanted to take out of the frightened Hebrew, and he departed.

"Isaac, just send me a ticket for the dog by mail, and I'll come and take him out in a day or so. Good-bye, old man." And he disappeared through the door.

For about ten minutes the pawnbroker stood trembling with fear while the perspiration stood in big globules on his forehead. Suddenly, a long, sharp whistle was blown from a study down the street, and the dog bounded for the door and disappeared, leaving the Sheeny in a dead faint.

A MINI-TER overtook a Quaker lady and politely assisted her in opening a gate. As she was a comparative stranger in town, he said: "You don't know, perhaps, that I am Mr. ——. Haven't you heard me preach?" "I have heard you try," was the quick rejoinder.—Rare-Bits.

CLINTON BOWEN FISK.

The Boyhood of a Prospective Presidential Candidate.

How the Son of a Blacksmith Rose to the Enjoyment of Wealth and Fame.

A Brave, Bright Lad Who Dearly Loved His Mother.

That Gen. Clinton Bowen Fisk will be the Prohibition candidate for President is as much a settled fact as any prohibitionist ever held a general expectation; that a President will be nominated by his party. The New York Herald in its inimitable way, has been gathering some facts about the boyhood of Gen. Fisk. The investigators are not so thorough as the students who believe in the philosophy of environment would wish, but enough sketches are a relief from the formal, dignified, and usually meaningless accounts of statesmen that find their way into print. The following is the story:

The first sounds that broke upon his infantile ears were the ringing blows of his father on the village forge of Canada, in a little hamlet in Livingston County, New York State. The father, Jim Fisk, was not only the blacksmith but the military oracle of the town, and in his darkest hour home guards he fairly won the title of Captain. The Captain was poor. It was hard work to set wagon-tires and make horseshoes; so he had to supply the expenses of the by no means little family living in the old-fashioned cottage near by the shop.

In spite of an additional burden imposed upon him on Dec. 5, 1825, the Captain was unusually happy. He made the anvil ring louder than ever. He, Jim Fisk was happy, too, and proudly exhibited No. 5, as fine-looking, healthy-looking a youngster as one might wish to see. The new arrival was called Clinton, after Dr. De Witt Clinton, and Bowen, after his mother's family. This mother was one of the best kind ever had. She came from "good old New England stock," and she had a strong pride when complimented on his success, replied, "Whatever there is in me is due to my mother."

Before the eyes of Clinton Bowen Fisk had got used to the light he was taken to the wildest part of Michigan to live in a log house among 2,000 Indians in the dense. The place where the Jonas settled was called Clinton, in honor of the bouncing baby. The Captain bought out a trader, who went away as he went, and managed to pound out quite a little money, which he put into wild land. The first thing that ever made an impression on young Fisk's mind was his father's pride when complimented on his success, replied, "Whatever there is in me is due to my mother."

The place where the Jonas settled was called Clinton, in honor of the bouncing baby. The Captain bought out a trader, who went away as he went, and managed to pound out quite a little money, which he put into wild land. The first thing that ever made an impression on young Fisk's mind was his father's pride when the anvil. He used to sit and watch him by the day.

All were in truth happy in the Fisk family, for things went well until 1831, when the Captain was called away by the Great Commander. The loss of the Captain was indeed a terrible blow to Mrs. Fisk. She was left entirely alone in a half-cleared place with six boys, the oldest of whom was not quite 14. To add to her troubles, her advisers did better with her husband's wild land about all the property he left behind. Her husband, too, had spent she was absolutely in want.

The little family was broken up. The boys were bound out to learn trades, all except Clinton, who had been lame in Michigan, and Clinton, who was then but 9 years old. It was not long before he, too, had to go. Arrangements were made with Deacon Wright, a worthy old farmer, to take the lad, and for his work to give him, when 21 years old, a heifer, a bushel, and $200 in money. Besides all this, the Deacon was to let the boy go to school for three months in each year for the next four years. "Oh, my! such a chance!" exclaimed Clinton. "I'll go, mother, I'll go."

The next morning the lad was put with his bundle behind the Deacon on his horse, and the boy was away to begin back in the log hut. His mother stood in the doorway waving adieus. Now and then the corner of her apron sought her eye, and the boy thought how he forgot good-bye when he had such a chance to become wealthy and famous at 21.

Hard work on the Deacon's farm occupied the little fellow's time pretty much from morn till night. He was a great reader, however, and he took care to see that his mother had told him of the benefit of a circulating library in the New England home, the boy decided to establish one in his neighborhood for his fellow-boys.

The librarian was just 10 years old, and the library was an old shoe box set up in the Deacon's barn. Only 25 cents in the wealth of reading matter. The first volume was a torn copy of Shakspeare, the gift of an old man who was said to be owned by a farmer, who only used it to keep cut leaves on which he wipe his razor. The lad book corn two days for that farmer, and the prize was carried home in triumph and put in the shoe-box library. By saving the eggs he found people Fisk got enough money to buy copies of "Pilgrim's Progress," "Paradise Lost," and "Robinson Crusoe." These, with the dilapidated Shakspeare, were all the books the library afforded, and the circulation was very high.

At the end of three years the boy had picked up just enough learning to make him hunger for more.

The desire of his life at the time was to possess a book from which he could learn Latin. He had set his heart on getting a copy of "Antion's Latin Lessons," but had no money to buy it, or friends to indulge his wish.

One day the lad caught a wild coon. By dint of hard work and patience Mr. Coon was soon taught many wonderful tricks. Among the coon's admirers was one, pieted young Fisk heard that Sandie circus in the village, and decided to go away. He started to walk to that town, not to see the circus, but to sell pet for money to buy the coveted volume. The venture was successful. The boy was sorry for the loss of his coon, but happy at being able to purchase Latin lessons, fairly ran the twelve miles homeward to the bookstore.

There was no one in the village to teach him Latin, but that made no difference. He studied alone by the log light in the cabin at night, and in the day time he filled his pockets with paper on which he had copied his next lesson. The slips served as a cheat, for whenever they could be easily held on the plow handle as the horses stopped a short time to rest attracted the attention of the watchful farmer, who soon would have had an end to that kind of schooling.

At the age of 12 the lad was converted and joined the Methodist Church, in which he has grown up. Very few men have had the honor of doing so much for it or have done it with so much pleasure as he. His conversion and his constant study and reading soon worked a change in the boy's mind. A horse, a saddle, a bridle and $200 at the end of nine years of toil did not seem so wonderful to him as it had to his old home three years before. He determined to see the outer world. After a little he convinced the deacon that it was wrong to keep him from improvement, and the study and travel, and finally secured his freedom.

About the first thing he released boy did was to turn bookseller on the side. Besides his hire earned in the farm, he had his heifer and bushel of corn, for which he paid with copies of the old Knickerbocker Magazine and the Philadelphia Courier. In the latter is the time the Fisk was a Democrat, and he was a serial. Little as was the ambitious boy able to earn by dint of hard work, it supported him while he attended the district school, to do which he was obliged to walk three miles morning and at night, winter and summer. It was proud day for the 12-year-old boy when he entered that school. His study at its fire and while following the plow bore good fruit. He took his place at the head of his class in these at once, and kept it, too, against boys 16 and 18 years of age. Well as he stood in his classes, he did not lead the whole school in declamation. He could soon recite the wonderful power for one of his years every piece in "The American Preceptor and Columbian Orator," the only book of the kind in town. He has them yet among his treasures, in which he was obliged to walk three miles morning and at night, winter and summer. It was a proud day for the 12-year-old boy when he entered that school. Then came a milestone that changed the whole course of his life. It was a great ambition to be graduated from the Albion Seminary of Michigan. He enumerated a list of fellow-competitors in Latin and Greek, and he was ready to undertake self-taught. In preparing for the examination the poor boy was obliged to work all day and study all night. The strain was too much, his eyes gave out, and he was forced to stop poring over books.

To leave Le college, the dream of his life, was a terrible blow, but the young man's talents soon found occupation in business. He advanced rapidly in the duty by the Bureau of Statistics at Washington. In doing so, he is reported to have alcohol 10 per cent. of the insane, 10 per cent. of the idiots, 40 per cent. of the paupers, and 40 per cent. of the criminals, and he then strikes a balance, as follows:

To expense of main-by Federal Troops, raising 1861 army, 2,778,304 men	$1,000,000,000
To pensions and civil pensions	$186,000,000
Total	$1,186,000,000

This, he triumphantly declares, shows a balance in favor of alcohol of $11,583,576, and the Brewers' Journal complacently reproduces the figures, and cries out that "altogether, Mr. Thomann has much the best of the controversy. A more cold-blooded calculation we don't remember to have seen. That Tired Feeling is experienced by almost every one at this season and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is all slower to move than usual. Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, makes the mind clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, gives the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"My appetite was poor, I could not sleep, had back ache, a dull pain across my back, my bowels did not move regularly. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a short line all for me to speak about. It is the best medicine. My pains and aches are relieved, my appetite improved, I sleep well, my bowels are regular and easy." G. F. JACKSON, Rexbury Station, Conn.

FARM AND GARDEN.

USEFUL INFORMATION ON SUBJECTS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

Some of the Leading Varieties of Field Corn, Illustrated and Described, with Hints as to Where These Kinds Thrive Best.

In the accompanying cut are represented two popular varieties of field corn. Fig. 1 shows an ear of Chester County Mammoth, one of the largest varieties of field corn in cultivation, yielding under good culture from 100 to 150 bushels per acre. The ears are large, and the stalks furnish a large amount of excellent fodder.

Burpee, the well known Philadelphia seedsman, says of it: "It is undoubtedly one of the best yellow field varieties for rich land in latitudes where it will grow."

Gregory, the Massachusetts seedsman, says: "It is the Dent sort for the south and the west."

CHESTER MAMMOTH—GOLDEN DENT.

The second figure represents Favorite Golden Dent which ripens very early and does succeed far north. Above many varieties, including Chester County Mammoth, will not mature.

Varieties of field corn valuable for soiling and fodder are Southern Horse Tooth, Sweet Fodder corn, Blunt's Prolific and Thoroughbred White Flint. This latter is of such spreading habit that not more than one kernel should be allowed to grow in a hill. Its great suckering habit, breadth of blade and smallness of stock recommend it as a fodder plant, while for ensilage purposes it is one of the most valuable varieties now grown.

Alfalfa or Lucerne.

An effort has been made of late to boom Alfalfa or Lucerne throughout the country. Now the truth in a nutshell is just this: There is no better plant known for producing a large amount of green fodder and many also use it for hay, but owing to the wooly fiber of its stem it cannot easily shock, cure and housed and many other well known hay grasses. It grows best in warm climates and deep rich soil, and it is not suited to a hard pan or close, compact clay soil or any thin land where its long roots would meet with obstructions. It may be sown broadcast or in drills, but in either case the ground should be rich and well prepared, and not of a weedy character. The first growth of the young plants is slow and feeble, hence it is usually better to sow in quite narrow drills that can be kept clear of weeds the first season. Lucerne has been grown to a small extent in the northern states, but seems especially well adapted to the south. From ten to twenty pounds of seeds will be required to the acre, according to the manner of sowing.

Imported Potatoes for Seed.

I have been somewhat interested in reading the remarks on foreign potatoes for seed in the agricultural papers this winter. I have grown a large number of foreign varieties, importing the seed from England, Scotland, Scotland, Germany and France. The result of my experiments is this: It takes from four to five years to acclimatize a foreign variety, and then we are not sure of having a valuable variety. After several years' trial of all the leading English and Scotch varieties, I have not found one that will compare for productiveness with an average American kind. My advice to potato growers is: Do not plant imported seed if you wish to grow a crop of potatoes that will pay the cost of cultivation.—New England Farmer.

Two Good Tomatoes.

In the cut, Fig. 1 represents Hubbard's Curled Leaf tomato, numbered with the earliest of early sorts. The fruit is small to medium in size, the plant dwarf in habit. The name comes from the fact that the leaves curl as though the plant were drying up

1—CURLED LEAF. 2—HATHAWAY'S EXCELSIOR.

Fig. 2 represents Hathaway's Excelsior, which Vick claims is the best tomato he has ever grown. This is early, medium to large, smooth as an apple, solid, and of excellent quality.

Training Grape Vines.

For training the vine the Kniffen trellis is a popular one and easily made, consisting of two wires stretching from posts; the lower wire three and a half feet from the ground and the upper one two feet higher. After the first season's growth the vine should be cut off just above the lower wire, then a bud on each side is trained along the wire for the lower pair of arms and in due time the upper pair of arms is formed from a bud trained up right to the upper wire in the same way.

MILK COWS AND OTHER CATTLE.

Prices of Milk Cows—Extension of Cattle Growing—The Outlook.

From 1879 to 1884 the annual estimates of prices of milk cows and other cattle advanced yearly, and the decline has since been uninterrupted, without exception for either class of stock. The fall in milk cows has been over 5 per cent., and in oxen and other cattle a decline of 10 per cent. in the last year.

The extension of cattle growing, according to Statistician Dodge's recent report, has been normal, corresponding very nearly with increase of population. Though prices have been low and heavy losses have occurred in some of the ranch districts, there is an abiding faith in the future of the business, grass being the cheapest and most abundant source of beef, yielding perhaps nine-tenths of all that is produced in the country. Corn has a relatively small share in the beef making in any country. The northwestern states are giving more and more prominence to cattle, the wheat interest relatively declining in the older settlements.

Milk cows are receiving rather more attention than in recent years in the eastern and middle states, and are increasing everywhere with the advance of population. There is some recuperation from the depression felt in cheese making districts, New York especially, where prices of their products ruled so low.

The belief is expressed, in the report quoted from, that the stock interests of the United States are in a comparatively prosperous condition, with a prospect of advance in prices, especially those of cattle.

The Asparagus Beetle.

We are informed that the common asparagus beetle appeared the past summer in such vast numbers in New Jersey that the owners of some rather extensive plantations of this excellent vegetable have almost concluded to abandon its cultivation in consequence of the depredations of the insect named. It seems almost unaccountable that any cultivator of asparagus should know how to quickly destroy this well known pest, inasmuch as it has been published hundreds of times during the past twenty years. The remedy is dry caustic lime scattered over the plants in the morning when wet with dew. The larva of the asparagus beetle is a small, soft, naked, thin skinned grub, and the least particle of lime coming in contact with this causes almost instant death. If the grubs are killed there will be no beetles.—American Agriculturist.

Fancy Flower Gardens.

The inclination is growing for carpet beds and fancy flower gardens. To readers who are contemplating efforts in this line the accompanying cut may prove suggestive.

The plan presented is designed for a square plot of ground, but can be adapted to other shaped plots with a little contrivance. It possesses the merit of novelty, and with a careful arrangement of plants is exceedingly effective.

PLAN FOR FANCY FLOWER GARDEN.

Star beds in flower gardens are much patronized, as are also crescents, horseshoes and other fanciful shapes. The star bed is effective when occupied with foliage plants arranged so as to give the visitor a view in the center of the bed and the more subdued and sober foliage at the tips of the star.

Brine Salting Butter.

A practical advocate of brine salting for butter recommends the proportion of one half pint of salt to a gallon of water in making the weak brine that is used to wash the butter, a little more or less salt being immaterial. Churning is stopped while the butter is in the form of granules about as large as a pinhead; the buttermilk is drawn off, and at least enough of this weak brine is put in to float the butter, and the buttermilk is washed out, the brine being drawn off and the process repeated till the brine runs clear. The strong brine to be next used is a saturated solution—as much salt as the water will dissolve. The washing brine is thoroughly drained from the butter, and enough strong brine is poured on to cover it. In this strong brine the butter stands till every single atom is covered with a film of brine. Great difference of opinion prevails in regard to the advisability of brine salting. As good authority as T. D. Curtis falls to see either its utility or economy as compared to applying the salt direct.

Along the Country Road.

Make certain that your seed is clean. There is nothing more disastrous than sowing foul seed.

Cover unsightly places with vines. Where grape vines will not serve, there are many annual vines that can be easily grown.

Don't select all the disagreeable bits of work for the boys you wish to keep on the farm.

Sick hens should be taken from the rest of the brood, and be carefully cared for separately.

Lettuce requires to be grown in a moist soil and in cool weather; for this reason the best is obtained only in the spring or early summer.

To grow carrots to perfection there is needed a good, light and well enriched sandy loam.

Linseed cake, in moderate quantities, is good for milk cows.

The pig on many dairy farms is an important item.

Ward off the First Attack

Of any disease and you need never fear a dangerous condition. A Sound Legal Opinion.

E. Bainbridge Monday esq., County Atty., Cly Co., Texas, says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice but was cured by timely use of this medicine. I am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life." Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c, and $1. at Crouter's drug store.

POLITICAL NOTES AND NEWS.

ANOTHER "strange case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," has occurred at Alpena. Some time ago a spark from a D. B. C. & A. locomotive set fire to the humble home of Mary Rajnosic, and besides burning up all her worldly effects, it incidentally incinerated one of her children. The poor woman sued the company—that is Gen. Alger—and got a verdict for $186. But the company—Gen. Alger—the Mr. Hyde, as it were, appealed the case to the supreme court. However, the good Dr. Jekyll, ex-Gov. Alger, the philanthropist and would-be president, accidentally heard of the case and sent the poor woman a $200 check, remarking that he hoped she would win the suit if her case was just. As a railroad magnate Gen. Alger has no soul, but as a man who is hunting the presidency with a brass hand he is after Polish votes.—Cheboygan Democrat.

An Honest Protectionist.

There is none of the hypocrisy of the average protectionist about Mr. Blanchard, of Chicago. Mr. Blanchard is engaged in the lumber business, and like, with delightful candor to what extent and why he is a protectionist:

"I am high tariff on lumber, but low tariff on copper, iron, wool, cotton, leather, glass, etc., and I will tell you why. I own timber land and sell stumpage; besides I operate largely myself and this tariff puts money in to my pocket. I get $2 per thousand for my stumpage and $2 per thousand for my boards. I have just sold 5,000,000 feet of lumber. Now $2 a thousand on 5,000,000 feet is just $10,000. That is the difference to me between high tariff and free lumber. I am high tariff on lumber, I am! This blessed tariff, they tell us, is all for the benefit of the American laborer. What do you suppose I did with the $10,000? Divide it with my workmen? Not a bit of it. I put it right into this corkskin wallet, I did! Of all my employees I am the only protected American laborer. Wages depend on supply and demand, my friends, not on tariff taxes. When you see two men after one boss, wages are low; when you see two bosses after one man, wages are high. That is the whole of it—the theory, principle and practice.

Cause and Effect.

Never had a party a better chance to revolutionize a state than the Republican party have just had in Louisiana. But Democrats who had property interests threatened by Democratic legislation, and Democrats who hated the other side, forgot everything in view of the outside pressure that the Republicans brought upon their state. They would not rebel and they would not divide while the Democrats were accepting a party which kept up an assault against their state on sectional grounds. As to Virginia, the Republicans made the mistake of allying themselves with dishonesty there. Regards the whole south, their attitude is one of sectional hostility. The density of population and its relative importance of the futility, if not of the injustice, of this policy is amazing. Sherman, Candler and Ingalls have just thrown away a promising a chance to carry turee, if not more, southern states as could well have been thrown away.

The original tactics in this respect, as originated by Lincoln, were to try to disregard the south as a voting population—to abuse it, in fact, unjustly, with a view of making it so easy to appeal to a spirit of animosity, the remnant of the war, toward the Democratic section. As a cold blooded politician's policy this might have had some reason then. It has none now. The south will cast a vote as the north is to be gained by bloody shirt agitation, which is now so thoroughly neutralized by two votes repelled by such methods. Ordinary sagacity, therefore, should have taught that while everything is repelled at the south more strongly, if possible, than ever, the time has come when nothing is gained at the north to offset it. But ingrained habit and hidebound prejudice are too much for ordinary politicians. They go on in their old way. This election in Louisiana is the first response to it.—Boston Herald (Ind.).

The South Still Solid.

There is still no rent in the solid south. Louisiana elected Democratic state officers and has a Democratic legislature, notwithstanding the combined opposition of the Republicans, the Louisiana lottery and the anti-monopoly clique in New Orleans. Gen. Nichols, the governor elect, is a reform Democrat, in full sympathy with the views and feelings of the national Democracy as represented by the president and a majority of the party in the house of representatives. Warmoth, the defeated candidate, was governor during the carpet bagger rules and robbed the state, and his republicanism is a credit to the people of Louisiana.—St. Louis Republican.

Sure but Steady.

Fortunately, to secure a majority in the senate, the Democratic party is not compelled to rely on success in Kansas next winter. The Democrats are not quite ready to elect the successor of Senator Plumb. They are getting there gradually, but it will take a few more years to overthrow the Republican majority in the dominant state. There is no great hurry. The growth of Democratic principles is sure and steady.—Kansas City Times.

DEMOCRATIC VICTORY.

ITS ASSURANCE IS IN THE AIR ABOUT US.

The Republicans Understand It as Well as the Democrats, and Will Move Heaven and Earth to Prevent It, but Their Task Is a Hopeless One.

It is in the air

The Democrats breathe the assurance of it, and swell with patriotic pride. The Republicans feel it in "their bones," and their leaders are flying about like a suddenly beheaded hen trying to raise false issues and throw dust in the people's eyes. Any close observer of politics can see that the shrewdest Republican leaders see defeat in the existing condition, and are exhausting the resources of mendacity to prove that the south is lawless and rebellious, and that the president is an "enemy of American industry."

It is a plain case that if the current can be kept moving as now it will cover Cleveland will be re-elected by an overwhelming majority, and with him a good working majority in congress. If any man says this is mere assertion, let him consider the following cold comments on the situation—and even the most venomous Republican does not deny that they are facts:

First, every prediction of evil made by the Democrats in 1884 has been completely falsified; and though the condition of the country is not yet what the friends of Democratic principles desire to make it, it is much better than it was in 1884, 'our enemies themselves being judges.' This simple and undeniable fact spoils two-thirds of the Republican ammunition. Every prophet of evil is discredited in advance. Every Republican orator in this campaign will have to use the first half hour of his speech in explaining why his predictions of '84 did not prove true, and how, though he is proved to have been a false prophet then, he is a true prophet now; and then the people won't see it. What a godsend a great national calamity just now would be to them. It is plain why they do not want taxation reduced and the surplus wiped. It is plain why they do not want a change in August or September, when it will be too late to do any good.

The Democrats are in power and the country is somewhat more prosperous than in 1884; that means 500,000 votes in the close states. And by a queer coincidence, wherever there is the reverse of prosperity it is plainly due to something Democrats are striving to correct. Look where you may for a strike, a lock out or a labor riot, you will find its cause in some "trust," "pool" or combination opposed to Democratic policies. The people see it, and will vote accordingly.

Secondly, and of far more effect, the Democratic party, from ocean to ocean, from Canada to the gulf, is united as it never has been since 1852, and only twice since 1860 has a united Democracy been beaten. Every other defeat has been due to division in its ranks. Look at New York. Tilden carried it in 1876 against a defection of the most powerful party in the city, and Cleveland, in 1884, in spite of another division, but now the party is that great state is a unit, and to a united Democracy New York is a certainty. The April elections show Indiana to be safe, and five states, only lately Republican by overwhelming majorities, are now so close and doubtful that the party will move in each one calling for the nomination of a "favorite son" to "carry the state." Michigan, Minnesota and Iowa, with a fair home made on reducing taxation, will not be able to invoke Indians with them and money this year.

Third factor, and a very important one, is that the Republicans no longer have the offices to bank on as they did three years ago. If, with every postmaster a Republican document room, every custom house a treasury for "supplies," every collector a party agent, every gauger and supervisor a recruiting officer and all the immense departments at Washington back of them, they were still beaten in '84, what will they come out in '88, with all these supports cut off? It is true the offices will not be made as effectively partisan for the Democrats as they were for the Republicans; but all the same their force is not used against us as it was.

Fourth in the list of forces working for the Democracy we should place this. Republican malignity against the south has reacted; and sensible men very naturally ask why, if there is not freedom and security there, northern men by thousands and northern capital by tens of millions are hastening to locate south, and why have the very states which are most denounced gained a thousand millions in assessed property within two or three years? Men do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles; neither do they expect to reap rich rewards by investing in a lawless country. The northern men turn south as south turn never before. Almost every business man in the border northern states has a friend or correspondent in the south, and knows more of the real situation than the "bloody shirt" orators are willing to tell him. While the people are free to admit that many evils sprang up in the south as the result of war and undone reconstruction, they very naturally ask how we could expect any people to improve their condition more rapidly. The frantic follies of the Wind-gulls tribe will not cover up their party. The issue is defined. Even Gen. Sherman is compelled to recall his brother John that dancing in the "bloody shirt" is out of date as a means of winning votes.

There are many other signs of the times which indicate Democratic success. The people are aroused against incorporated oppression as never before; they intend to find out the meaning and effect of all these "trusts," "pools," "syndicates" and other financial devil fish which have absorbed all the profits of agriculture and commerce, and by a deep mysterious influence they turn to the Democratic party. Very few of them, perhaps, could tell why they think it; but all the same they do know and feel that the party which created most of the monopolies, the party which never sends a poor man to the senate if it can find a millionaire which boasts of thirty senators jointly worth $120,000,000, and which moves at the "poor and ignorant masses of democracy," is not the party which will grant relief. The quiet, thoughtful laboring men have made up their minds to deal as hard a blow as they know how at these bloated "trusts," and this is the year they have picked out to do it. They have so far got just a taste of thorough investigation and reform, and they like it. The senate and the solidly organized money power has stood in the way and prevented all but a mere beginning; but the sufferers see the obstruction and propose to kick it out of the way. It will be a tremendous kick, too. It will be the great historic kick of the Nineteenth century. All the currents tend towards Democratic success. It is not in the power of the discorbant Republicans (who have announced in advance that they consider their chief candidate a liar and will "force it on him") to stay our triumphal march.

THE CONVENTION HALL.

Where the Delegates Who Will Nominate the Next President Will Meet.

We present herewith front and side views of the immense hall in St. Louis in which the coming Democratic national convention is to be held. All accounts agree that St. Louis is exerting herself as never before, and men of all parties are contributing liberally the intention being to make the occasion a great Mississippi valley festival rather than an exclusively Democratic gathering. The hall is the north nave of the great exposition building, but off from the rest of the structure by temporary partitions; it stretches all the way from Thirteenth street to Fourteenth street, east and west, and is 200 feet long and 100 feet wide, but only 235 by 97 "in the clear," as the architect phrases it—that is, the east and west measurements are taken from the inside of the walls. When the seats are all in, there will be seats for 10,000 persons.

LOOKING DOWN THE FRONT AISLE.

Four entrances for spectators and four gates will be at the west end, on Fourteenth street; for officials and reporters at the east end, on Thirteenth street, as the platform is at that end. The arrangements for hearing and reporting are the best possible, and it is claimed that the acoustic properties of the hall are so perfect that all the vast multitude can hear any ordinary speaker. Beginning at the east end of the room are the seats behind the platform, which have to be moved the other to the height of thirty feet; then comes the platform proper, for chairman and officials, and in front of that, westward, is a lower platform with tables and chairs for the reporters. An aisle upon twenty feet wide extends from this to the two new entrances seats, and these are two inches to the foot clear back to the west end of the hall. On both sides of the platform are rows of boxes, entered from row passages behind them; above these private boxes are the rows of seats for spectators, and above them again the great galleries, in which the seats rise circus fashion. The entrances will be for so that all but ticket holders can be easily excluded, but many extra can be provided which can be instantly thrown open, so that in case of fire or panic from any cause the hall can be cleared in a few minutes. It is estimated that if all available standing room be utilized, about 18,500 people can witness the proceedings.

A SIDE VIEW

Three aisles run the length of the hall, the middle one six feet wide. The committee have had all the supports thoroughly examined and tested, and their strength is guaranteed to be sufficient to remove even the possibility of accident. The entire interior will be decorated in the most lavish manner to an extent never before seen in a national convention hall. The exterior will be decorated somewhat less lavishly. The citizens of St. Louis have arranged for parades, decorations and illuminations on a scale which will make the days of the convention an almost continuous fete, and committees will be appointed to direct arrangements in advance. Chicago, on the other hand, will take no pains to entertain the delegates, the people there being too busy with their own affairs, and the city is full of strangers who are there for business purposes. The Democratic committee will be obliged to make the best of it, and it will do so, and the convention will be held in St. Louis.

YOUNG DEMOCRATS.

THE PROPOSED GRAND COMBINATION OF POLITICAL CLUBS.

Something About the History of Such Organizations—The Great Good to Be Accomplished by Co-operation—Now Let Every Democrat Go to Work!

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, May 30.—The young Democrats of this city have inaugurated a movement which is at once so simple and effective that it must rapidly become national. It contemplates nothing less than the organization of all the young Democrats of the country in a congeries of clubs, maintaining a thorough connection with each other, and devoted to inquiry and discussion that will keep each and every member being rooted and grounded in the bed rock principles of the faith. This is the way the Democratic party in the United States was originally organized and gained its early victories, and this system is all it lacks to change probability to the glorious certainty of an overwhelming victory in November next.

Political clubs are as old as politics. Originally, of course, they were secret, for there was no press and speech was not free. But nowadays only the business management need be a private affair, and the more open the discussions are the better for the country, for true democratic principles have such strength and merit in themselves that the more they are discussed the more firmly do the plain and commonsense people grasp them. The Young Men's Democratic clubs of New York, Brooklyn and some other cities call upon the young men elsewhere to join with them for intelligent agitation in favor of reduced taxation, an economical administration of the government, strict construction and rigid enforcement of all laws for the protection of the people against "trusts" and corporations, a reservation of public lands for actual settlers and true civil service reform. These are principles the organized forces of Young Democracy can hold in common, and those who oppose them and beat down Satan under their feet.

The history of the first Democratic clubs in this country is a good one to repeat. When the fathers framed the constitution they said it (and not the private notions of Adams or Hamilton) should be the supreme law of the land, and that it should be strictly construed on this principle: The government shall not exercise only such powers as are granted by this constitution, and such as are necessary to carry into effect the granted powers; but "all other powers are reserved to the states respectively or the people." Language could not be plainer. Yet when the Federalists gained a majority in congress they proceeded to set aside Monster Meetings in Ireland to Protest Against the Pope's Rescript.

IMMENSE meetings were held throughout Ireland on Sunday, May 27, to indorse the resolutions of the Irish Catholic members of Parliament on the Papal rescript.

William O'Brien, M. P., addressed an enthusiastic meeting in Limerick. The meeting took place in the cathedral yard. The Bishop of Limerick addressed 15 the Mass meeting characterizing the Attention as one directed against the Pope. Two other prelates were present, but several sent letters of apology and indorsement. Resolutions similar to the Irish Catholic resolutions were adopted in Kildare, Mr. Dillon addressed a monster meeting. The energy were absent, but letters of sympathy were read. Mr. Dillon said the meeting was a Fenian meeting (O'Dwyer, he said, was with the exception of O'Dwyer, and perhaps one or two other Bishops, the hierarchy of Ireland were with the people in their great struggle. At a National meeting held in Bray, Mr. Michael Davitt said: "Irish Catholic women are no longer to be treated as chattels, and Irishmen or bales of goods destined wherever they are by the views or commands of any other foreign potentate." At Waterford Wexford and Clonmel meetings were also held, and the resolutions following the Irish meetings adopted.

AN INDIAN OUTBREAK FEARED

Settlers Fleeing from Oelrich, in Dakota Territory.

ADVICE from Bismarck, Dak., are to the effect that "Gov. Church received a telegram announcing great danger of an Indian outbreak at Oelrich, and that residents and ranchmen were leaving. He immediately informed the War Department, and directed Col. Thomby to proceed to Oelrich and investigate. Col. Thomby reported that the scare was started by friendly Indians, who told the ranchers to leave the country, as the young Indians were going on the warpath. The women and children have left Oelrich, and the town is wild with excitement.

A Day in Congress.

THE Houses, in committee of the whole, devoted the entire day's session on May 30 to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the pending amendment being the clerical force of the Civil service under the civil service law. After a somewhat protracted debate the amendment was adopted by 95 to 71. The amendment provides for the additional clerks to be employed, and increases the appropriation by $1,840, and increases the appropriation for contingent expenses of the House from $1,000 to $5,000. On the adoption of the House the Republican members went into caucus. It was decided to recommend the adoption of the Blair educational bill, and the policy of the party on the tariff question was fully discussed. The Senate was not in session.

THE EASTERN STATES.

A FIRE in Hackett's chair factory in Philadelphia caused a vat of varnish to explode, destroying the building. Loss, $10,000. John Curley and David Hayton, colored, were killed.

IT is reported that the association of boss printers of New York have agreed to cut the price of composition. If this is done the journeymen printers say they will strike.

The Episcopal Diocesan Convention, at New York, Rev. J. H. Vincent and Rev. J. N. Fitzgerald were chosen Bishops on the ballot. Dr. Vincent is a native of Alabama, and is 56 years old. He was educated at the Methodist Lewisburg Seminaries and at the Lewisburg Wesleyan Institute. He established in Illinois, in 1865, the Northwestern Sunday School Quarterly. In 1868 he was elected Secretary of the Sunday School Union, a position he still occupies. Bishop Fitzgerald is 50 years of age, and has been in Newark, N. J. He studied at the Newark Academy and then at Princeton College. On leaving college he studied law, and was admitted to the bar. He was admitted to the church thirty years ago.

Dr. H. W. Tryon, pastor of St. Paul's Church, Cincinnati, was elected Bishop by the Methodist General Conference, at New York, on the 25th.

A RECEPTION was given at Philadelphia to the members of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian General Assemblies by Mr. and Mrs. Wistar Morris at their residence in Overbrook. President and Mrs. Cleveland were the guests of honor. The President made a ten minutes' speech, closing as follows:

I am here to greet the delegates of two general assemblies of the Presbyterian Church. One is called "North" and the other "South," but I cannot help wondering why this should be. These words, so far as they denote separation and estrangement, should be obsolete. In the councils of the nation and in the halls of legislation, we have seen the representatives of both sections, from the soldiers who fought for the North and for the South are restored to fraternity and amity. This fraternity and unity is taught and exemplified by our church. When I shake hands with some of the leaders of strength and usefulness that harmony and unity prevail in our church.

The President spoke with much earnestness and to a close, ringing voice that was heard all over the lawn. He was frequently applauded, but his reference to the question of union and fellowship were greeted with cries of "good" and "hear, hear," from members of both assemblies.

THE ancient corps, "The Honorable Artillery Company of London," the oldest probably in the world, as it was founded in 1537, of which the Prince of Wales is now Colonel and the Duke of Portland Lieutenant Colonel, has sent a delegation to America to represent their corps in the festivities of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Massachusetts in Boston during the 250th anniversary in Boston June 2 to 7 proxi.

THE Most Bishops—Ire. Newman and Goodwell—were elected by the Methodist General Conference at New York on May 24.

Rev. John F. Newman, D. D., was born in New York City Sept. 1, 1826. He graduated at Wesleyan University in 1847, and entered the ministry in the Methodist Episcopal church the same year. He was the editor of the New Orleans Advocate from 1866 to 1869. He was pastor of the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church in Washington, D. C., from 1869 to 1872, and chaplain of the United States Senate from 1869 to 1871. He was General Grant's pastor from 1869 to 1872.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Goodell is regarded as one of the most conservative ministers of the church. He has been for fifteen finishing seasons in the Troy Conference. He was born in New York in Dutchess, N. Y., in 1845 and his entire ministry has been spent in and around that city.

THE temperance question gave rise to a long and animated debate in the Methodist General Conference, at New York. The discussion ended in the adoption of the following resolution, which was ordered to be placed in the discipline of 1888:

We are emphatically opposed to the enactment of laws that propose by license, taxing or otherwise to regulate the drink traffic, because they provide for its continuance and afford opportunity for its extension. We are opposed to the prohibition of the liquor traffic in some of its forms. There was a strong and spirited discussion of the resolutions upon this subject, and it was evident that while there are a few who sympathize with pipes and dejeuns ale fate, a large proportion of the minority voted against the resolutions on other grounds than those of sympathy with or approval of the social use of smoke.

A PERIOD train on the Rock Island Railroad was thrown a bridge near Randolph Point, Mo., crashing into a ravine twenty-five feet deep. A short time after a freight on the Hannibal and St. Joseph went through a bridge which adjoined the Rock Island, and the wreck was followed by the first wreck. A trackman, an engineer and two tramps were killed, a fireman fatally injured and two other trainmen badly hurt.

In a suit brought by a citizen of Omaha and backed by your Irrepressible Alliance for an injunction to restrain ball-playing on Sunday in the inclosed grounds of the Western League Club, Judge Wakeley, of Omaha, Neb., decline to issue an injunction, holding that base-ball was a clean and wholesome sport, that the noise of the crowds in cheering at critical periods of the game would not be considered a nuisance such as to justify interference by the courts, and that the question of prohibiting Sunday games was one for the criminal courts to settle.

THREE prisoners in the Monticello (Ind.) jail—Eli Chamberlain, Albert Benson, and Robert Catterson—assaulted Sheriff Joseph Hutchinson and escaped. The Sheriff ventured the corridor to lock the prisoners in cells when Chamberlain trained him with an iron bar and all three rushed into the jail office, seized a window and jumped. The Sheriff's injuries are fatal. Chamberlain is under indictment for murdering Rita Wittenberg, his sweetheart, at Reynolds, two weeks ago. Benson and Chatterson were tramps awaiting trial for highway robbery. Both have served time in the Michigan City Penitentiary.

The question of woman suffrage in Washington Territory came up before Judge Nash at Spokane Falls on a recent day. The Judge delivered a lengthy opinion, in which he decided that the act of the Territorial Legislature extending the franchise to women is unconstitutional.

A CONVENTION of delegates to form a National Bar Association, assembled at Washington and adopted a constitution. It provides that the name shall be known as the "The National Bar Association of the United States," the objects of which shall be to promote the unification, so far as is practicable, of the laws of the various States which relate to matters in which the people of the United States have a common interest; to promote uniformity and to promote the improvement of the judicial system of the States and of the United States, and to consider the necessity and practicability of the establishment of international codes between the civilized and commercial nations. Col. James O. Broadhead, of St. Louis, was elected President for the ensuing year.

THE corner-stone of the divinity building of the new Catholic University of America was laid at Washington City last week. Cardinal Gibbons and a large number of Archbishops, Bishops, priests, scholastics, and seminaries were present, and took part in the ceremonies. Bishop Spalding of Peoria made the principal address. He predicted a speedy end to the war between Catholic Church and the conclusion of his address said: "And now has our work begun, we conclude than with the name of her whose generous heart and enlightened mind were the impulse which has given to what had been long hope deferred and a dreamlike vision an existence and a dwelling place—our Gwendolen Caldwell." Bishop Keane, rector of the university, here stepped forward, and, uncovering his head, said: "I request that a sealed letter from the Cardinal to Miss Caldwell, expressing the profound gratitude of the church for her gift of $20,000, which, he said, enables her to commence the erection of our Catholic University." Bishop Keane then handed Miss Caldwell the medal given to her by the Pope. A lot of gold and about two inches in diameter.

THE United States Treasurer paid out nearly $15,000,000 during May on account of pensions alone, notwithstanding which fact the amount of receipts over expenditures during the month was about $3,000,000. THE POLITICAL FIELD.

A RECENT dispatch from Milwaukee to the Chicago Herald says:

The principal political sensation in the Cream City is the springing of George W. Peck's name as the Democratic candidate for Governor, which took place in a manner unknown to all people who enjoy his personal acquaintance. Mr. Peck is a Democrat of the old school and of practical local fame, which he has shown in the manner in which he has kept Joseph Pulitzer, Jay Gould, Fortune, and Rogers off in a modest, unassuming way from the Democratic office, and has come out with a letter signed by, and suggesting the names of other Democrats who ought to succeed, has so effectually cloud him in public estimation that if the Democratic party should be so foolish as to ever would probably be nominated by acclamation.

Pike, of Oshkosh; Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. H. Gould, of Lake Geneva; Railroad Commissioner, L. N. Drake, of Milwaukee; Insurance Commissioner, S. M. Bixby, of New Richmond.

The following delegates were chosen: T. C. Richmond, Madison; S. D. Hasselquist, Madison; E. J. Durant, Racine; Amy Kellogg, Morse.

The platform adopted denounces the liquor traffic, insists upon the enforcement prohibition laws and their enforcement by a party friendly to them, opposes all forms of license, and opposes the issuing of free passes to public officers. The woman suffrage plank was defeated after a warm debate.

The National League at a meeting indorsed the manifesto recently given to the public by the Parnellite members of Parliament. The Bishop of Dubuque, of Limerick, has sent a letter to the Mayor of Limerick, giving warning that Catholics who attend the Sunday League meetings will be guilty of a grave sin in the sight of God. Some of the papers of the Papal rescript. The Bishop regrets that the national organization should be formed for the sake of upholding the plan of campaign, which is condemned by the Pope, and the action of the Parnell. The letter has caused a sensation.

THE WORLD AT LARGE.

The discussion over the papal rescript in the Lincoln, Neb., branch of the Irish National League has led to an open rupture between Bishop Bonacum and Patrick Egan, delegate-at-large to the Republican National Convention. The bishop is out in a scathing Egan's political trickster and denying him the sacraments.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued a crop report under date of May 31, which shows that fall wheat is very promising, though much depends upon the character of the weather up to the middle of June. The season has been very backward. Regarding spring wheat, the outlook is not so promising. The report is that, although the harvest may be a week later than usual, the prospects are that the seed-bed will render it fully up to the mark. Of spring grains oats promise to be the most productive, and steadily declining in popularity. Barley is increasing in acreage.

Reports from many points in the Northwest show that the late cold rains and light frosts have done much damage to growing crops.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The river and harbor bill was reported to the Senate on the 21st with amendments, and was ordered printed and recommitted. The committee amendments increase the bill about $1,500,000. The appropriation for Dunkirk, N. Y., harbor is $50,000; Charlotte, N. Y., $60,000; Genesee River, West Virginia, $1,500,000; Grand River, Ohio, $1,000,000; Ashtabula, Ohio, $50,000; St. Croix, Wisconsin and Minnesota, $50,000; Mississippi from Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of the Illinois River, $150,000; for improvement of the Illinois River, $150,000; for river and harbor at Grand Haven, Mich., $50,000; Grand Rapids, Mich., $50,000; Mississippi River, $500,000; Mississippi River from Minneapolis to Des Moines Rapids, $500,000; Illinois River, $50,000; for the purchase of the upper Mississippi River improvements, $1,000,000 per year, West Virginia, $1,000,000, in stock, as also in the appropriation for Port Clinton, Ohio, Senator Hoar introduced a bill which provides that no person or corporation shall perform, or cause to be performed, any manual labor or business on Sunday to the disturbance of others—works of necessity, mercy, and humanity excepted—nor shall any person engage in any play, game, amusement or recreation to the disturbance of others on Sunday. A fine is imposed for the violation of the provisions of the act. Section 2. It is made unlawful for any person or corporation to demand or receive any money for service rendered in violation of this act. Section 3. Provides that the District of Columbia, Mich., as a part of delivery, will be subject to the provisions of the act. Section 4. Provides that the Supreme Court of Illinois, Mich., declaring that certain vouchers issued by the Treasury Department are not to be missed by any such decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Section 5. Repeals.

The National League at a meeting indorsed the manifesto recently given to the public by the Parnellite members of Parliament. The Bishop of Dubuque, of Limerick, has sent a letter to the Mayor of Limerick, giving warning that Catholics who attend the Sunday League meetings will be guilty of a grave sin in the sight of God. Some of the papers of the papal rescript. The Bishop regrets that the national organization should be formed for the sake of upholding the plan of campaign, which is condemned by the Pope, and the action of the Parnell. The letter has caused a sensation.

THE WORLD AT LARGE.

The discussion over the papal rescript in the Lincoln, Neb., branch of the Irish National League has led to an open rupture between Bishop Bonacum and Patrick Egan, delegate-at-large to the Republican National Convention. The bishop is out in a scathing Egan's political trickster and denying him the sacraments.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued a crop report under date of May 31, which shows that fall wheat is very promising, though much depends upon the character of the weather up to the middle of June. The season has been very backward. Regarding spring wheat, the outlook is not so promising. The report is that, although the harvest may be a week later than usual, the prospects are that the seed-bed will render it fully up to the mark. Of spring grains oats promise to be the most productive, and steadily declining in popularity. Barley is increasing in acreage.

Reports from many points in the Northwest show that the late cold rains and light frosts have done much damage to growing crops.

Twelve sugar-makers of Toronto, Canada, are on a strike for an increase of wages.

Arrangements have been made for the striking employes of the Burlington road to discuss the question of continuing the strike. It was generally voted to prolong the contest.

The $5,000,000 bond offer accepted by the Treasury Department last week for sale of the bonds have not been delivered.

The Emperor of Brazil appears to be stricken with paralysis. He has lost the power of speech, and his breathing is labor. Oxygen has been forced into his lungs, and caffeine injected under his skin, with the result that he became less inert and partially conscious, but there is little hope of his recovery. Prince Augusta of Saxe-Coburg, the husband of the heir, and Dr. Charcot, of Paris, have been summoned to the Emperor's bedside, and the last sacrament has been administered to him.

Mr. Edward Gilpin, of the district including Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Colorado, Indian Territory, and New Mexico, has filed a charge that the fraud on land is $200,000 short of the amount which will be required to make the Jayhawker State whole, and be able to pay pension vouchers hereafter presented until an appropriation is made by Congress.

The Cleveland and Mahoning Valley Road has shut down on the Youngstown and Ashtabula, the money to be used in constructing a double track from Youngstown to Cleveland. Work on the Northwest has materially improved. Wheat in Southern Minnesota is now in a better condition than though possible a month ago.

SIDE-LIGHT FLASHES

Thrown on the Temperance Field from Many Points of View.

Vans of Personal Effort in the Liquor War—A Pennsylvanian's Experience.

Alcohol as a Medicine—Temperance Notes from Everywhere.

Prohibition in Kansas—Whisky, Beer, Corn, and the Farmer—Some Personal Observations.

A correspondent sends us the following account of some successful "missing" against the saloons in a Pennsylvania village which, he says, may be suggestive in showing what may be accomplished by unbroken personal effort and as demonstrating that continual agitation is the life of the war against the saloons:

Our village is a small mining town of about 1,500 inhabitants, and has a large population for liquor business. The boroughs, though young in years, are old enough to have a ring. The first counsel employed by the ring to defend a case in which ever sat its executive session was one to which I was present himself, and he was a well-known Democrat, who had a pail of lager—beer, I suppose, he called it—and their own will and way that they did not. Prohibition was then a phenomenon when twenty-eight applications for license were made in our borough at one of the year. There are a few good and law-abiding citizens in our village, but none at first felt the courage to go to the Court House and fight the ring single-handed. Only a few years ago, a correspondent begins his letter, there were only two men in the borough who were willing to stand up and vote against the license question. Now, Wilson Jones and Dr. Hughes, of Ohio, begin, many assisted, and the ring has grown to be quite a small minority. The ring, by means of the liquor traffic, has grown so powerful that it has ventured to defy the law, and has actually brought forward many witnesses to prove that no license was necessary, and boldness were challenged, the character of applicants questioned, and finally the license was granted.

"Nothing of the sort ever united the temperance people of Edwardsville as the remonstrance work. Men who were cold as ice for ever, timid and half decided came out boldly for the cause and signed on to the list. During a fortnight of suspense and anxious waiting on both sides for the decision of the court, there was no faltering, regretting, and all kinds of prophesying as to the result. But when the decision was known that twenty-one applicants were refused and one had withdrawn, a shout of joy went up from the people, a cry of rage on the other was heard all over Edwardsville, and the Democratic Judge, Frank Murphy has worked in Edwardsville. Even the saloons have shown that the cause is right and shall have a fine fellow. But when a few unexpectedly for practical resistance, the saloons began to tremble.

"Many was the attempt to remonstrate, spending time, money and energies, when the law's arm was too feeble. Then I resolved to favor "the trade." But to be sound in order to be advantageous, besides this, all practical work is agitation, and agitation in these times is the one thing need needful.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in the Detroit Opera House, at Detroit,

ON THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1888,

At 11 o'clock a. m., to nominate candidates for state officers and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1885, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 200 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 200 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.
WM. J. MCGEE, Assistant Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix County is entitled to four delegates.

CLEVELAND AND THURMAN.

At 2:00 o'clock yesterday afternoon Grover Cleveland was renominated by acclamation for president of the United States, by the convention at St. Louis, amidst great enthusiasm, after which the convention adjourned to 10:00 o'clock this morning. At 2:00 o'clock this afternoon Allen G. Thurman of Ohio was nominated for vice president on the first ballot.

MRS. CARSE has been appointed a member of the Chicago board of education.

THE democratic convention to nominate state officers will be held at Detroit, July 19th.

JOHN G. CARLISLE's great tariff speech in the house of representatives may be found on our inside pages.

MR. BLAINE has written another letter declining the nomination for the presidency, but his letter is like Gen. Grant declining a third term,—he will not accept unless there should arise a combination of circumstances to make it necessary.

THE president gives respectability to his party not on account of civil service reform, because such reform is ideal; not on account of economy in the government, because his party is as yet prodigal in its disbursements, but for the reason that he uttered the truth of taxation in the ear of congress, though that utterance might split his party in twain. The act made Cleveland a political hero and champion.—Chicago Herald.

THE prospects for a good degree of prosperity in the land this year are excellent. There is but one drawback. Too much blood is being drawn from the arteries of trade by taxation, compelling the resort to credit and interest paying. If the surplus money in the treasury could be restored to use and the drain stopped by the reduction of taxation, business would start forward with great leaps and the face of prosperity would take on a smile extending from ear to ear.—Bay City Press.

THE funny man of the Sentinel would make it appear that President Cleveland was in attendance at the national democratic convention at St. Louis, by saying: "The telegraph informs us that President was there." We have no doubt there were many presidents (of societies, associations, municipalities, etc) there, and that there was immense cheering, and that the bands played, but President Cleveland was not there. Bro. Smith seems to retain much of that bitterness of spirit which caused him to write four years ago that "the rebels have captured Washington," and would make the people who read only his paper believe that the national democratic convention this week was a rebel convention, plotting disunion and the destruction of the nation. Getting a renomination by acclamation after a three years' crucial test of his mettle, is far more to the credit of President Cleveland, than the wavering, undecided policy of Mr. Blaine, who undoubtedly will not be nominated by acclamation by the republican convention June 19th.

A Republican Scheme.

A committee of the national W. C. T. U. is urging the repeal of all internal revenue taxes on liquors, and quotes Miss Francis E. Willard, their president, as saying "the amount of the tax is about equal to the surplus in the U. S. treasury,—let both be wiped out together." These ladies would leave the burden of tax on all necessaries of life,—on everything required for the sustenance of the family of the sober, industrious laborer, and make as cheap and free as possible the damnable stuff that poisons the laborer's heart, and palsy's the hand that ought to furnish bread. The idea that the traffic should not be recognized is nonsense. It should be recognized, and handled in a way to be regulated and controlled, if not prohibited. If the ladies undertake to settle the surplus question that way, they will not find much sympathy and assistance in the democratic camp.

Wellington R. Burt, East Saginaw.

SAGINAW CITY, May 25, 1888.—In the Hoyt block, corner of Genesee and Washington avenues, East Saginaw, may be found any day in the week, and at nearly any time of the day, one of the busiest and brightest men in the state of Michigan. The visitor passes up to the third door, and going a short distance along the hall finds himself facing a door on which is painted the name, "W. R. Burt. A tap on the door, and a pleasant "come in," is all the ceremony that's needed to secure an audience with the gentleman who is now so prominently mentioned in connection with the democratic nomination for governor. On entering the room the visitor is surprised at the remarkable simplicity and even plainness of the surroundings The furnishings would be rejected by an ordinary business man as too common for his taste and position, but the gentleman who greets you as you enter is just as plain and unostentatious as the surroundings. There are no cards or letters of introduction needed to reach the presence of this busy man; no ushers or clerks to politely inquire your business and perhaps to tell you that "the gentleman is engaged." The visitor ushers himself in and is received with unaffected frankness and cordiality. Wellington R. Burt is a man readily approached; a good listener as well as a good talker; is well informed, and deals with all questions in a manner characteristic of one who handles large affairs and depends upon his own common sense in doing so. His voice is pleasing, and in a quiet, frank style he talks business, politics or any other subject of particular personal interest, while on subjects outside this limited range he is genial, social, polished man of the world. There is something fascinating about him, and the visitor who meets Mr. Burt a stranger parts from him a friend. He is one of the finest specimens of Michigan's self-made men that one will meet anywhere —one that wealth has not corrupted and made hard, selfish and austere. He takes kindly interest in his neighbors, in young men, and poverty is not a bar to his good offices. All classes of people go to him for counsel and advice in private and public affairs.

This great Saginawian was born in Genesee county, New York, in August, 1832 and when seven years old his parents moved to Jackson county, Michigan. His father died when he was 13 years of age. After working on the farm until he was 22 he set out to see something of the world and traveled extensively. After an absence of three years he returned to Michigan and located 320 acres of land in Gratiot county, beginning the work of making a farm in what was then a wilderness. In 1858 he went into the lumbering business for him self and located in East Saginaw, which has been his home ever since During his entire career he has been an honest, hard-working, and virtuous man, wronging no one but lending a helping hand to others. Hundreds of men in this country owe their start in life to Mr. Burt. The laboring classes hold Mr. Burt in high esteem; indeed no man in Michigan is more popular with the workingmen. The secret of this popularity lies in the fact that he is always a just man in his dealings with others. He has been at the head of great labor-employing industries for over 20 years and himself had a day's trouble with his men; but on the contrary has helped many of them to better their condition in the world. His great strength lies in the fact that his own individual success and prominence has never removed him above the people. He is with them to-day as close as when he earned his living by honest toil, they know it and appreciate it. If all of the beneficent acts of this great Saginawian were known and paraded in public press like those of other individuals, his charities and public gifts would figure up thousands of dollars annually, but like the plain, quiet, unostentatious man that he is, he prefers to do good deeds for the pleasure they give.

In no place is a man seen to better advantage than in his home life. Home is a kingdom which man rules and enriches to his liking. Mr. Burt's home on Genesee avenue is the pride of the eight-hundred adjoining all its elegance and luxurious surroundings, there is a democratic simplicity within that charms every visitor. He has a family of which any man would be proud, and they have all been taught that true refinement comes not from mere wealth but rather in doing and acting their part in the world with honor and pride. In this model household honest labor is respected by every member, and unaffected hospitality awaits every guest. Large and grand as the residence is, it is always the same unpretentious, cozy, home place to all friends. In short, it is a model American home.

The most remarkable characteristic of Mr. Burt is his influence with the people. Call it magnetism, if you choose, but there is something about him that draws the people toward him. No man in Saginaw, or perhaps in the state, has a larger following of close personal friends, who stand ready at all times not only to follow but to honor their chief. He is fair with every one and is always true to his friends. If he was a politician he would be a power in any party, but there is nothing of the politician about him, as he is too frank and open with the people. This is why the people believe in and respect him.

If Mr. Burt is nominated for governor on the democratic ticket he will go out of his own county with four thousand majority, an increase of about three thousand in the usual democratic majority. He will bring to the support of the democratic state ticket nearly all the young men, most of the labor and greenback vote, a large following of republican friends, and also a class of business men that no other candidate can reach. On all public questions his views are those of the prudent business man and not of the scheming politician. He believes in removing the inequalities and the injustice of class legislation, in a radical reduction of taxation in all instances, and on the tariff question he is with the great conservative wing of the democratic party, who want to see tariff reform an accomplished fact. He believes in reaching a basis of tariff for revenue only, gradually but surely, so that the changes demanded by the people will be brought about with as little disturbance to business interests of the country as possible.

If he is elected governor, Mr. Burt will be one of the best executives the state has had in twenty years. He will bring to the office the splendid business ability that has made him the successful and brilliant man he is to day, and this combined with his personal presence and genial and polished manners, his wide knowledge of state affairs and his closeness to the people, will make him a governor of whom any state would be proud.

Rusk's Campaign.

The ill advised friends of Governor Rusk, of Wisconsin, inspired perhaps by their champion himself, are taking very energetic steps to induce the people to think that Governor Jerry possesses admirable qualifications as a presidential candidate, and that as an earnest of the honor held in his acting he will have the Wisconsin delegation pledged in his favor.

We note, however, that thus far the schemers have failed to stir up any great amount of enthusiasm in Governor Rusk's behalf. And this failure is the most natural thing in the world. A man who has shown himself unfitted to meet the problems coming before him in his capacity as governor is not well calculated to inspire sympathy in his aspirations for a higher office.

The fact that no organized effort has been made by Governor Rusk to stampede the pinery dens which have disgraced Wisconsin's name is a notable instance of his incapacity. His duty has been pointed out to him frequently enough, but he neglected to perform it. Until he does show something like an intention to respond to the demands made upon him, he is unworthy of even such an empty honor as a Republican presidential nomination would be.

As a "favorite son" Governor "Jerry" has little to commend him, as a conspiration favorite he has still less. The Wisconsin Republicans would do well to try again.—St. Paul Globe.

A High Tariff Needed.

Armed Pinkertons are again pouring into Pennsylvania to keep down the wealthy protectionist workingmen of that state, and are supported by a strong body of deputy sheriffs. It takes a very high tariff to pay Pinkertons and sheriffs.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Democracy Cannot Lose.

We are fighting the last campaign on the old sectional lines. The Democracy stands for Union and the future Republican opposition represents a worse disunion and division than that of open and avowed warfare. In such a cause Democracy cannot lose.—St. Louis Republican.

Getting Weaker Day by Day.

It begins to look as if the Sherman boom, if it is well enough to go at all, would have to be carried to the Chicago convention on a litter.—Chicago Herald.

We Must Have It.

We believe that Democratic success in 1888 is necessary to the welfering of the country.—Atlanta Constitution.

☞The June issue of The American Magazine is an exceptionally brilliant number. The illustrations and letterpress are excellent, and the contents varied and entertaining. Among the notable features is an interesting and finely illustrated paper on "Our defenses from an Army Standpoint" by Gen. O. O. Howard, Mrs. Geo. John A. Logan contributes a graceful article on "The Art of Entertaining," a subject she is well qualified by experience to handle, and George Edgar Montgomery has a charming paper on "Dickens on the American Stage" that will be read with much interest by the great army of the distinguished novelist's friends. This article is illustrated by portraits of leading actors, showing their conception of Dickens' characters. The month furnishes Zitell's Cocke with the text for a pretty poem "Jean" "Barbados: The Elbow Island," is described in an illustrated paper by Dr. William F. Hutchinson.

The Hillsdale College Herald says that "when Ed F. Parmelee, '83, went to Chicago last week he lost a live journalist. He is now assistant manager of The Daily Bee, San Diego, and lives paper is southern California. We congratulate the Bee upon getting hold of Mr. Parmelee as an associate. He's no drone. A land of perpetual sunshine and perennial flowers is just the place for a live, and if the Bee doesn't find honey it will not be Ed. Parmelee's fault. He will come around as lively as the best, and when there's nothing but an old dry jackass talk to walk on, he'll shape it into something useful, and all the while be cheerful. We never saw the day how he used to help the Herald. When we ran ashore and didn't know what to do for copy, he would just go at it and make up something good "out of his own head." He's worth more to Michigan to attend commencement, spend a little time with old friends, and entice his fellow citizens out West. We shall be glad to see him, but sorry to lose that excellent lady."

Woman's Suffrage Meeting.

James Thomson Andrews of Chicago will give a lecture in the M. E. church next Saturday evening, commencing at 8 o'clock. Subject of lecture: My Partner. This is not a temperance lecture but in favor of woman suffrage. Andrews comes highly recommended and a rare treat is promised. Come and bring your partner. Of this lecture Francis E. Willard says: "It is brimming with fun, good will and noble sentiment and the person who would not be converted is a hopeless case." Mrs. France J. Stone of East Jordan says: "My Partner is a scholarly appeal for woman's suffrage with enough of the humorous to make it palatable to all."

Charlevoix Will Celebrate.

Gets Back at the Bottle.

THE BOTTLE.

Harness me down with your wire bands,
Be sure that the cork is tight,
For I scorn the power of your pithy hands,
As the sunshine scorns the night.
I'm only a bottle of ginger ale;
I make no boast of fame,
But I burst all barriers, strong or frail,
And I get there just the same.

In the darkest depths of the bottle tight,
My bubbles are doth play,
And when I burst in the dead of night,
The devil of death hails away.
I've no muscles to weary, no strength to tire,
My spirit no power can tame;
I come not in lightning and shriek and fire,
But I get there just the same.

THE VICTIM.

Pick it up tenderly,
Cork it with care,
Fashioned so slenderly
Looking so fair,
Sit not beside it,
It's a snare and a sell,
It's hatched destructiveness,
Concentrated hell.
Only a "busted" bottle,
Only an eye in a sling;
Only a bandaged optic,
That aches like a scorpion's sting,
Only a face all gory,
Only a vision pale,
Only a little story,
Of a bottle of ginger ale.

The Debate in Congress.

The debate will be long and, in the nature of things, educational. To be educational in this era of surface reading is to be stupid and dry. The people cannot follow the debate, for it will be the policy of the minority not to elucidate but to conceal the main and all subsidiary questions. But the pivotal idea is fixedly in the public mind. The unnecessed tax, on a $5 pair of woolen blankets is $3.15, or 63 per cent. The people stand like the ass to mass, waiting for some one to speak—make it $3, $2.50, take it at $2. The people of the Pacific coast pay seventy-five cents a ton of tax on all their soft coal. Salt, lumber, sugar and iron bear a crushing tax. The sugar tax is just now shelting the most onerous corner that the world ever saw, and 60,000,000 people are paying at least a cent of bonus to the trust on every pound of sugar, besides paying five cents of tax for every seven cents' worth bought. The representative in congress who, on any excuse, votes against the Mills bill, votes to retain all the vices of the present fiscal administration of government. There is now enough money in the treasury to pay the huge expense of this government for one year, and the extra inflow is over a third of a million a day. The law maker who stands before the people advocating a continuation of this Turkish method of tax collection is both knave and fool. He is knave because he is cruel to the poor; he is fool because, like the monkey in the fable, he is tearing out the beams that support him in order to hurl disaster on his fellows.—Chicago Herald.

Farm Exports Cannot Be Protected.

What is it that fixes the price of the farmer's wheat? It is the Liverpool market. Let the price of wheat go up in Liverpool, then watch how quick it will advance in Chicago. Let the price of wheat in Liverpool decline, and the market in Chicago will respond instantly, and go down. We cannot begin to consume our agricultural productions. We produce a good deal more than enough to supply the United States, and are obliged to depend upon a foreign market for the disposal of the surplus. No tariff can keep the farmer from surplus production, because the price at which it is sold is fixed by competition with all the producers of the world. We now consume at home about 70 per cent. of our agricultural productions and export about 30 per cent. of them. Now, mark this: Whenever any country produces more than it consumes and has a surplus, the price of that surplus will fix the price of the whole product. Therefore, so long as our farmers produce a surplus (and this they will always do) the price of the agricultural productions in the United States will be the same as the world's price. There is no escaping this conclusion. You may pile tariffs on wheat, corn, beef, pork and cotton mountains high, and it will not increase the price of those products in this country a penny—not a farthing.—Mr. Ford, of Michigan, in House Debate.

They Yield to the Pressure.

The Massachusetts Republicans look upon the tariff question with somewhat different views from those of their Ohio brethren. The Ohio Republicans cling to the war tariff like a heathen to his idols, but the Massachusetts Republicans say they "favor a proper revision of the tariff." The Massachusetts Republicans seem to be in a measure alive to the needs of the country. After stating what the Republicans have done towards tariff reduction they say that the "reduction of revenue to current needs of the government the Republican party will continue when in power." The spirit of the Massachusetts platform in this direction is commendable, but the means proposed through the abolition of the whisky tax to reach the desired end is condemned by the masses of the people.

The Massachusetts Republicans found the pressure of public opinion so great that they could not avoid demanding tariff reduction. They saw $150,000,000 surplus annually piling up in the treasury. They know, as all sensible people know, that to effect a remedy the root of this evil must be reached. It will be only a matter of time before there will be no difference of opinion as to the methods that must be adopted to prevent the accumulation of the surplus.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Protectionist Fallacy Exposed.

The fact of the matter is, as every observing man knows, that the tendency of prices is to change constantly, not on account of the taxes imposed by our war tariff, but owing to improved means of transportation and production. Prices have declined everywhere. And the prices of agricultural productions, which our war tariff does not benefit to any appreciable extent, have declined out of all proportions to those of manufactured commodities; and, as usual, the farmer has got the worst of it. Prices have declined the world over; they have declined in free trade England and in China as well as in the United States. But the proposition it make is this: that the price in this country of nearly every article on which our war tariff is imposed would be a good deal cheaper today if the tariff were reduced. —Mr. Ford, of Michigan, in House Debate.

John Sherman's Boomerang Thrust.

John Sherman will hold in contempt all who question the legality of the election of Rutherford B. Hayes to the presidency of the United States. OUR TRIBUTE.

Memorial Day—1888.

BY A. P. F.

THE swords are red with
The offered lives we laid away—
Memorial of a vanished foe.

Death is the cannon's iron throat,
Still is the bugle's martial note,
No hostile flag this air will float.

Peace, blessed Peace!
She sits supreme
O'er all the land. No bayonets gleam;
War's iron scenes are but a dream.

And they who nobly died to save,
Who for the land their life-blood gave,
Their beats and flowers we'll deck each grave.

THE HEART OF MEMORIAL DAY.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

"I REALLY wish," said Mrs. Maxwell to her daughter Belle, "that you would be more polite to Mr. Curry."

"I suppose, mother," replied Belle, with the independence of a true American girl, "that I could be polite to a horse or a cow, if there was anything in particular to be gained by it. Now please tell me why I should try to be polite to that sarcastic, cold, heartless creature, Leander Curry."

"Why, Belle, you ought to know. He is worth a quarter of a million."

"Indeed! I'm glad, then, that he's got one recommendation. I don't know of another."

The widow sighed and looked rather distressfully at her handsome but plain-spoken daughter.

"Belle Maxwell," she said, "more and more every day do you grow like your poor father. He was just so proud-spirited—just so independent."

"I'm glad to hear it, ma! I hope I may always deserve to be spoken of in that way. To be the daughter of one of the heroes who fell at Chickamauga, fighting for the Union and the old flag, and to resemble him as I grow up—I think that is glory enough for a poor girl like me. Poor, dear father!—how well I remember how fine he looked in his Major's uniform when he took me up and kissed me, as he went back from his leave of absence just before that battle! I was only a little thing; but the recollection will never be blotted out from my memory."

Such a reminiscence as this very naturally set good Mrs. Maxwell crying, and for a moment the subject of their conversation was forgotten. It was brought up again by the ring of the door-bell.

"That's his ring," said Mrs. Maxwell, hurriedly drying her eyes. "Now do try to treat him well. Just think what a chance it would be for you, Belle! I know he likes you."

"This was rather more than the widow had said yet to her daughter on the subject. She was a good-hearted woman, but the prospect of having Mr. Curry for a son-in-law had rather unsettled her usually level head. She had made a great many plans in secret, based on that desirable event. The death of her husband in the war had left her poor, with nothing to rely on but her daughter's musical abilities, the exercise of which now gave the two a very comfortable support. Belle was a good girl, as well as handsome and clever, and cheerfully labored for her mother and herself. She was probably as happy in her independence and in the love of her work and her home as any girl in the city. Some years having passed since the fall of Major Maxwell, among the country's heroes, the widow's grief had become blunted, and she, too, was enjoying a certain happiness. That is, she had been, until the advent of Mr. Curry and his marked attentions to her daughter threw into the good woman into a flutter of excitement and anticipation. Nothing is so disturbing to the average person as a remote and uncertain prospect of wealth; and the truth is in this case that Mrs. Maxwell lay awake the greater portion of several nights, speculating about what would happen should Belle should become the rich Mrs. Curry.

"The young lady herself was not in the least disturbed by any such prospect. The man was positively disagreeable to her. He was gentlemanly in his ways, cold and unemotional; one to whom generous impulses were strangers. He was devoted to the care of the large fortune that had been left him by his uncle, a great war contractor, and was constantly looking out for chances to swell it by speculation. This was the last man that might naturally be expected to fall in love. But "match" was to be a single lady," and the first sight of Belle Maxwell effectually did the business for Leander Curry. He had been prevailed upon, against his custom, to buy a ticket for a charity concert, in which "home talent" was largely to be represented. The gem of the evening proved to be a song by Miss Belle Maxwell, which was heartily applauded and encored. The gem of the evening proved to be a pure sweet voice of the singer, made a deep impression upon the vast audience; and they actually struck some sparks from Mr. Curry's flinty heart. He came, he heard—and was conquered. He became a frequent caller at the humble Maxwell home; and this condition of things had been in progress for some months at the time that our sketch opens.

All this time we have left Mr. Curry standing at the door, while our necessary explanation has been made. He might well be standing there, for all Miss Maxwell would do to admit him; and the widow, seeing Belle's perfect indifference, answered the ring herself, in a great state of vexation. She presently returned with the caller, who saluted the young lady, receiving a distant return.

Mr. Curry was practical, at least, and never wasted time. The particular object of his call was made known before he had taken a seat.

"Miss Maxwell, I have lately bought a pair of fine trotters, and have not yet had them out on a long ride. I am going over to Ridgford to-morrow, and I should be pleased to have you accompany me. It is a business trip, but I think it will be a pleasant one. It will, of course, take all day."

The widow's heart leaped. Things were getting on admirably. For her daughter to be seen riding with Mr. Curry behind those trotters was almost as good as an engagement or marriage. She had never heard of his taking a lady out to drive.

The next instant Belle made a reply that gave her mother a chill.

"I am greatly obliged to you, sir, but it would be impossible for me to go to-morrow. I have promised to sing at the public Memorial Day exercises in the square.

"You should not decline on that account," the mother eagerly put in. "You can get them to excuse you. There are others that can sing. Go with Mr. Curry, by all means.

She got looked at both her mother and the gentleman with a quiet but severe dignity. She was a dutiful child; but there are occasions when a child reproof from child to parent is the correct thing; and it was so now.

"I shall sing at the exercises, as I promised," she said, decidedly. "Even since the war closed, from the time I was a little girl, I have taken a part in the observance of this day, and I shall do so as long as I live. You surely can't mean to advise me against it, mother?"

"No, Belle, you know I would not; but this is an unusual invitation—"

"It must be declined," was the firm interruption.

Mr. Curry was very much vexed, and was indirect enough to show it. He was also foolish enough to say some things in his vexation, which, while correct by representing his own narrow views, were very impolitic things to say in this house.

I am much disappointed, Miss Maxwell, at your refusal.

She did not think it necessary to say that she too was sorry; for she was not sorry, and this was the last man on earth that she would tell a white lie to, for the sake of mere politeness.

"And I am rather surprised," he pursued, "that you should prefer such a meaningless show to a pleasant ride in the country at this charming season.

Meaningless show. The blood of her heroic sire flushed up in the girl's cheek at the words; but she kept back her temper, and kept silence.

"It has always seemed to me to be a very silly parade of false sentiment," the unfeeling man went on. "The soldiers enlisted as a mere matter of business; they were paid for their work; those that did took that risk at the start; the account was closed some years ago. For sensible people to get up these observances every year, to sing, and pray, and palaver, and have a great fuss with flowers over a pack of dead soldiers seems to me the very foam of folly. I wish—

He never had the opportunity to express his wish. Belle Maxwell bounded from her chair with flashing eyes and burning face.

"Mr. Curry, such sentiments are disgraceful!" she cried. "I won't sit here and listen to them. Mother, if you get any pleasure from this man's company you may stay here and enjoy it! I must be excused."

She abruptly withdrew to her own room.

On the following day Mr. Curry drove his splendid trotters over to Ridgford alone, thinking along the way a great deal about his investments and alternating these reflections with others about the curious nature of girls.

Belle Maxwell participated in the tender and touching ceremonies of the day; and many remarked that her voice had never sounded so sweet as when she sang "They Sleep the Sweet Sleep of the Brave."

A tall young veteran walked by her side as they went to the adjoining cemetery to witness the ceremony. There was much talk between the two, in the course of which she observed that he had not called upon her lately.

"No," he said; "and I believe no man has but Mr. Curry."

"If you mention that odious man's name to me again, I'll never speak to you," she said.

The tall young veteran was very glad to hear this, and he governed himself accordingly. And he conducted himself generally in such a way toward Belle Maxwell that before another Memorial Day the two were married.

Some years have elapsed since then. Nothing in our country is more common than a sudden reverse of fortune; yet such examples are always surprising. It will not astonish the reader to learn that the tall young veteran has become a middle-aged inventor, and has accumulated a great fortune by his patents; but it may occasion a mild surprise when it is stated that Mr. Curry lost every dollar in speculation, and is now earning ten dollars a week in the employ of Belle's husband. And old Mrs. Maxwell, sitting by the happy fireside of her daughter, with her grandchildren about her, has often confessed to herself that Belle's way was the best.

The Blossoming Summer Toilet, with Its Spring-Trimmed Head Ornament.

The six heads in the accompanying sketch are illustrative of the newest styles in hair dressing. It will be seen that, while they are similar in general effect, the details differ. There is a similarity in the shading of the brows and in the height of the pile at the rear. The ostrines produced are not to harmonize well with nearly all faces, and in that respect they are an improvement over those of several seasons. In every instance the hair is brushed up from the nape of the neck and massed on the crown of the head. Bows of ribbon are the usual adornment, instead of the fanciful pins and combs formerly in use. In connection with this subject it may be formally announced that the Psyche knot is an exaggeration that has already been dismissed from favor. How much has been seen of it in the West I do not know, but throughout the winter and spring it was an infliction to eyesight in New York, especially at the theaters and on the upper Broadway promenade. It was affected principally by actresses who began with a close imitation of the twist of hair seen on the classic statues of Venus, Minerva and other Grecian goddesses. Very soon they began to magnify and elongate this rendezvous, until it achieved a positively comical aspect. Close cropped heads, fluffy curls and other extensions of hair are also going into taboo, and out of a hundred well-dressed ladies one ladies not more than a proportion of one to two will be seen differing materially in her hair dressing from the examples given. So, my lady readers, arrange your hair after these patterns, and be sure that the result will not only increase your attractiveness of head but will also put you into conformity with the best fashion in that respect.

At the current picture show in the Academy of Design I was struck by the positive fact that the best of our painters, copying and supposedly improving on the prettiest female models they can get, do not begin to put on canvas as handsome young women as those daily seen alive on the same promenade. I sat down and sketched two fair visitors at the exhibition, partly to illustrate this idea of mine, and at the same time to show the representative toilets. Their frocks were what, in Fifth avenue parlance, are called smart. Their hats were very coquettish ones, in straw. One wore a black bodice, which set off her fine figure conspicuously, while the other contrasted a broadly striped waist with a light, speckled skirt. They may be taken for about the nobblest female duds that the metropolis produces this spring. And it was undeniable that they were finer to look at than any of the heroines of the canvases which they inspected.

The season's fashions are truthfully said to be distinguished by no special characteristic, unless it may be a study and an art of dressing having come to the conclusion this year that it be well dressed one may have a distinct individuality. This tendency makes a peculiar development in the lop-sidedness of many costumes. One half of a dress need not match the other in its shape, colors, or even altogether in its kind of fabric. There used to be a female vocalist on the stage who had a high soprano voice and a low alto voice, each about as distinct from the other as though they belonged to separate persons. Her method of utilizing this phenomenal duality was to wear a dark, rich Spanish dress on one side of her body, and light, airy German dress on the other. She also displayed her hair in the same manner by wearing a wig blonde on one side and black on the other. She would come out on the stage to sing, presenting the German side to the audience as the German would sound. Then she would turn half about surprising the people with the contrasting brunette, and in that aspect sing the Spanish romanza. Our fashionable women do not yet divide their hair and their voices into two individualities, but they do present more contrasts on sections of dress, and I don't know but they have been suggested by the popular story of Jekyll and Hyde.

The ball toilet is apt to embody this idea of one-sidedness, or what a turfman might call a cross-match costume; but we have seen a gown made altogether of a single kind of material. There is not a scrap of trimming of any sort not composed of the foundation fabric. This dress also illustrates the newest outlines of a decolleté bodice wholly without sleeves, and with the opening running to its lowest point in tee center. For the heroination of the prudes it may be said that there is no indication of waist they would call a reform in this matter of low corsage. The enormous feather fan carried by this lady is a model of its kind, and we shall see plenty of them next summer, not only on full dress occasions but for day-time use. They are as big as the bunches of feathers waved by East Indian slaves for the cooling of their mistresses and the dispersion of insects. They are made of long ostrich plumes, and come in more colors than a rainbow can show.

All the summer dresses sent out from one of our extra fashionable manufacturers are scented by some new sort of process. The hint has already been taken by rival dressmakers, and each endeavors to produce some specialty in sweet odor to characterize her wares. As a result, some very delightful new scents have been evolved from the laboratories of the chemists. I am assured that experts will soon be able to trace the source of a toilet by its odor, and so we may have inquisitive old women sniffing at the gowns of their rivals' daughters, with a view to their detection. Perfumes are also used to fix their social status by the standing of their dressmakers.

The models of home gowns are meant to be diversified enough to prove the assertion already made—that individual tastes may nowadays be indulged without being unfashionable. The ideas of embellishment embodied in them are simple, strong and easily utilized. With an old, well-fitted dress as a guide, the amateur self-dresser will be able to carry out any single detail, or a whole gown, as she may choose. The accessories of dress are always carrying the day in this respect. Certain garments may prevail, said an expert, "and certain shapes may be adopted by one, but in each and every case a little acuteness in observing the figures and general characteristics which appear in illustrated journals will enable the amateur to copy and adapt correctly. The real individuality of the costume, however, is developed without effort, and almost without purpose by what Worth calls facility and his rivals call angels!" It will be seen that, not only in the skirts of the figures sketched but in the corsage as well, pretty prevails. Basques themselves were never more elaborately decorated. They are short over the hips, and the more they stray from the middle long, medium or short bodice points. Jerseys are by no means shut out from favor this season, on the contrary, they return with a wider range, and are adapted to a much greater variety of rate braiding, and are also made with sleeves. Sleeves are by no means shut out, but they are made more elaborately and with a much greater variety of silk, which diminishes gradually in height toward the front, where it forms merely a pointed bell. The front may be made of pleated gauze, drawn by tie or net smocked with gold beads. This style of bodice is in fact the same as that so pretty in black velvet over lace skirts, or entirely of lace and silk. As to skirts, they will be made full and gathered by bustles, although that form of artificiality is on the wane. A stripe of striking embellishment runs down the side in one of the models, and in these are often bestowed great richness and beauty of embroidery, and it is a theory, if not a fact, that those stripes take on the graceful action (or at least the appearance) of a girl when she walks—being an exterior and visible expression of her manner of step.

NEW HAIRDRESSING.

NEAT HOUSE DRESSES.

—Chicago Leiger.

A PRETTY model of a school girl's hat is blue straw with the flat brim faced with blue velvet and its half high crown surrounded by a full soft crown of white silk, on which rests a bunch of bluettes, white loops of ribbon catch up the back of the brim and expand high on the white crown. A scarlet straw has a crown of red velvet.

ARTIFICIAL ivory is actually used to trim some of the extraordinary dresses seen in Paris this season.

JOHN G. CARLISLE.

A Great Effort by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

A Masterly Argument in Favor of the Reduction of the Burdens of Taxation.

Figures Showing that the Country Has Prospered Under a Low Tariff—How Farmers Are Robbed.

We present below the salient points of Speaker Carlisle's closing argument in the House of Representatives on the Mills tariff bill.

On the first day of the present month there was in the treasury $106,000,000 in excess of all the demands against it, including the outstanding bond issues now maturing, and also an average monthly accumulation of more than $11,000,000. Every cause of this enormous gain has been taken by law from the commercial pursuits of the people and from the revenues which belong to the government of their fellows, and under circumstances which scored no justification whatever for the exaction. The purpose of the Congress most decisive in whose time policy was adopted to reduce the revenues to the necessities of the government, instead of the needs of the people, was in no way inconsistent with the integrity of legislation and the prosperity of our people, and it was not to be anticipated that the accumulation of a large surplus in the public treasury would be made the occasion for such manufacturing as would result in the transfer of wealth from the producing classes to the government, and thence back to the manufacturers, or that the imposition of any such result would be regarded as a proper or the inevitable effect to be encouraged instead and avoided. Such a result would be a direct violation of the principle that a healthy and prosperous economy which have been found to be absolutely essential to the preservation of a free system of government and the constitutional liberties of the people, can not be maintained so long as this policy continues largesses and gratuities to the manufacturers, and so long as the government shall continue to collect and use for the exercise of legislative labor; now on pets for the support of the government, and will be observed. But it is said, we still have a surplus, and it is said that we have a great surplus, and that we must have a reduction of rates of local an ar-continued and the great surplus of the revenue. For my part I believe that so long as we actually have a surplus of the revenue, and so long as it is true that the public debt is the very best one that can be found, and so long as there is a surplus of a million that it is the duty of the government to pursue a fiscal policy that taxes the people merely for the purposes of raising revenue to be used in the purchase, at a premium, of the bonds of the government, and to the extent that so far as may be necessary to comply with the requirements of the sinking-fund law. And I am not disposed to vote for a tax on the people for any purpose relied it would not be wise to pay the public debt as fast as it is now falling due, for some short period of time. The Treasury purchased last year 122,000,000 of bonds, which interest had accrued to the Treasury, and the Treasury purchased 100,000,000 of bonds on which interest had accrued to the Treasury. For these bonds, which the accrued interest, or a premium of 2 per cent. The Treasury purchased 100,000,000 of bonds which had been forced by the failure of Congress to pass a proper funding bill, and which were dedicated by law to the payment of the sinking-fund, and which were taken by law from the banks or the people who were the owners of the bonds, and which were in all in the possession of their business to be used for the purpose of the sinking-fund, and for the purchase of the bonds, and for the purchase of the bonds, and for the purchase of the bonds

FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

Requirements of the Cabbage Plant—Necessity for its Rapid Growth—Varieties That Have Gained Widespread Popularity Among Gardeners and Consumers.

The cabbage requires a deep, rich soil and thorough working. Some of the large late varieties seem to do best if the seed is sown in the hills where they are to remain, and in that case sow two or three seeds where each plant is desired and then pull up all but the strongest. Plant the large varieties three feet apart, the small early sorts, from a foot to eighteen inches. The Savoy cabbages have wrinkled leaves and are of fine flavor, especially after a little frost has touched them in the autumn.

Insects have been exceedingly troublesome to cabbage in many sections of late years, and growers are obliged to try for a rapid growth and wage a constant warfare against the enemy.

JERSEY EARLY WAKEFIELD.

In the cuts are shown two popular varieties. The first is the Jersey Early Wakefield, is a great favorite with market gardeners for the New York market, being the earliest, sure to head and true to seed. The second, Louisville Drumhead, is a variety grown largely by market gardeners in the southwest. It stands the weather better than most other sorts, and is a sure cropper and resembles Premium Flat Dutch.

HINTS ON STABLE MANAGEMENT.

How to Govern a Horse, What to Feed and When to Water.

Pure air is as essential to the blood as sound food is to the sustenance of the body. Consumed air is vitiated air, the volume of oxygen is reduced, carbonic acid is in excess. The stable is full of organic impurities given off by the skin and the lungs. Ventilation is found in all well regulated stables, and draughts are un known, or ought to be.

Good grooming is demanded under stable management and is fast work. The brush, as a rule, should follow the direction of the hair, except when dirt and sweat are caked onto the coat; then you require to go against the lie of the coat—the set of the coat. Good grooming shortens the coat, gives a gloss and develops physical force.

Horses fed largely on other foods demand less hay, but hay is useful in distending the stomach, and thus assisting digestion. From six to fourteen pounds daily, the average use is ten pounds in many stables. To maintain hunting or racing condition, old hay is essential.

Clover, vetches and trifolium are laxative and cooling, and excellent for the invalid horse or the youngster. They should be given sparingly, at the early part of the season. Green forage should never be given to horses in fast work, except on Saturday nights.

The horse may be trusted to gauge his thirst, except on occasions of extreme exertion. That horses are the better for being watered before being fed is an admitted fact with all veterinary surgeons. Colic and gripes are thus avoided. The explanation given is this: When the stomach is full, water, passing rapidly through the stomach, on the way is very apt to carry with it into the small intestines undigested corn, and this produces local irritation. There is less danger in watering a horse actively warm than when the system is somewhat lowered. Soft water is better for all stock, and on no account let horses drink dirty water. It is most objectionable.

Watermelon Culture.

Southern Cultivator gives the following advice on the management of this crop:

A sandy, loamy soil suits melons best. It should be well supplied with humus. If the land is level and flat, liable to be water sogged, it should be thrown into beds twelve feet deep, with deep water furrows, having previously been well broken, rolled and harrowed.

If good stable or yard manure is available, make a compost of twenty-five pounds of manure, one pound of cotton seed meal, one pound of acid phosphate and half a pound of kainit, and work it well into the soil of each hill. Great care should be taken at this point lest the cotton seed meal destroy the germination of the seed.

The hills should be ten feet apart in the drill. After preparation and bedding keep the land perfectly clean by running a harrow over it as often as may be necessary. Continue the harrowing until the seed is ready to come up. As soon as the plants appear begin working with wide scrapes, going over at short intervals so as to keep the soil clean and mellow. Until the vines are one or two feet long, they may be moved to one side to allow the plow to run near the hill; but after that the vines should not be disturbed, the plows running only in the middles between the ends of the vines.—Southern Cultivator.

A Well Trained Grape Vine.

In the cut is shown a Mills grape vine properly trained on a Kniffin trellis of three wires. The system is an exceedingly simple one and the illustration makes it so plain that a full description would be superfluous. The symmetry shown in training and the well balanced distribution of fruit over the vine is only a matter of skillful management.

A GOOD GRAPE VINE WELL TRAINED.

The Mills grape is introduced by Messrs. Ellwanger and Barry. It is the result of crossing Muscat Hamburg with Concord. It is claimed that this grape is a little later than the Concord and a long keeper.

Mr. E. Williams, in Orchard and Garden, from which the above illustration is taken, advises in addition to the trial of new varieties, enough trustworthy old standbys for an abundant home supply. He says truly that one vine of a well tested and approved kind, like Worden, or even like the older Concord, may prove worth more than ten yet untried novelties which do not happen to succeed with you.

Fruit Storage.

James Vick says: We must aim for fruit storage houses above ground. You will never get what you want in building under ground, where there is always dampness. I think you can erect a wooden building with walls thick enough to keep out frost. Fruit kept in the cellar with other fruit and vegetables is not what it ought to be; there is a taint to the flavor, and a great deal of fruit is injured by being kept in this way. A person living in the city ought to have a house to preserve the fruit he wants for the table. If we do not see fine fruit on the table every day through the winter, it is a sure mark of great negligence on the part of somebody. I do really believe that it is not an impossible thing to build a fruit house above ground simply by having walls lined with hay, straw or sawdust, and provided with dead air spaces.

A Happy Family

Circle is the greatest blessing of our civilization, but such a thing is not possible when disease and death lurks on the threshold. One of the most important matters to be attended to, is that the Liver and Kidneys are in a healthy condition. More trouble arises from derangement of these organs than any other disease, often resulting in Diabetes, Bright's Disease, and other difficulties that are generally counted incurable. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will prevent and cure all these difficulties with great certainty. Large bottles $1. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Personal.

Mr. H. N. Fredickston, of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. It gave me instant relief and entirely cured me, and I have not been afflicted since. I also beg to state that I have tried other remedies with no good result. Have also used Electric Bitters and Dr. King's New Life Pills, both of which I can recommend.

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds, is sold on a positive guarantee. Trial bottles free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store. 1

Cholera.

And the milder forms of bowel difficulty, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, &c., all come from a disordered condition attended with pain in the Stomach, Cramps, Colic, &c. To wise and ward off these attacks by taking Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure, which is a sure remedy. Never known to fail to give immediate relief. As an outward application in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprains, Strains, Lame Back and Side it can be beat. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Wonderful Cures

Dr. G. W. Crouter, retail druggist of Charlevoix, Mich., says: We have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery, Electric Bitters, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for six years. Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of pronounced consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter. 1

Toothache.

Did you ever have a cracking, jumping, snapping, roaring, bothersome, toothache, that kept the whole family in an uproar until 3 o'clock in the morning? Many have it, but all have not heard of the wonderful cures made by Hamilton's Toothache Drops which are warranted to cure in one minute. Safe yet effective. Price only 25 cts. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Got to Stand it!

Mr. A. bought his wife one bottle of Parmelee's Blood Purifier, and now he thinks he has got himself into business. He says she raved so much benefit from it that she must try another bottle or two and he permitted her to do so. This Purifier is known so efficient in its working as this. Only $1.00 per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. A POSSIBLE GOVERNOR.

The Position of Wellington R. Burt in Michigan Politics.

From the Detroit Journal.

If the democratic convention to nominate state officers were to be held within 15 days, the candidate for governor would be Wellington R. Burt, of East Saginaw. What combination may be made between now and July it is impossible to foresee. It may be that Mr. Burt's friends will see that it is for his best interests to support some other candidate, and present the drift of sentiment in the democratic party is undoubtedly toward Mr. Burt.

The journal, therefore, takes the occasion to discuss at some length the position which Mr. B. occupies toward the party and the issues of the campaign, both state and national; and, further, to give its readers some idea of the man.

In this year of presidential grace, 1888, Michigan is classed as a doubtful state. Four years ago, the republican party found itself in a minority for the first time in a presidential year since John C. Fremont carried the state in 1856. To be sure, the republican electors were chosen in 1884, but the margin was only about 3,000 votes, and during the interval the democrats have once carried the state by 16,000 majority and once they carried Texas and carried it by 7,000. In November no fewer than 48,000 new voters will come into the polls to cast their first votes for the president of the United States. The political bias of these young voters must remain largely in doubt until the ballots are counted; but it is reasonable to suppose that by the right kind of nominees on the right sort of a platform, and by good political management, the state may be carried for the democratic ticket.

As is well known, the republicans carried the state in 1886 only by hardest kind of work. The candidate for governor, Cyrus G. Luce, was put in nomination in order to win back the farmers, who were growing to distrust the republican party on account of what they conceived to be monopolistic tendencies. There was abundance of money to pay republican workers, while the funds in the democratic organization were reduced to zero. Again, Mr. Stockbridge's untiring work for senator ship had a tendency to help the whole ticket.

Looking at the present condition of affairs, the democrats feel greatly encouraged. They count upon the fact that every governor must make some concessions to the party, and that the present governor is no exception to the rule. They notice that there is a growing sentiment in favor of the reform of the tariff, and a disposition to follow President Cleveland's policy, if not with equal feet, at least not far behind. They think that there are mistakes in party management can and will be corrected and that they will be able to "rise on the stepping stones of their dead selves to do nobler things."

Three issues will stand prominently to devise the two parties in the coming campaign. These are tariff, the public land and liquor laws.

On the question of the tariff, Mr. Burt has very clear and positive views. He believes that the time has come for a decided reduction in the duties levied on imports, and although many Michigan products are now among the protected articles, he believes that Michigan should and will submit to a fair reduction in the duties which protect its products.

Being largely interested in both lumber and salt and occupying the position of president of the Michigan Manufacturers' association, Mr. Burt's position on tariff is of more than ordinary weight. That he openly advocates this policy of reducing the tariff on all necessities of life, including the products of his friends in the Saginaw valley are, as a rule, willing to submit to such a reduction, is so far as the tariff is concerned, would seem to mean that the day of tariff reform is not far distant.

There is one qualification which Mr. Burt and his friends always make when they speak in favor of reduction. Michigan, they say, must not be singled out and made to bear all the brunt of lower duties. She is willing to take her share. More than that she can not, and ought not.

Again, Mr. Burt is opposed to taking the duty off wool. Before 1883 the duty on wool was fixed at a tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem, and specific duties of 10 per cent. The republicans set down this without making any corresponding reduction in the duties on woolen goods. They claim, Mr. Burt believes, the farmers have had their reduction and should not be asked to take half of what they got. At the same time, the duties on woolen manufactures should be so adjusted to make up for the cut on wool in 1885.

It will be noticed that Mr. Burt does not approbate from the position taken by President Cleveland in his latest message. Yet the difference is more apparent than real. President Cleveland suggested that the duty might be taken off wool, if at the same time the tariff on woollen goods was taken off. Mr. Burt says that the proposition to make so sweeping a change would be too much of a shock to business interests. He would favor a reduction rather than in kind. Mr. Burt is a tariff reformer who believes in incidental protection.

There is one position on tariff matters on which Mr. Burt upholds unique views. He was the first to point out the facts that while the poor man pays a tax on his salt and lumber, Armour gets a rebate on salt and the Standard oil company gets a rebate on the lumber used for foreign shipments. Every year the Standard oil company import 10,000,000 feet of lumber on which it pays duties, only to have them refunded when the stuff is made up into boxes for their oil exports. So, too, Full Armour pays not a penny of duty on the $18,000 worth of salt he imports from Canada and uses in salt meats for British markets. Hale Allison and Logan were the champions of these rebate measures.

Since Mr. Burt began to make the fight on lumber and salt rebates his views have attracted great attention and letters from Cincinnati, Buffalo, and other cities have poured in upon him to get information on this subject.

Mr. Burt believes that the democratic party can and will readjust the tariff so that it will be a blessing and not a burden; and he thinks that if the republicans were in earnest in their professions about a reform in the tariff they would have brought in a minority bill suggesting their views of the correct method of reduction.

The question of the ownership of lands Mr. Burt places next in importance to that of the tariff. Every acre of land grants not already earned he believes, should be restored to the public domain. Furthermore, he takes strong ground against the ownership of lands by foreign corporations and syndicates, or by any one who is not a citizen of this country.

On the liquor question, Mr. Burt believes that the republicans are uncertain, and the democrats are the only ones who consistently oppose all sumptuary laws. As a consequence, he thinks, the Germans, who have hitherto been a considerable part of the republican party are now ready to vote with the democrats; and this accession to the party strength he is disposed to value very highly in the coming contest.

On purely state topics Mr. Burt is a well informed man. He believes that appropriations for state institutions should be large enough to carry on those institutions in the most thorough manner; but he is opposed to multiplying charitable foundations and believes that there is no good reason why the state taxes should have been doubled since 1885.

No one ever said that Mr. Burt was not a good fighter. Tall and commanding in appearance, with a strong will and tremendous energy, when he puts himself to a task he is sure to carry his point if a way can be either found or made. His fortune is somewhere in the millions, and his commercial enterprises are by no means speculative. He has a fine home on Genesee avenue, and is fond of his friends and they are fond of him. If the nomination and election shall fall to Mr. Burt's lot the Saginaw valley will be likely to be called on to rejoice with him over his good fortune and well wons success.

Michigan in Doubt.

The Algerines speak truly when when they say that Michigan is a doubtful state if Alger is not nominated, but they suppress a part of the truth when they neglect to say that if Alger is nominated he will be nominated. There will, of course, be a tremendous effort to carry the state for Alger if he is nominated, and the state pride will be backed with those arguments upon which republicans chiefly rely in these latter years.

But spite of state pride and arguments with emerald backs, the republicans have no assurance of Michigan. Four years ago the republican plurality on president was 3,308. Alger's plurality as governor was 3,983, but his vote was 1,850 less than Blaine's. The prohibition vote that year for President was 18,000; this year it will be twice that, and the increase will come mainly from the ranks of the republican party, which has been playing fast and loose with the prohibitionists until the temperance members of the organization are disgusted.

It would be unkind, of course, to deprive General Alger of the vote of his own state, especially if he shall be nominated, as his followers urge he shall be, for the express purpose of saving Michigan to the republican party. But we are very much afraid that sentiment will have to be perpetrated. One doesn't get a chance every four years to vote for a strong man against such a duo as Cleveland and Thurman; and a good many democrats are going to avail themselves of the opportunity.—Free Press.

The Democratic Platform.

Here is your Democratic platform, sentiment: To lift burdens from the shoulders of taxed labor; to restore to the treasury the money in excess of the requirements of the public business; to reduce revenue in accord with the principles of strict economy and the directions of the constitution, and to lift every vacant office with an honest and capable Democrat. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

What the G. O. P. Will Learn.

There is no need of a civil war party in the United States in 1888. This will be one of the lessons of November.—St. Louis Republican.

A Good Suggestion.

It is thought that Brother Blaine ought to burn his letters before mailing them.—Atlanta Constitution.

NOTHING TO ATTACK.

The Administration Is Solid and Clever and Will Be Renominated.

Cleveland has changed and upset Washington as generally as a first class cyclone would change and upset it in the same length of time.

No other president since he was born has had his own way so entirely. He has rallied the partisan fangs out of the opposition senate and taken the reluctant and doubtful house under his arm. The generally turbulent and unruly larger branch of congress never behaved better than it is behaving this session, when the president's influence is supreme and his connection close.

His enemies in the party that he has transformed cannot find a rival to rally around. The suggestion of any other name for the head of the Democratic ticket of 1888 is instantly recognized as no less ridiculous than the mention of his name for the place would have been in the Cincinnati convention of 1880.

What wonder is it then, that Washington is bewildered? Men are continually coming from the outside country in search of high information. They see Washington seating about helplessly under the shadow of the strongest and the grimmest personality of recent times. They see the old aigrettes have lost and a good deal dazed. To these latter it seems as if the strange man on top had even swallowed the points of the political compass.

So all wait on him while he waits on himself, without a confident and a composer as surely as he is without a master. His indifference to the town is uncommon. As soon as he got into the White House he discharged the president's valet. He has no men, use for a manservant than for a piano. He often fills half a dozen pages with his own free writing in addressing a subordinate about some business matter.

Although a thorough believer in himself, he has never been guilty of display or betraying the least bit of cheap vanity. He is a president without a clique. For the first time in a long while Washington is without a White House lion. What cabal moreover can such a man have except patriotism?

I cannot see any reason for his taking a second term other than that he cannot leave the people's job in time to go out next March. What personal reason could he possibly have for staying? He has already got the name of the thing. He will never get any fun out of it. But have he stts, pegging away, and the good fortune to be one of the greatest men in history have chased until they died, comes rolling up hill to his feet. The chestnuts pirsue him in newspapers of the day looks some thing like this: "All the delegates are for Cleveland. The majority of this situation may possibly be appreciated when it is recalled that only thirteen of Mr Cleveland's twenty-one predecessors ever were thought of when the time came to choose their successors. Only eleven candidates ever made their second appearance in the electoral college.

For twenty years the Democrats have been running like whitelaws from the hounds of hell, and the pursued have left Cleveland stopped running; the almost pursued have gone by, and the almost pursuers panted. Then the pursuers panted and the pursued faced about. Now with the battle cry of the president's veto ringing in their ears the hounds of crowd sprang at their adversaries, who quickly lost sight of them in a cloud of dust and sun cheats. They are still running.

The Democratic party cannot be put on the defensive in this canvass. There is not a single thing to defend and nothing to attack. What has the administration done for which it would be wise to assail it before the people? Although he has dealt out death to the Republicans, the president has probably caused more pain among the Democrats than among their enemies. After living for nearly five years off the husks of opposition, we may be excused for too much joy when we see the crib of plenty the party's own best and permanent interests needed just such restraints as were imposed on it and just such lessons in self denial as were taught it by man who opened the door.

To Mr. Cleveland a party is simply the means and is not the end. He has always been a Democrat, but he has not let his Republicanism bother him much. Whether the situation today is the result of a deliberate and consistent policy of the president's or not, it is still certain that the Democratic condition is much better at the outset of this than it was at the close of the last campaign. The president's course in the matter has been to treat all the factions to an occasional dose of cold shoulder. This is a novel treatment for the trouble, but it may have some good.

This will be the eighth re-election of a president. Mr Cleveland will be the first, however, to gain that rare glory by the pain and single works of peace. Every other president who has had a second term came out of war. They were all men on horseback.

Here's to the man afoot—Morgan's Washington Letter to Boston Globe.

Or to Keep Still.

It would relieve the monotony of senate proceedings to a certain extent if Senator Ingalls would deliver his speeches in Volapuk.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Stick by the Party, Boys.

As for The Constitution the Democratic platform is our platform. We may differ with others as to what we believe to be the true policy of the Democracy—that difference is honest. Our course shall be directed by the party. Whatever policy it may announce shall be supported by all Democrats, for in the unity of the party lies its power for good. It has won its glorious victory, and its success is referred to lose the fruits of its successful fight for an honest administration of national affairs.—Atlanta Constitution.

Advice to Sherman.

In John Sherman so incredibly foolish as to allow Foraker to present his name to the Republican convention? If he wants the nomination he should go to the convention as a delegate and present Foraker's name to the convention.—Chicago Herald.

That's So.

John Sherman has taken the trouble to deny that he will withdraw from the presidential race. John never withdrew from anything yet in which he could see money and notoriety.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Question for Western Republicans.

Dr. F. L. Burden, chairman of the Massachusetts Republican state committee, in addressing the state convention asserted that "the policy of the Republican party is identified with the principles of protection to American capital and labor."

This is true; but what do the Republicans of the agricultural west think of it? Are they going to consent to be whipped into supporting the present tariff because it is a Republican measure, even after it has been demonstrated that it is draining hundreds of millions of wealth from the farming states into the manufacturing section of the northeast? When Dr. Burden speaks about protecting "American capital and labor" he means manufacturing capital and labor. He does not refer to the capital invested in farms and the labor employed in tilling them. The tariff does not protect them—and it was never intended to. When one class of persons are granted special favors, it must be at the expense of other classes—and, therefore, it is the capital and labor of the farming states that must pay for, and are paying, for, the special protection given to the capital and labor of the manufacturing states. The manufacturing states have certainly profited by the Republican high tariff policy—and profited enormously. There is no doubt of that. The vast and increasing accumulations of wealth in the states of United States bonds, western state, county and city bonds, western farm mortgages, railroad stocks and bonds, bank deposits, gold, silver and paper money to be found in those states prove it clearly enough. But the money paying farm mortgages in the west proves, also, that the policy has been anything but advantageous to this section—for it has transferred nearly one-half the actual wealth of the west to eastern owners. Are the people of the west in favor of maintaining this policy?—Missouri Republican.

Dangers of Paternalism.

Woe will betide the day when the laboring people of the United States come to believe that congress, and it alone, can give them prosperity or adversity in their industrial pursuits. It is better to follow the old doctrine of the fathers, to protect the citizen in his life, his liberty and his pursuit of happiness, and leave him to do the balance unhampered by legislative restraint and undeluded by demagogic flattery and folly. I now and then am most profoundly disgusted by hearing some man, while sawing the air with his hands and splitting the ears of the groundlings with his tongue, proclaim that the American citizen cannot stand the least competition with the men of other countries. I am an American born, and an American by instinct, and an American in all my affections, and I am never going to do the people of the United States the injustice to suppose that God ever created a race of human beings on this earth who can successfully put down the American citizen in the race for supremacy in all that is right. [Applause.] I do not believe it now; I never will believe it until I shall have seen it tried and demonstrated that I am wrong; and he does himself injustice, he does his dear fellowmen and his sons injustice, who holds to the doctrine that we are a generation of pygmies to be overridden by other people without we have congressional legislation to aid us.—Mr. Millin, of Tennessee, in House Debate.

Some Hard Conundrums.

If the present war tariff is necessary to sustain the American workingman, why is it that wages are higher in industries not affected by the tariff, than in those which are benefited by it—which is a fact easily susceptible of proof?

If this high tariff is kept up to maintain our infant industries, why is it that it is given to the manufacturers of cotton, wool, and iron? The manufacture of cotton cloth had a fixed establishment in here sixty years ago. The manufacture of woolens was firmly settled in this country over seventy years ago. And ninety-seven years ago Alexander Hamilton said that the manufacture of pig iron was well established here, and that we had the ability to manufacture steel sufficient to meet all internal demand and have left a considerable surplus for exportation. Are not these infant industries becoming rather aged? Ought they not to get along without the nursing bottle?

If the present 47 per cent. tariff tax is a benefit to the farmer, why is it that the price of the majority of the farmers' products is the lowest ever known? And why is it that the farmers' financial condition is constantly becoming worse.—Mr. Ford, of Michigan, in House Debate.

A Conservative Reform.

The present average rate of the tariff on dutiable goods is 47.10 per cent. The Mills bill would leave it at 40 per cent. The present average rate on articles affected by the bill is 54.16 per cent. The proposed rate would leave it on those articles at 52.36 per cent.

And this is the bill that is called a "free trade" measure! It leaves the average duty 10 per cent higher than it was under the Morrill tariff of 1862, and within two points of what the average was in 1861 when a Republican tariff commission recommended and a Republican congress proceeded to make a reduction of 20 per cent., which would have left the average duty 32.60 per cent.—New York World.

The Republican party's policy will be defensive in the campaign as it is in congress. It is making a final stand against the Democratic onslaught on its policy of high taxes and civil war sectionalism. It cannot advance on those issues. After this year it will not be able to stand on them. Defeated in 1884, it will be routed in 1888.—St. Louis Republican.

THE REPUBLICAN QUESTION.

Will he jump?

CLEVELAND AND BLAINE.

What Possible Show Has the Man from Maine?

A remarkable change has just occurred in the political field. About a month ago there was great popular uncertainty as to who the Republican candidate for president would be, and a few Democratic editors were still booming a favorite son here and there, but now all Democrats say Cleveland, and nearly all Republicans really mean Blaine. Shrewd observers are practically unanimous in the opinion that the candidates will be the same as in 1884, and if the Republicans had handed the job over to us, to be fixed at will, they couldn't have added a letter to the Democratic victory had before been doubtful, this would remove the last doubt. Every element of the existing situation is more favorable to Cleveland and hostile to Blaine than to any other men in their respective parties if we cannot beat Blaine clear out of sight, the Democrats should never again presume to call themselves patriots or men of sense

Look at the facts. Every bit of dire that could be raked for the purpose was thrown at Cleveland in 1884, and did not suffice, not an atom of it can be used again. The pop pile have passed on it, and in a social light he has gained strength every day since he was elected. The independent vote of the country is satisfied with him. The Republicans make a great outcry about removals from office, and a few Democrats complain that there have been removals enough to make the sensible men who do not want office very naturally conclude that when a man is condemned by both extremes he is about right. We want to ask any intelligent Republican this question Do you believe that the personal charges against Cleveland, that admittedly had some effect in 1884, will have any effect whatever in 1888, and can effect in 1888? Do you not know secret against Blaine, which were but barely started in 1884, will come to full force and effect in 1888? Do you not know secret soul suspect that those dark charges and counter charges, which were then thought to black that most men only hinted at them, will prove far worse for Mr Blaine when they begin the scanning instead of ending it?

There are several other little points our Republican friends overlook In 1884 they had at their command a compact phalanx of 500,000 office holders—where is that phalanx now? Then they were able to set up their quadrennial spook—"democ get so that business interests were a Democratic president was elected and the business interests are confoundedly in better shape than in 1884.

The people's verdict will be a vote for Cleveland

FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

Requirements of the Cabbage Plant—Necessity for its Rapid Growth—Varieties That Have Gained Widespread Popularity Among Gardeners and Consumers.

The cabbage requires a deep, rich soil and thorough working. Some of the large late varieties seem to do best if the seed is sown in the hills where they are to remain, and in that case sow two or three seeds where each plant is desired and then pull up all but the strongest. Plant the large varieties three feet apart, the small early sorts, from a foot to eighteen inches. The Savoy cabbages have wrinkled leaves and are of fine flavor, especially after a little frost has touched them in the autumn.

Insects have been exceedingly troublesome to cabbage in many sections of late years, and growers are obliged to try for a rapid growth and wage a constant warfare against the enemy.

JERSEY EARLY WAKEFIELD.

In the cuts are shown two popular varieties. The first of these, the Jersey Early Wakefield, is a great favorite with market gardeners for the New York market, being the earliest, sure to head and true to seed. The second, Louisville Drumhead, is a variety grown largely by market gardeners in the southwest. It stands hot weather better than most other sorts, and is a sure cropper and resembles Premium Flat Dutch.

LOUISVILLE DRUM HEAD.

Among new and superior varieties is the All Seasons. It is very sure heading, of excellent quality and may be planted early or late, as it forms large and very solid heads quickly.

Sweet Potatoes.

The sweet potato is extremely sensitive to frost and, except in the south, its season must be prolonged by means of the hot bed. No other plant than sprouting and setting the plants is now thought of by experienced growers. It succeeds well on many soils that must be easily drained, but not on a wet one of any description. Alluvial and peaty soils are not adapted to it.

The Southern Queen is the earliest of all sweet potatoes; the root is very large and longer than the Nansemond, of light color, with excellent keeping qualities. The Hanover, or improved Nansemond variety, is a favorite in Virginia, and the yellow Nansemond is preferred by many to all other kinds.

Artificial Manures.

Results obtained with artificial fertilizers and especially with wiat are known as "commercial manures," are often surprising in potato culture and truck gardening. Potatoes grown with the use of commercial fertilizers are less liable to disease, and the quality of vegetables in many instances is improved. Quality seems to be largely dependent upon the rapidity and uninterrupted growth, and a slow acting manure will most surely produce inferior vegetables, lacking flavor. Peas, beans, radishes, carrots, etc., grown thereon are tough and flavorless, and likewise many fruits. The tenderness of beets, onions, etc., depends on quick growth. Asparagus from soil rich in soluble food is full flavored, tender and luscious to the very tips.

Kubanka Wheat.

The much talked of Kubanka wheat, raised in the neighborhood of Winnipeg, has been badly set upon by the Canadian boards of trade. They say it is only "goose or rice wheat," and not worth to them within twenty-five cents a bushel of good red fife. The Russian grown Kubanka is a valuable cutting wheat on the Mark Lane market, and there may be a mistake somewhere.

Agricultural Notes.

Reports from various locations make it appear that the several forms of wire fencing wiltstood the blizzards of the past season better than any other sort. Post and rail, and the lighter board fences suffered most.

Vines older and stronger vine more wood; weaker ones less.

HINTS ON STABLE MANAGEMENT.

How to Govern a Horse, What to Feed and When to Water.

Pure air is as essential to the blood as sound food is to the sustenance of the body. Consumed air is vitiated air, the volume of oxygen is reduced, carbonic acid is in excess. The stable is full of organic impurities given off by the skin and the lungs. Ventilation is found in all well regulated stables, and draughts are unknown, or ought to be.

Good grooming is demanded under stable management and in fast work. The brush, as a rule, should follow the direction of the hair, except when dirt and sweat are caked onto the coat; then you require to go against the lie of the coat—the set of the coat. Good grooming shortens the coat, gives a gloss and develops physical force.

Horses fed largely on other foods demand less hay, but hay is useful in distending the stomach, and thus assisting digestion. From six to fourteen pounds daily, the average use is ten pounds in many stables. To maintain hunting or racing condition, old hay is essential.

Clover, vetches and trifolium are laxative and cooling, and excellent for the full valid horse or the youngster. They should be given sparingly, at the early part of the season. Green forage should never be given to horses in fast work, except on Saturday nights.

The horse may be trusted to guage his thirst, except on occasions of extreme exertion. That horses are the better for being watered before being fed is an admitted fact with all veterinary surgeons. Colic and gripes are thus avoided. The explanation given is this: When the stomach is full, water, passing rapidly through the stomach, on the way is very apt to carry with it into the small intestines undigested corn, and this produces local irritation. There is less danger in watering a horse actively warm than when the system is somewhat lowered. Soft water is better for all stock, and on account let horses drink dirty water; it is most objectionable.

Watermelon Culture.

Southern Cultivator gives the following advice on the management of this crop:

A sandy, loamy soil suits melons best. It should be well supplied with humus. If the land is level and flat, liable to be water sogged, it should be thrown into beds twelve feet deep, with deep water furrows, having previously been well broken, rolled and harrowed.

If good stable or yard manure is available, make a compost of twenty-five pounds of manure, one pound of cotton seed meal, one pound of acid phosphate and half a pound of kainit, and work it well into the soil of each hill. Great care should be taken at this point lest the cotton seed meal destroy the germination of the seed.

The hills should be ten feet apart in the drill. After preparation and bedding keep the land perfectly clean by running a harrow over it as often as may be necessary. Continue the harrowing until the seed is ready to come up. As soon as the plants appear begin working with wide scrapes, going over at short intervals so as to keep the soil clean and mellow. Until the vines are one or two feet long they may be moved to one side to allow the plow to run near the hill; but after that the vines should not be disturbed, the plows running only in the middles between the ends of the vines.—Southern Cultivator. 4

A Well Trained Grape Vine.

In the cut is shown a Mills grape vine properly trained on a Kniffin trellis of three wires. The system is an exceedingly simple one and the illustration makes it so plain that a full description would be superfluous. The symmetry shown in training and the well balanced distribution of fruit over the vine is only a matter of skillful management.

A GOOD GRAPE VINE WELL TRAINED.

The Mills grape is introduced by Messrs Ellwanger and Barry. It is the result of crossing Muscat Hamburg with Creveling. It is claimed that this grape is a little later than the Concord and a long keeper.

Mr. E. Williams, in Orchard and Garden, from which the above illustration is taken, advises in addition to the trial of new varieties, enough trustworthy old standbys for an abundant home supply. He says truly that one vine of a well tested and approved kind, like Worden, or even like the older Concord, may prove worth more than ten yet untried novelties which do not happen to succeed with you.

Fruit Storage.

James Vick says: We must aim for fruit storage houses above ground. You will never get what you want in building under ground, where there is always damp and cold. If you can erect a wooden building with walls thick enough to keep out frost. Fruit kept in the cellar with other fruit and vegetables is not what it ought to be; there is a taint to the flavor, and a great deal of fruit is injured by being kept in this way. A person living in the city ought to have a house to preserve the fruit he wants for the table. If we do not see fine fruit on the table every day through the winter, it is a sure mark of great negligence on the part of somebody. I do really believe that it is not an impossible thing to build a fruit house above ground simply by having walls lined with hay, straw or sawdust, and provided with dead air spaces.

A Happy Family

Circle is the greatest blessing of our civilization, but such a thing is not possible when disease and death lurks on the threshold. One of the most important matters to be attended to, is that the Liver and Kidneys are in a healthy condition. More trouble arises from derangement of these organs than any other cause, often resulting in Diabetes, Bright's Disease, and other difficulties that are generally counted incurable. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will prevent and cure all these difficulties with great certainty. A POSSIBLE GOVERNOR.

The Position of Wellington R. Burt in Michigan Politics.

From the Detroit Journal.

If the democratic convention to nominate state officers were to be held within 15 days, the candidate for governor would be Wellington R. Burt, of East Saginaw. What combination may be made between now and July it is impossible to foresee. It may be that Mr. Burt's friends will see that it is for his best interests to support some other man. But at present the drift of sentiment in the democratic party is undoubtedly toward Mr. Burt.

The Journal, therefore, takes the occasion to discuss at some length the position which Mr. B. occupies toward the party and the issues of the campaign, both state and national; and, farther, to give its readers some idea of the man.

In this year of presidential grace, 1888, Michigan is classed as a doubtful state. Four years ago, the republican party found itself in a minority for the first time in a presidential year since John C. Fremont carried the state in 1856. To be sure, the republicans elected a governor in 1884, but the margin was only about 3,000 votes, and during the interval the democrats have once carried the state by 10,000 and upwards, and the republicans have carried it by 7,000. In November no fewer than 48,000 new voters will appear at the polls to cast their first votes for the president of the United States. The political bias of these new voters must remain largely in doubt until the ballots are counted, but it is reasonable to suppose that by the right kind of nominees on the right sort of a platform, and by good political management, the state may be carried for the democratic ticket.

As is well known, the republicans carried the state in 1886 only by hard-fought kind of work. The candidate for governor, Cyrus G. Luce, was put in nomination in order to win back the farmers, who were growing to distrust the republican party on account of what they conceived to be monopolistic tendencies. There was abundance of money in the republican workers while the funds in the democratic committee's treasury were not so large again. Mr. Stockbridge's untiring work for senatorship had a tendency to help the whole ticket.

Looking at the general condition of affairs, the democrats feel greatly encouraged. There are indications that the every governor must make some enemies during his term, and that the tremendous force of an exception to the rule. They notice that there is a growing sentiment in favor of the reform of the tariff, as is evidenced by the fact that President Cleveland's policy, if not with equal force, at least not far behind. They think that the people are tired in party management can and will be corrected and that there will be no "rise on the stepping stone of their dead selves to do nobler things."

Three decisive issues presentedmently to devie the two parties in the coming campaign. These are tariff, the liquor traffic and Mormon.

On the question of the tariff, Mr. Burt has very clear and positive views. He believes that the time has come for a decided reduction in the duties on the imports, and although many Michigan products are now among the protected articles he believes that Michigan should and will submit to a fair reduction in the duties which protect her products.

Being largely interested in both lumber and salt and occupying the position of president of the Michigan salt producers' association, Mr. Burt's position on tariff is not that of a manufacturer who openly advocates this policy of reducing the tariff on all necessities and declares in favor of protection for the Saginaw valley are, as a rule, willing to submit to such a reduction, if to do so will insure the reform he would seem to mean that the day of tariff reform is fast drawing near.

There is one qualification which Mr. Burt and his friends always make when they speak in favor of reduction. Michigan, they say, must not be singled out and made to bear all the brunt of lower duties. She is willing to take her share. More than that she does not ask.

Again, Mr. Burt is opposed to taking the duty off wool. Before 1883 the farmers were protected by a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, and specific duties of 10 per cent. The republicans made a great outcry against making any corresponding reduction in the duties on woolen goods. Mr. Burt, he says, believes, the farmers have had their reduction and should not be asked to make any more at this time. At the same time, the duties on woolen manufactures should be so adjusted to make up for the cut on wool in 1883.

It will be noticed that Mr. Burt does not differ somewhat from the position taken by President Cleveland in his latest message. Yet the difference is more apparent than real. President Cleveland suggested that the duty might be taken off wool, if at the same time the tariff on woollen goods was taken off. Mr. Burt says that the presence of the duty on wool and that the woollen goods tariff should be lowered. Mr. Burt's position, then, is not such as to place him in antagonism to the president's policy of tariff reform. It is a difference in details rather than in kind. Mr. Burt is a tariff reformer who believes in incidental protection.

There is one position on tariff matters on which Mr. Burt upholds unique views. He was the first to point out the facts that while the poor man pays a tax on his salt and blanket, Armour gets a rebate on salt and the Standard oil company gets a rebate on the lumber used for foreign shipments. Every year the Standard oil company import 10,000,000 feet of lumber on which it pays duties, only to have them refunded when the stuff is made up into boxes for their oil exports. So, to, Phil Armour pays not a penny of duty on the 818,000 worth of salt he imports from Canada and uses to salt meats for British markets. Hale, Allison and Logan were the champions of these rebate measures.

Since Mr. Burt began to make the fight on lumber and salt rebates his views have attracted great attention and letters from Cincinnati, Buffalo, and other cities have poured in upon him to get information on this subject.

Mr. Burt believes that the democratic party can and will readjust the tariff so that it will be a blessing and not a burden; and he thinks that if the republicans were to attend in their professions about a reform in the tariff they would have brought in a majority bill suggesting their views of the correct measure of reduction.

The question of the ownership of lands Mr. Burt places next in importance to that of the tariff. Every foot of land great is not already owned he believes, should be restored to the domain. Furthermore, he takes the ground that the ownership of lands by foreign corporations and syndicates, or by any one who is not a citizen of this country.

On the liquor question, Mr. Burt believes that the republicans are uncertain, and the democrats are the only ones who consistently oppose all sumptuary laws. As a consequence, he thinks, the Germans, who have hitherto been a considerable part of the republican party are now ready to vote with the democrats; and he believes that the party strength he is disposed to value very highly in the coming contest.

On purely state topics Mr. Burt is a well informed man. He believes that appropriations for state institutions should be large enough to carry on those institutions in the most thorough manner; but he is opposed to multiplying charitable foundations and believes that there is no good reason why the state taxes should have been doubled since 1880.

No one ever said that Mr. Burt was not a good fighter. Tall and commanding in appearance, with a strong and impressive energy, when he sets himself to a task he is sure to carry his point if a way can be either found or made. His fortune is somewhere in the millions, and his commercial enterprises are all based upon speculative. He has a fine house on Genesee avenue, and is fond of saying he thinks enjoy it with him. If the nomination and election shall fall to Mr. Burt's lot the Saginaw valley will be likely to be called on to rejoice with him over his good fortune and well won success.

Michigan in Doubt.

The Algerines speak truly when when they say that Michigan is a doubtful state. If Alger is not nominated for president he will be the truth when they neglect to say that it is also a doubtful state if Alger is nominated. There will, of course, be a tremendous effort to carry the state for Alger if he is nominated, but the state pride will be backed with those arguments upon which republicans will rely only in these latter years.

But spite of state pride and arguments with emerald backs, the republicans have no assurance of Michigan. Four years ago the republican plurality on president was 25,000. Alger's plurality as governor was 3,983, but his vote was 1,850 less than Blaine's. The prohibition vote that year for President was 18,000; this year it will be twice that, and the increase will come mainly from the ranks of the republican party, which has been playing fast and loose with the prohibitionists until the temperance members of the organization are disgusted.

It would be unkind, of course, to deprive General Alger of the vote of his own state, especially if he shinl be nominated, as his followers urge he shall be, for the express purpose of saving Michigan to the republican party. But we are very much afraid that unkindness will have to be perpetrated. One doesn't get a chance every four years to vote for so strong and brilliant a ticket as Cleveland and Thurman; and a good many Michiganders are going to avail themselves of the opportunity.—Free Press.

The Democratic Platform.

Here is your Democratic platform, gentlemen: To lift the burdens of the excessive burden of taxation inherited from Republican management, to expend the revenue in accord with the principles of strict economy and the directions of the constitution, and to fill every vacant office with an honest and capable Democrat. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

What the O. O. P. Will Learn.

There is no cost of a civil war party in the United States in 1888. This will be one of the lessons of November.—St. Louis Republican.

A Good Suggestion.

It is thought that Brother Blaine ought to burn his letters before mailing them.—Atlanta Constitution.

NOTHING TO ATTACK.

The Administration is Solid and Cleveland Will Be Renominated.

Cleveland has changed and upset Washington as generally as a first class cyclone would change and upset it. In the same length of time

No other president since he was born has had his own way so entirely. He has pulled the partisan fangs out of the opposition senate and taken the reluctant and doubtful house under his arm. The generally turbulent and unruly larger branch of congress never behaved better than it is behaving this session, when the president's influence is supreme and his connection close.

His enemies in the party that he has transformed cannot find a rival to rally around. The suggestion of any other name for the head of the Democratic ticket of 1888 is instantly recognized as no less ridiculous than the mention of his own name for the place would have been in the Cincinnati convention of 1885.

What wonder is it, then, that Washington is bewildered! Men are continually coming from the outside country in search of high information. They see Washington beating about helplessly under the shadow of the strongest and the most consummate security of recent times. They see the old stagers here afoot and a good deal dazed. To these latter it seems as if the strange man on top had even outdoneed the pulse of the political community.

So all wait on him while he waits on himself, without a confidant and a counselor, as surely as he is without friends. His indifference to the town is uncomfortable. As soon as he got to the White House he discharged the president's valet. He has no more use for a stenographer than he has for a piano. He often half a dozen pages with his own fine writing instead of employing a subordinate with business matter.

Although a thorough believer in himself, he has never been guilty of displeasing or betraying the least bit of cheap vanity. He is a president without a clique. For the first time in a long while Washington is without a White House set. What other motive can such a man have except patriotism?

I cannot see any reason for his taking a second term other than that he cannot finish the people's job in time to go out next March. What personal reason could he possibly have for staying? He has already got the name of being the man who never get any fun out of it. But here he sits, pegging away, and the good fortune that some of the greatest men in history have chased until they died come rolling up hill to his feet. The chestnut phrase in the newspapers of the day looks some like that it "All the colleges are for Cleveland." The uniqueness of this situation may possibly be appreciated when it is recalled that only thirteen of the Cleveland's twenty one predecessors were ever thought of when the time came to choose their successors. Only eleven presidents ever made their second appearance in the electoral college.

For twenty years the Democrats have been running like whitetails from the hight tariff whoopers. A few months ago Cleveland stopped running, the almost frightened party halted, turned and the pursuers paused. Then the pursuers and the pursued faced each other. Even with the battle cry of the president's message on their lips the party refused to spread at their adversaries, who quickly turned tale and ran like so many scared steers. They are still running.

The Democratic party cannot be put on the defensive in this canvass. There is not a single thing to defend and nothing to attack. What has the administration done for which it would be wise to assail before the people? Although he has dealt out death to the Republicans, the president has probably caused more pain among the Democrats than among their opponents. After living for twenty-five years off the basks of opposition, we may soon come to see that when he has the grin of plenty the party's own best and permanent interests needed just such reasons as were imposed on it and that such lessons is self denial as were taught by the man who opened the door.

To Mr. Cleveland a party is simply the mass, and is not the end. He has always been a Democrat, but he has not let his Democratic bother him much. Whether the situation today is the result of a deliberate and consistent policy of the president's or not, it is still certain that the Democratic condition is much better at the outset of this than it was at the outset of the last campaign. The president's course in the matter has been to treat all the factions to an occasional dose of cold shoulder. This is an entirely new treatment for the trouble, but it may have some good.

This will be the eighth re-election of a president. Mr. Cleveland will be the first, however, to gain that rare glory by the gains and single works of peace. Every other president who has had a second term came out of war. They were all men on horseback.

Here's to the man afoot—Morgan's Ford, of Michigan, in House Debate.

Or to Keep Still.

It would relieve the monotony of senate proceedings to a certain extent if Senator Ingalls would deliver his speeches in Volapuk.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Stick by the Party, Boys.

As for The Constitution the Democratic platform is our platform. We may differ with others as to what we believe to be the true policy of the Democracy—that difference is honest. Our course shall be directed by the party. Whatever policy it may announce should be supported by all Democrats, for in the unity of the party lies its power for good. It has won victory, and victory is what it cannot afford to lose the fruits of its successful fight for an honest administration of national affairs.—Atlanta Constitution.

Advice to Sherman.

In John Sherman so incredibly foolish as to allow Foraker to present his name to the Republican convention? If he wants the nomination he should go to the convention as a delegate and present Foraker's name to the convention.—Chicago Herald.

That's So.

John Sherman has taken the trouble to delay lest he will withdraw from the presidential race. John never withdrew from anything yet in which he could see money and security.—Atlanta Constitution.

DEBATING THE MILLS BILL.

Ten timber paragraphs of the Mills tariff bill were discussed at length in the House on the 1st inst. Mr. Dockery, of Missouri, declared that the explanation of the failure of the lumbermen to agree to increase lay in the fact that 80 per cent. of the lumber used in this country was or other industries; that the men employed in our manufacturing industries were foreigners imported under contract labor laws, and against American labor. Mr. Fuller, of Massachusetts, offered a bound of lumber from the Democratic side by declaring that as far as he believed it could be done without protection to labor involved in this question he should vote for free lumber. Mr. Gunther, of Tennessee, predicted that the Democratic party, if it passes the bill, would go to that place paved with good intentions. Mr. Cox, of Tennessee, said the timber would be taxed, not to raise the revenue, but to raise the temperature. Mr. Wilkins, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported to the House a substitute for the bill introduced by Mr. Buckner to authorize the issuance of the United States notes.

SERVED WITH A SHORT SHRIFT.

A Negro Ruffian Found Under a Woman's Bed Is Lynched.

An Augusta (Ga.) special says: "A few nights ago Allen Sturgis, a burly negro, was found by Mrs. Burnsides, of Thomson, Ga., under her bed. She effected his arrest by sending her little sister for aid under the pretense of going for a glass of water. When arrested Sturgis confessed that he was a member of an organized band of incendiaries and robbers who have committed outrages in that vicinity. Several of his associates have been arrested. Two disastrous conflagrations have occurred in Thomson in the last few months, and several attempts have been made to assault defenseless women. Last night the men of Thomson determined to make an example of Sturgis, and he was taken from jail and hanged to a tree in the public street."

Five Men Caught in a Cave-In in a Shaft in Montana.

A terrible accident occurred in the St. Lawrence, Montana. While a number of miners were ascending the shaft for their dinner a cave-in occurred, extending from the 400-foot level to the 200-foot level, and about eighty feet back from the shaft. The men who were at work on the 200-foot level had all arrived at the shaft to be drawn up, with the exception of five on that shaft who had delayed placing some drills. The latter five were killed.

SPURIOUS COIN MAKERS.

A Gang of Tennessee Counterfeiters Captured.

A gang of counterfeiters have been at work in Chattanooga, Tenn., and surrounding country ever since early in the spring. The United States officers have succeeded in capturing two of their number, Fred Fowler and Will Ferguson. There is a large amount of counterfeit money and $5 silver certificates now in circulation. The bogus certificates are so perfect that one of them was received by the National Bank of Chattanooga.

TERRITIC STORM IN ARKANSAS.

Houses Swept Away and Many People Killed.

A dispatch from the Southwest says a furious storm swept over Washington County, Arkansas, causing much loss of life and property. In one hamlet twelve houses were destroyed, seven or eight persons were badly injured. It is rumored that in the interior seven persons were killed.

Jeff Davis' Birthday.

Jeff Davis celebrated his 86th birthday at his home in Beauvoir, Miss., on the 3d of June. A dispatch from there says:

The house was filled with flowers, his neighbors voicing their good wishes with their heartyeats, while many evidences of appreciation and kindness poured in from distinguished admirers from the North, and there came a bright many letters of congratulation from old army and political friends. Davis is in better health than he has been for some time, and is quite deeply interested in current events, political and social. He is concerned in the affairs of the Nation, reads the papers, and reads all the newspaper gossip with the relish of a veteran politician.

Gen. Sheridan's Condition.

A Washington dispatch of Monday reports that "Gen. Sheridan had not rested well for several hours, and had had a couple of attacks of coughing since the last bulletin. Dr. Pepper had been summoned."

Telegraphic Brevities.

Lord and Lady Randolph Churchill intend to visit America in August.

Victor Hugo's book, "Toute la Lyre," has been published in Paris. The booksellers claim it does not sell.

A New York engineering paper calculates that $230,000,000 will be necessary to be raised to complete the Panama canal.

Democratic Caucus.

At a caucus of the Democratic members of the House of Representatives, about ninety being present, Mr. Springer presented a resolution binding all the Democrats in the House to vote for the bill as it comes from the caucus and for only such amendments as are presented by the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. After some discussion the resolution was adopted without division. Another resolution offered by Mr. Springer was also adopted, requiring all Democratic members to be present or secure pairs during the five-minute debate in the House. Mr. Bacon, of New York, offered a resolution, which was adopted, requiring the caucus to proceed with the consideration of the tariff bill in the House immediately after the disposition of the legislative appropriation bills.

POLITICAL.

North Carolina Democrats.

The North Carolina Democratic State Convention nominated D. G. Fowle for Governor on the twenty-third ballot, and the nomination was made unanimous. S. R. Alexander, of Charlotte, one of the contestants for the nomination for Governor, was nominated by acclamation for Lieutenant Governor.

Political Notes.

Frank P. Fleming, of Jacksonville, was nominated by the Democratic State Convention for Governor of Florida on the fortieth ballot. He is a leading lawyer.

A New York morning paper is authority for the statement that President Cleveland has assured Gov. Hill of New York that he will support his candidacy for renomination for the Governorship.

The majority of the Iowa delegates to Chicago favor Judge Gresham for second choice, but it is said on reliable authority that the delegation has agreed not to commit itself to a second-choice candidate for fear of hurting Allison's chances.

FATAL STEAMBOAT EXPLOSIONS.

Five Men Killed by a Boiler Explosion on the Traverses.

Two of the lines of the steamer Inverness, plying on the Mississippi River, collapsed when the boat had reached a point twelve miles below Quincy, resulting in the death of five men. These men, with half a dozen others, were precipitated into the river. The killed were: Joseph Halpin, the fireman; George Crull, runner for the captain; John Green, deckhand; Charles Conroy, deckhand; William Turney, deckhand; Some of the bodies of the killed were recovered. The others who were precipitated into the water swam ashore or were rescued by boats from the Keokuk Packet, which was near the Inverness at the time. The damaged boat belongs to McDonald Bros. of La Crosse, where all the victims lived.

The steamer Fulton was blown up by the explosion of her boiler at Pass a Loutre. Edward Perkins, the pilot, and Capt. Biddle were killed.

SWEPT BY STORMS.

Hail and Wind Storms Visit Various Parts of the Country.

FATALITIES and disasters from rain, wind, and hail storms are reported from various parts of the country. Near New Orleans, Lo., a tent in which a dozen people had taken refuge from the rain was struck by lightning, and one man killed and ten injured, one of them mortally. Near Beatrice, Neb., two children, who with their mother were trying to escape a threatened rise of the stream on which they lived, fell into a gully while going to higher ground in the dark and were drowned, and three children who were swept away by the swollen flood of Solomon Creek in Kansas were also drowned. Great damage was done by hail and lightning in various parts of Kansas and at Des Moines, Iowa. At Canton, Ohio, buildings were blown down by the high wind, and losses amounting to $70,000 caused. The heavy rains flooded farm lands and did great damage to crops in many parts of Illinois, Wisconsin, and Indiana.

BOLD ROBBERY IN OMAHA.

A Daring Thief Steals Mrs. Garneau's Diamonds in Her Presence.

A daring and successful robbery was committed at the house of Joseph E. Garneau, a wealthy cracker manufacturer of Omaha. As Mrs. Garneau was entering the house she met a stranger coming down stairs from her room. The man drew a revolver and told her if she made an outcry he would kill her. He then walked coolly from the house and disappeared in the crowd around the corner, when she recovered she found that $4,000 worth of diamonds had been taken from her room, together with a small amount of money.

AN OLD SOLDIER $200,000 AHEAD.

A Veteran of the Mexican War Wins a Famous Lawsuit.

JUDGE WAKELEY, of Omaha, Neb., has decided that Franklin Robinson, of California, will eventually gain possession of Omaha real estate valued at $200,000. Robinson was a soldier in the Mexican war and was entitled to a Government warrant for 160 acres of land. He authorized his father to go to the warrant and locate the land for his benefit. He then went to the Pacific Coast. Jones got the warrant, located the land, and held possession of it by virtue of a pretended assignment on the papers from Robinson. In 1858 Jones sold the land to Sydney Dillon for Union Pacific depot grounds on the Iowa side of the river for $24,000, and invested the proceeds in other property in his own name. Robinson remained in ignorance of all this until 1886, when he brought suit.

BISHOPS SUMMONED.

The Irish Clergy Will Discuss the Pope's Rescript.

It is reported by cable from Dublin that "the Irish Bishops have been summoned to Rome immediately for the consideration of their attitude toward the Papal rescript." William O'Brien, addressing the Gweedore tenants, said that Bishop O'Dwyer, by his letter regarding the Papal rescript, and Archbishop Croke, by his speech, the speaker firmly believed that the Sunday meetings marked the end of the controversy and the fall of the rescript. The Nationalists must preserve, if only for the sake of the 40,000 tenants under notice of eviction who were too poor and too much disorganized to have a convention, lest we seem to step in their horses by the indirect influence of the plan of campaign and the wholesome terror which it inspired.

WOMAN'S VENGEANCE.

Tried to Poison Her Husband, But Drank the Dose Herself.

During the session of the Circuit Court of Chicago, Friday forenoon, June 1st, Judge Tuthill Jamieson presiding, another startling tragedy occurred in connection with the notorious Dawson divorce case. Mrs. Rawson, mother-in-law of Mrs. Henry C. Whitney, the attorney of the Rawson family, and Mrs. Rawson, the banker, in the court-room, emptying five barrels of a revolver, two of the charges taking effect, inflicting wounds that will probably prove fatal. Last October Ralph Rawson, the son of Mrs. Rawson and previous husband, shot Mr. Rawson on a public street in Chicago, for which crime he is now suffering imprisonment. Mrs. Rawson is in custody.

DON'T LIKE ABBOTT.

Brother's Successor Not in Accord with the Pastoral Helper.

Some time ago Rev. S. R. Halliday declared his intention of resigning his place as pastoral helper in Plymouth Church, New York, which he has held for more than twenty years, when Mr. Beecher's successor was chosen. It is said that the selection of Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott as permanent pastor has precipitated matters. Mr. Halliday has been very emphatic in his opposition to Dr. Abbott. It is also said that the relations between Mr. Halliday and the Advisory Committee since Mr. Beecher's death have been far from pleasant, and that Mr. Halliday would have resigned several months ago had he not feared that such a step would cause trouble in the church.

BISHOPS ELECTED.

Ceremonies of an Imposing Nature by the Methodists.

THE six new bishops recently elected by the Methodist General Conference at New York have been consecrated with imposing ceremonies. The Rev. Dr. C. H. Payne was elected Secretary of the Committee on Episcopacy, and the number of Bishops elected was increased from four to six years. After a long debate the majority report was adopted, the chairman of the Committee of the Freedmen's Aid Society to the Freedmen's Southern Aid and Educational Society of the Methodist Church was adopted.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIANS.

The General Synod Adopt Various Resolutions.

The General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church met in the Union Hall, Pittsburg, Pa., reaffirming their conviction that the Constitution of the United States is "a covenant agreement with the God of heaven to administer the government without reference to Christ or Christian principles, and in consequence with the Government on the basis of this Constitution, is, therefore, an act of apostasy to Christ. The question of uniting with the United Presbyterian Church was almost unanimously rejected.

TWO OF THE GREENS KILLED.

The Feud with the Jones Family in Tennessee Ends in Another Battle.

Another battle has taken place between the Jones and Green factions in Hancock County, Tenn., which resulted in the death of two of the Green clan, Frank, the son of Hampton Green, and Lewis Moor and A. D. Jones led the attacking party. The feud began in January over a "bad fence," and Sunday, Feb. 12, one of the Jones' family was shot by Dave Green. Since then the two families and their respective friends have been under arms, and several battles have occurred.

MONEY FOR HOME RULE.

The Irish Parliamentary Fund Association Send $10,000 to Parnell.

THE Irish Parliamentary Fund Association of Philadelphia, of which Congressman John New York, intrusted Sir Thomas Henry Grattan Esmonde with a draft for $10,000 to be used by Mr. Parnell as he sees proper for the cause of home rule for Ireland. The draft was handed to Mr. Esmonde at a dinner in his honor given by a number of American gentlemen interested in the Irish home-rule movement. Mr. Esmonde has sailed for Ireland.

Decoration Day.

Memorial Day was generally observed throughout the country by appropriate exercises. All Chicago turned out to decorate repaired to the numerous cemeteries and strewed the graves of the dead with flowers. At New York Gen. Sickles and Gen. Ford delivered an oration at Gen. Grant's tomb in the presence of a vast audience. At the close of the oration the Richmond Grays and a detail of the Ninth Regiment fired volleys over the tomb. A Memorial Day address was also held at the Metropolitan Opera House. Chauncey M. Depew presided and the Rev. Robert Collyer opened the meeting with prayer, praying especially for the restoration of Gen. Sheridan to health. Col. Robert G. Ingersoll delivered a brilliant oration.

Garland Bars a Pleasure Trip.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL GEORGE W. MELLEN, of Pittsburgh, who has been observing President Cleveland's orders regarding the enforcement of the Interstate Commerce law, has received a reduction of rates between Chicago and St. Paul to take effect June 4.

DURING a storm at Lake Pontchartrain, in Louisiana, one man was killed and ten fatally injured by lightning, which struck the house in which they were.

GEN. SHERMAN'S memoirs, soon to be published, are said to contain an interesting story of his life, filled with adventures, and written in clear and simple language.

Seven or ten tragedies have been bought the building at 16 Gramercy Park, New York, for $200,000. He will refit it at a cost of $60,000, and present it to the Players' Club.

Signor Nicotera declared in the Chamber of Deputies on the 31st that the ports of Naples, Leghorn, Messina, and Salerno were dangerous, and that a cholera shoot be forthwith. The Government accepted his recommendation.

THE Grand Lodge of anarchists invaded the office of the Intransigeant and threatened M. Henri Rochefort, the editor, with bodily violence, but he not retract an offensive article. M. Rochefort defended himself with a revolver.

JOHN M. PALMER.

Portrait and Sketch of the Democratic Nominee for Governor of Illinois.

John M. Palmer was born in Scott County, Kentucky, in September, 1817, and went to Madison County, Illinois, in 1831, where he studied law and was elected Probate Judge. He was a disciple of Stephen A. Douglas, was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and was elected to the State Senate five years later. He broke with his party on the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and went back to the Senate as an anti-Nebraska Democrat. He was a delegate in one of the five who voted for Lincoln for President, and subsequently forced the Whig members to take him up and elect him. Palmer presided over the Illinois State Convention at Bloomington in 1856, and henceforth took an active part in promoting the interests of his party. He was beaten for Congress in 1860, was a Republican delegate in 1860, and the next year was one of the five Illinois delegates to the Peace Congress at Washington. When the war broke out Palmer entered the service as colonel of the Fifteenth Illinois Infantry, and soon became a Major General of volunteers, ending his army career in charge of the military administration of Kentucky in 1865. He had several quarrels with Gen. Sherman. Gen. Palmer was an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Senator in 1867, but the following year was made the choice of the party for Governor. It was his lot to call a special session of the Legislature after the great Chicago fire. Later his protest was made against the military occupation of the city under General Sheridan. It was under Gen. Palmer's administration that the new Constitution of 1870 was adopted. In 1872 Palmer strayed off into the Liberal fold as a supporter of Horace Greeley, and soon was in full fellowship with the Democratic party, where he has ever since remained. His latest appearance in public affairs was as a delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention, where he was an ardent supporter of McDonald of Indiana. April 4 last the General was married to Mrs. H. L. Kimball.

THE LABOR CANDIDATE.

Portrait of A. J. Streeter, Nominee of the Union Labor Party for President.

We publish herewith a picture of Hon. A. J. Streeter, of Illinois, who received the nomination for President at the hands of the National Union Labor Convention, recently in session at Cincinnati. Mr. Streeter is a wealthy farmer, and has served two or three terms as State Senator in the Illinois Legislature. He has accepted the nomination.

ELECTRIC BREEZES.

JUDGE CHILDS, at Albion, Orleans County, N. Y., has sentenced George Wilson, the wife-murderer, to be hanged June 27.

THE body of the man Bonville, who was tortured and killed by the Indians near Duluth, has been found. A large posse is hunting for the murderers.

ALEXANDER BOYLE has been asked to submit a design for a statue of Horace Greeley. A committee will be given at Saratoga, Aug. 15, to raise funds.

THE Ohio State Board of Pardons has passed upon the application of "Blinky" Morgan for a commutation of sentence to imprisonment for life, and recommended that the time of executing be extended to sixty days from June 1.

A. B. WRIGHT, of the wholesale boot and shoe house of Curtis & Wheeler, of Rochester, N. Y., was found dead in his berth in a sleeper on the arrival in Cincinnati, it is supposed from an overdose of opium, as a vial bearing the opium label was found by his side.

THE body of Henry Whitehouse, aged 22, was found near Portsmouth, N. H. His throat had been cut from ear to ear, and his body were disfigured with gaping wounds. James Hines was arrested for the murder. Whitehouse was killed while returning from his home, at Amherst, Mass., to spending her children to the care of her husband.

AN Augusta, Maine, dispatch to a New York evening paper states that Mr. Blaine's private residence was broken into recently and his private and business correspondence, including financial operations, which were in his library, was overhauled. Nothing miscreant is not known, neither have the papers abstracted been recovered.

NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

What Is Being Done by the National Legislature.

THE following resolution, offered by Mr. Sherman, was adopted by the Senate on the 24th ult. by a strict party vote: "Resolved, that the attention of secrecy be removed from all the proceedings of the senate in executive session, and that the rule be stricken out under consideration. The proposed river and harbor bill was reported to the Senate. The bill as it came from the House carried an aggregate appropriation of $19,000,000. Mr. Cockrell, who spoke against it, proposed a reduction of the amount to $10,000,000, and pointed out objections to the bill. The Senate, then, on the motion of Mr. Allison, referred the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, reported by Mr. Cockrell, with a favorable report, and proceeded to consider the bill, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Cockrell, to strike out the clause appropriating $100,000 for dynamite. The estimates were for $1,000,000 for dynamite, and the House had allowed $100,000 for the establishment of a Government dam at Rock Island Arsenal. Cockrell, in urging the amendment, said it had been unwonted in battle after twenty-five years of peace, and he was sorry, by the Treasurer, yesterday for an assistant Secretary of War; by Mr. Plumb, to-day, for dynamite. Mr. Cockrell's motion was finally carried by a vote of 28 to 25. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to revise the grade of General Sherman and to place on the retired list Gen. Sherman was passed by the Senate on the 30th ult. by a vote of 32 to 16, the negative being given by Senators Berry, Coke, Harris, Jones, of Arkansas, Vest, Vance, and Wilson, of Maryland. The House spent everything section on the fisheries treaty. Mr. Dingley said it was a "humiliating, and the treaty as a disgraceful, humiliating, and shameless surrender." Mr. Hitt said the treaty was a long, long, and shameful, the legislation, and further consideration was postponed. The House then took up the bill to provide for the retirement of Gen. Sherman, and after a long debate the House passed the bill by a vote of 157 to 54. The House then proceeded to consider the report of the conference committee on the Indian appropriation bill, and after a long debate the House receded from its amendment to the Senate amendment, providing that the Indian Bureau should be administered in the interest of the civilization of the Indians. The House then receded from its amendment to the Senate amendment, providing that no money should be used for the purchase of Indian lands in Dakota, and the House

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

For President of the United States—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.
For Vice President of the United States—
ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in the Detroit Opera House, at Detroit,

ON THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1888,

At 11 o'clock a. m., to nominate candidates for state officers and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1885, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention

L. M. WESTON, Chairman.
WM. J. McGEE, Assistant Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix County is entitled to four delegates.

THE democratic badge this year will be a red bandanna.

THE New York Star calls this the "bandanna campaign."

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has signed the bill appropriating eighty million dollars for the payment of pensions next fiscal year.

ALLEN G. THURMAN is not only one of the most upright men in the nation, but he is one of the most thorough scholars in public life.

THE Detroit Weekly Free Press was held until after the convention, and gave three pages of convention news in addition to the usual quantity of excellent reading matter.

MR. SHERMAN is nearing the top of Pisgah and catching another glimpse of the promised land. So great a man as Moses had a similar experience, yet never got there.—Lake City Independent.

MR. CLEVELAND'S inconsistency in becoming a candidate for re-election notwithstanding his expressed disapproval of a second term might not look so glaring to the republicans if they had any chance to beat him at the polls.—Lake City Independent.

"The 12,000,000 voters of the country when they come to vote, will care little for the poor and petty disapointment and heartburnings of the few, and will look only at the grand result of pledges kept and realized for the good of all. The administration of Mr. Cleveland has justified his election. It has been honest—and how much that means when we consider recent history! It has been temperate, wise, and patriotic. In my judgment the people will not change it for something 'they know not of.' The people are more concerned in good government—honest trusteeship of the common stock—than most politicians suppose. One disappointed politician will make more noise than a thousand good voters who have neither been appointed nor disappointed. But the thousand voters count. This year I think they will be with Mr. Cleveland. He is stronger personally with the masses than he was four years ago; the party is stronger also in the confidence of the country, only tentatively given at the last election. We have been on trial more than three years. The party and the president may have made mistakes—but there are spots on the sun. But the country has been served with wisdom, ability and integrity, and that is precisely what the people stipulated for when they selected Mr Cleveland four years ago. They will prefer a repetition of this service rather than risk the untried—or too much tried—administration that may be offered by the other side."—P. A. Collins.

CLEVELAND AND THURMAN.

The democratic press of the United States is jubilant. It never gave so unanimous an endorsement of the nominees of a national convention as this year. For months the rank and file of the party have declared as with one voice that Grover Cleveland must serve a second term to accomplish the reforms so satisfactorily begun. It was only necessary for the representatives of the party to ratify that determination by a formal nomination by acclamation. For second place a man has been selected who is so just, so fair, so thorough, and so true to the people, that his political enemies recognized his eminent abilities and honored him with a seat in the United States senate. He is a man eminently qualified to lead the nation should anything befall our noble president.

Not one word of reproach can be raised against the men who have been selected as our standard-bearers. They are a ticket that will solidify the toiling masses, and will sweep this country in the interests of democracy and the emancipation of trade from the fetters of unnecessary and burdensome taxation.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Every reader of the JOURNAL has one or more friends whom they can, with a little effort, persuade to become regular readers and patrons of the paper. As an inducement to use that effort and influence now, we offer the paper until November 8th for the small sum of 25 cents—the sooner you begin the more papers you get for the money.

Any person receiving the paper without having ordered it, may know that some friend has paid for it for them, if the address tag shows the figures Sample following the name.

Send us the names as soon as possible.

In consideration of this very low rate, and to avoid separate accounts, it is desired that campaign subscriptions be paid in advance.

Send us the names this week.

Ratification at Petoskey.

The nomination of Cleveland and Thurman was received with satisfaction by all parties, especially the democrats, who are enthusiastic over the nominations. Prominent republicans admit that the ticket is a strong one and that it will sweep the country next November. A ratification meeting was held Saturday evening at Mitchell hall, and speeches were made by C. S. Hampton, Dr. Calkins and Dr. Williams, all prominent democrats. Cannon were fired and a large bonfire built in front of the hall. Work will be commenced at once by the Cleveland club of the city.

THE WINNING TICKET.

Press Comments on the Democratic Nominations.

"With the public record of Cleveland and Thurman the democracy needs no platform of words to define its policy."—Hastings Journal.

"With Grover Cleveland and Allen G. Thurman as our standard bearers, the democratic party can triumphantly march to victory this fall.—Petoskey Democrat.

Roswell P. Flower of New York, says of the democratic ticket: "The nomination is the strongest one that could possibly be made. Nothing can keep the democratic party from success on the present issue."

Cleveland is the only president in the nation's history ever renominated without an opposing vote; Thurman's nomination was almost as unanimous, and both will be elected by an overwhelming majority."—Howard Record.

The ticket will sweep the country like a cyclone. The different labor factions through the country will undoubtedly drop their respective candidate and rally to the support of the democratic ticket.—Cheboygan News.

"The platform is plain and outspoken; no dodging, no equivocation. The ticket is invincible. Thurman is still the 'noblest Roman of them all' and the republicans will this year have a urgent political business over a wide extent of territory."—Fort Wayne Journal.

The democratic convention yesterday supplemented its wise renomination of Grover Cleveland for president by the equally auspicious nomination of Allen G. Thurman for vice-president. It had to take Cleveland and it would take no one else but Thurman."—Chicago News.

"The most ardent supporters of Cleveland can hardly fail to be astonished by his wonderful hold upon his party as shown by the current of events at St. Louis. The anti-administration men and the tariff-reform faction are alike swept away before the tremendous following of his Cleveland lieutenants."—Kansas City Evening News.

"The nomination of Thurman means something; there is no abler, purer or honester man in the whole country, and it was eminently wise to select a candidate honored and revered the country over rather than one simply because he hailed from Indiana or any other particular state. Cleveland and Thurman is most worthy ticket."—Jackson Patriot.

"President Cleveland enjoys the distinction of being the first president unanimously demanded and chosen by his party as candidate for a second term. It is a proud distinction, fairly won and richly merited. The United States will have a good president and vice-president in Cleveland and Thurman for the coming four years."—Big Rapids Herald.

"It is a strong ticket. Cleveland is stronger with the people than when nominated four years ago, and no man in the country occupies a warmer place in the public estimation than Allen G. Thurman. His name stands for rugged honesty, indomitable courage and uncompromising democracy. The republican party will need to put up its very best man to even make a fair race."—Saginaw Courier.

With Cleveland and Thurman for the democratic candidates, it matters very little who the republicans nominate at Chicago, so far as the final result is concerned. With these men to lead the democracy, the best the republicans can hope to do will be to name a ticket that will possibly carry one or two states and thus prevent the electoral votes being cast unanimously for the democratic candidate.—Traverse Eagle.

With Cleveland and Thurman, the democracy will go forth to a certain and, doubtless, to most decisive victory. Throughly organized as they are throughout the land, with the advantage of national power, possessing the confidence of the people, proved by their past record, and flushed with the view of greater honors to come, they will move steadily on to a triumph of far broader proportions than a year ago was deemed possible.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The St. Louis gathering rose above itself when, in any form of words, it commended the president's message. The plank is fairly alongside of Cleveland; he can stand on it. That the name of Thurman will strengthen the national ticket will not be denied by his most confirmed partisan opponent. Every votebat revengeful monopolies throw against him will bring a thousand suffrages that no lesser candidate could have commanded."—Chicago Herald.

James H. Walker, one of the big wholesale dry goods dealers of Chicago, and always a republican, said to one of the Chicago papers: "I am afraid that Cleveland and Thurman is too strong a ticket. Cleveland has the call and there is a natural aversion among business interests of the country to make a change. Thurman has an excellent record and the people of the west echo the sentiments of Mr. Cleveland. They demand tariff reform." There are plenty republicans who entertain this same kind of feeling.

The harmony and unanimity that have signalized the deliberations of the democratic national convention of 1888 are without precedent in our political history. The candidate for president nominated by acclamation; the platform adopted without contest or dissension; the candidate for vice-president nominated on the first ballot—such is the unparalleled record.

The democratic administration has been so fair, so just, so economical and so regardful of the interests of all classes of our citizens, without regard to party, that the people are satisfied. The public record is made up now, and it will not change. When election comes an irresistible majority of the votes will be cast for Cleveland and Thurman and honest government.

The ticket as constituted is a singularly happy combination of talent and command, as few if any possible combinations could, the warm support of the entire party. Mr. Cleveland represents the young democracy fired with zeal for reform, and his credentials are the brilliant record he has made in four years of earnest and successful striving to purify the government from evils and corruption which the politician brought upon it in a quarter of a century of misrule. Thurman represents the "Old Hickory" element and bringing into the canvass a lifetime of patriotic devotion to principle and statesmanlike service. His nomination is not only a well-deserved tribute to one of the grandest exemplars of democracy, but a wise recognition of the value in a presidential campaign of the mature elements of the party.—Free Press.

"Cleveland and Thurman—there is magic in that legend. It is the combination which gives every assurance of zeal, courage and discretion. The democratic party is the party of action the party of progress. Its creeds are inspiration from the past, but it moves forward to fresh fields and to new conquests. What has been done is only an incentive to go on in the work upon which it has entered. No doubt any longer exists in the mind of any one as to the purposes of the democratic party toward the tariff. Nothing doubt may have existed as to the meaning of any phrase of that instrument is removed by the declaration that the party reiterates those declarations as interpreted by the messages of Mr. Cleveland, and the subsequent approval of the action of the democrats in congress, who for four years have labored to give force and effect to the promises of 1884."—Henry Watterson's Courier Journal.

MICHIGAN MENTION.

Sunday Gleanings From Our State Exchanges.

Elk Rapids will celebrate the Fourth with a band tournament, base ball, etc.

James I. Mead, a prominent greenbacker of Lansing, died last Saturday morning, aged 71 years.

The Grand Rapids Democrat starts the campaign with a complete new outfit of type and a new press.

An exchange says: In Michigan large tracts of hemlock are being advanced upon for its full crop of bark and timber. In Northern Michigan, the work of lumbering hemlock this season will be especially pushed, and the increasing demand for this description of "bull stuff" is fairly indicated by the gradual appreciation of prices. Time need not be wasted in telling the relative value of hemlock to that of pine; for the innumber who to which the latter has been constantly subjected. Suffice to say that hemlock is rapidly dropping into the place nature designed for it in the economy of architecture. In Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania, large tracts of hemlock are being lumbered and placed upon the market at paying figures. The immense hemlock forests of the west are also being rapidly utilized, and especially will the present season witness a perfect revolution in sentiment regarding this much abused staple.

Anti-Compact Insurance Law.

LANSING, June 8. The supreme court, by its decision to day denied a mandamus in the case of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company vs. the Commissioner of Insurance, sustains the "Anti-Compact" law prohibiting all contracts preventing a free competition in regard to rates and the regulation of their business by companies not organized under the laws of the state, but doing business direct on pay their business direct on pay with the law under protest, and asked for a writ of mandamus to test the law with the above result. The case may go to supreme court of the United States, as it was claimed by counsel for the insurance company that questions arising under the federal constitution are involved, and the point was raised so as to warrant an appeal.

On Friday last a man named Clugg of the Ellsworth mill, met with an unfortunate accident while felling trees in the woods near Echo. The tree he was cutting knocked a small beech onto him and drove his nose nearly into his head.—East Jordan Enterprise.

Clement J. Strang, at one time local editor of the JOURNAL, has secured control of the Black River Falls, Wis., Independent, and promises to make an independent local newspaper, touching politics only incidentally. His friends will rejoice at his success in his new field.

The City of Charlevoix came into port last Saturday, and loaded with 327,000 hoops and 200 kerosene barrels for the Wilson Hoop Factory, for Milwaukee. There was a throng of people visiting her during her stay. She is a magnificent steamer.—East Jordan Enterprise.

The Charlevoix Historical Society held a special meeting on Monday evening, at the residence of R. W Kane, and voted to tender a reception to the graduating class of the high school, at the residence of A. Buttars, immediately following the commencement exercises to be held at the opera house next Tuesday evening.

"I never in my life," says John Wanamaker, the millionaire merchant of Philadelphia, "used such a thing as a poster, a dodger, or a handbill. My plan for 15 years has been to buy so much space in a newspaper and fill it up with what I wanted. I would not give an advertisement in a newspaper of 400 circulation for 5,000 dodgers or posters."

Mr. Smithson has in his possession a camp outfit for cooking, which Sir E. Hubbard carried in the Crimean war. The whole outfit is so compact that it is carried in a leather case not over twelve inches square, yet includes oil stove, tea kettle, tea pot, two cups for carrying tea and coffee, and a dark lantern or lamp. In packing, the whole fit together very compactly.

Dr. Crouter called at our office on Tuesday and informed us that the telephone line will be taken from across the head of the Arm and run along the bridge, the draw being cabled to allow vessels to pass. In a few days or two a body of men will thoroughly overhaul and strengthen the line in this vicinity, the demand for the service being now sufficient to warrant every attention from the company.—East Jordan Enterprise.

W. N. Hideman, of the Louisville Courier Journal, a regular visitor at Charlevoix every summer, recently took a trip to Kalama, Fla., a lake over six feet four inches long, which weighed 108 lb. Mr. Hideman used a rod and reel, and was alone when landing his fish, which drew the skiff half across himself and a negro oarman two miles. This tarpon is said to be the gamiest fish for sport in the world, catching, and the landing of this specimen must have been exit enough to satisfy anyone.

On Monday last, J. M. Alexander and Chas. Roher made a splendid catch of fish at the head of South Arm above the bridge, near where the river flows in. Besides a large quantity of bass and other small fish, perch eels etc., they got five muskalunge, averaging 25 lb. each the smallest scaling 21 lb and the largest 31 lb. Fish of all sorts are more plentiful than ever, and sportsmen are jubilant over their success. The small streams in the neighborhood are literally filled with good sized speckled trout. —East Jordan Enterprise.

This year of grace, 1888, marks a new era in the Charlevoix high school, in that a class of six young ladies have completed the prescribed course of study, and will graduate with honors. These young ladies are Misses Lina E. Washburn, Jessie Stover, Josie M. Litzan, Phila Wood, Maggie Enos and Edith M. Hawkins. It is safe to predict that each of these young ladies that they have studied diligently to accomplish this result, as well as to fitted themselves for I. Prof. Enos, who have maintained a constant and lively interest in the work.

If parents desire their children to receive the benefit of our high school they should allow them to attend regularly. When a pupil is absent a day his classmates are one day ahead. It may be that they have gained some principle which will help them to go no further. It may be the key to several days' work. All this absent pupil has lost. He cannot be placed in a separate class, he cannot get his lessons for he does not know how the class classed you over the same work for the benefit of those who have been absent, the result is a confused struggle on the part of the pupil to regain what has been lost, which often lasts for days and sometimes for weeks. In reviewing the different branches, the brightest pupils often fail in some parts, and upon inquiry as to the cause, almost invariably the answer is: "I was absent when we had that lesson." Absence from school cannot always be avoided, but should be as much as possible.

☞ "Pansy's own magazine (The Pansy) for June is here. Of special interest are two descriptive letters from missionaries in the far east. The magazine is filled with choice literature for young folks from eight to fifteen, and from many illustrations. Pansy, Margaret Sidney, Faye Huntington, and other favorite writers contribute to its pages. The Pansy still specially meet the wishes of that class of our readers who prefer that their children should read something having a religious tendency, on Sunday. The subscription price is but a dollar a year. the publishers D. Lothrop Company, Boston, will send a sample copy for 5 cents—or samples of all their magazines (four) for 15 cents.

This week begins the great presidential campaign of 1888 by the renomination of President Cleveland at St. Louis. To him are the people indebted for many reforms and economic administration of affairs and other benefits, among which is the forcing of a live and pertinent issue into the coming canvass, viz, the unequal taxation of high tariff laws maintained since the close of the war for necessary purposes and political propaganda. It is upon this question we desire every reader of the JOURNAL to be fully informed and to aid by his own effort to instruct others by soliciting them to read THE JOURNAL during the campaign. At the small sum of 25 cents for the campaign for THE JOURNAL is the most effective way of doing good and serviceable campaign work, as also to obtain the best results with least cost. No less an authority than the United States supreme court has decided that for a government officer to place his hands upon the property or possessions of one citizen and transfer it to another is no less a robbery, though it be done in a legal manner under the sanction of unjust laws. Now that President Cleveland has given the people a chance to voice their opinions by their vote, it is their first duty to fully understand the issue, and THE JOURNAL is the best medium through which to gain such information.

The Schofield Concert Company.

Concerning the merits of this company, which will appear at the opera house June 21st, the press of the state are unanimous in praise. The following are but examples:

Mr. Jam Schofield, with the banjo, scarcely has a peer in the United States, and last evening he was most ably supported by Mrs. Schofield. The instruments fairly talked, and especially was this true with the negro melody, which was given to the first encore—we say first encore, for the audience seemed to have no mercy and would have kept Mr. and Mrs. Schofield before them half the night, if it were possible to have done so.—Grand Traverse Herald.

Of Mrs. Etta Yale we are constrained to say that her song, "Marguerite" is enough of a card to fill the largest auditorium the city of Cork. Her interpretation of both sentiment and composer is simply perfect. She is not one of those artists whose music is to be enjoyed, one must turn one's back to. She is good to look upon. Her facial expression follows the sentiment of her words and a deaf man could enjoy her singing.—Gaylord News.

Prof. Wellenstein is a man who can play and transpose Liszt, Beethoven, Mozart, and the whole category of celebrated composers at a glance. No better proof of his talent in this direction could be cited than the concert which was given last evening.—Telegram-Herald.

Sunday School Department, Charlevoix Baptist Church.

You are cordially invited to come to our Sunday school which meets every Sunday at noon. We will do our best to make it pleasant and helpful to you. If there are any members of your household who are not connected with a Sunday school, we cordially invite them to come to ours. We have in each department —primary, intermediate and adult—a place for them of any age who are disposed to find a Sunday school home with us. While not wishing to draw to our school any who are connected elsewhere, we kindly urge upon the importance and benefit of regular attendance at some school. Our own personal experience leads us to believe that persons of every age are not only benefited but made happy by attending this service. All who unite with us will receive a warm welcome, and we as a school will endeavor to make your union with us mutually pleasant and helpful. Visitors are always welcome.

Each ticket will be good for the seat numbered on it until five minutes before eight. Those who are to participate, request that parents do not bring young children to the hall. Friends will please call early for tickets.

Atwood.

ATWOOD, June 12.—A heavy shower Saturday evening, after which the sun came out marshal out of the hall with their new caps. They make a fine appearance, and their marching betrayed the fact that Charley Brown their teacher, is a thorough drill master. The music they rendered showed that the boys have worked hard, and have had careful training.

Sunday was children's day at the M. E. Sunday school at Atwood, notwithstanding the rain, was a success. The school house was crowded, the decorations were fine. A mound of light green moss with the word "Welcome," attracted considerable attention. The bouquets were many and added a charm to the entertainment; the singing and speaking were excellent; the address by the pastor on "Higher Education," was listened to with rapt attention, and approved by all in the house.

S. A. Brown commenced the foundation of the M. E. church this week.

B. Wilkinson is painting his house.

The boys band stand is nearly completed.

W. Knight and C. Pearl have traded cows.

Burgess.

BURGESS, June 11.—The fine shower of Sunday made crops look promising.

Morrell Long of Bay and Mr. J. Colwell of Shawnassee, were the relatives in Hayes over Sunday.

Miss Alice Kent has given such good satisfaction in her school that the officers are trying to secure her services for the winter term.

The infant twins of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Dake were buried last week.

George and Sam Long of Bay, hauled several loads of potatoes through Hayes last week to Charlevoix.

There is a pile of new lumber being hauled onto the farm of Henry Hamlin. Looks rather suspicious, Henry.

W. B. Sayers is getting out quite a quantity of bark on his land opposite the Hamlin farm.

SKILLFUL PITCHING

How the Base-Ball Twirler Practices the Art of Curving the Sphere.

Out-Shoots and In-Shoots, Up-Curves and Down-Curves, Raise-Balls and Jump-Balls, Etc.

The Manner of Holding and Delivering the Ball to Produce Certain Effects.

A great deal has been said and written about the art of curving a base-ball, and scientists have worked for months trying to solve the principle involved in the peculiar shoots and curves which a sphere takes after leaving a pitcher's hand. It is probably easy enough to explain how a ball can be made to commence curving the moment it leaves the pitcher's hand, and continue in a semi-circle until it loses its force and falls to the ground, but it has never

The Astute Chinese Minister.

The accompanying cut is an excellent portrait of Chang Yen Hoon, the Chinese Minister to this country. He is an astute diplomat, and is said to be much interested in Chinese emigration; has set up a fine establishment at Washington, and is entertaining in gorgeous style. His banquets and entertainments to Cabinet officers and Senators been satisfactorily explained how a ball may be made to move in a straight line for quite a distance, and then take a quick shoot. Thus:

THE OUT-SHOOT.

Or how it will move along in a straight line for a certain distance, and then fall to the ground, although traveling at a remarkable rate of speed when it falls, as for instance:

THE DROP-BALL.

And yet such wonderful phenomena are witnessed at every game of ball played during the year. The average artist can, as a rule, explain his art, and the why and wherefores of this and that, but to the ball pitcher the cause of the effect produced by his work is as a sealed book of whose mysteries he is as ignorant as the tiniest of infants. It is true that he can tell you that if he holds a ball in a certain position and gives it a peculiar jerk in delivering it, a peculiar curve will be the result; but he cannot tell you why that curve is produced, and so he does not bother his head about it, as long as it proves deceptive to the batter.

It may prove interesting to the reader to recount the different curves which a pitcher, and the manner of holding and delivering the ball to produce those curves. It must not be understood that every pitcher has all these curves, as some of them are peculiar to some men, while these same may be ignorant of other curves. It is often said, for instance, that this or that pitcher has a good drop ball, or a good jump ball, by which it is meant that his most deceptive delivery is one or the other of the above. The most common curve, and without which the average pitcher can not hope to be effective, is the out-curve. This may be obtained by holding the ball firmly in the hand, with the tips of the first and second fingers closely pressed to the sphere. The ball, in being delivered, is given a peculiar jerk, it slides across the tips of the fingers, and out between the first finger and the thumb. The in-shoot is as common as the out-curve. It comes straight for a distance, and then shoots in toward the batter, as for instance:

THE OUT-CURVE AND IN-SHOOT.

It is a very effective ball, because more speed can be given to it than to any other. It is also not so hard on a pitcher's arm, as it does not require that peculiar jerk needed in producing the curves. To produce it the ball is held the same as the out-curve, except that in place of the ball being delivered through the thumb and index finger, it is allowed to glide out right across the tips of the first and second fingers.

A remarkable ball is the drop ball, now used so much. It comes straight from the pitcher's hand for a short distance, and then falls to the ground. It is produced in several ways, and by some pitchers is held the same as an out-curve. It must be started at a good height, most pitchers delivering it from above the shoulder. It is then given a peculiar jerk downward as it leaves the hand. It is a great ball with some of the most effective pitchers in the country, such as Clarkson, Hatfield, Hudson, Sowders, and others. It entire control of the ball, however. The hand is held with the palm toward the ground, and the ball is brought from as high as the shoulder, with a sweep down. When released it is allowed to glide out over the tips of the fingers. It seems to ride the air for a short distance, and then takes the peculiar jump noted.

These are the principal curves and shoots used on a ball field, although some men find a more effective delivery in a change of speed than in the use of curves. Stories have been told of men who could curve a ball in a zig-zag course, or have it jump a few feet never has and never will be accomplished, simply because a zig-zag curve does not exist. The rules for curving a ball, as given above, are not the only ones that can be used, as some men have, for instance, three fingers in producing an out-curve, etc. But if followed and practiced they will produce the desired effect.

Misjudged.

It is sometimes impossible to avoid the appearance of evil; we are suspected of deceit, we know that we are suspected, and yet we are unable to clear ourselves from the imputation. A lady once gave a chapter from her own experience to illustrate the deceitfulness of appearances, and the difficulty of convincing one's self right when circumstances are persistently adverse:

"Aunt Ann once gave me a hideous green dress. I think she had a suspicion that I didn't like it, but she never would believe that I really intended to wear it. The first time I wed to her house after receiving it, she asked:

"'I know why didn't you wear your green dress?'

"'I couldn't, aunt,' said I, quilly; 'I spilled some ink on the front breadth.'

"She looked at me rather suspiciously, but only said, 'Lower the drapery a little, and see if you can cover the spot.'

"So I did, but the dress was doomed, and the next time I saw her, I was obliged to falter, in answer to the same question: 'I did put it on, but in going down stairs I tore a large, threecornered rent in the skirt.'

"And so it went on from bad to worse. Never did I don that dress without injuring it in some way, and I actually never did wear it in Aunt Ann's presence. I didn't bring one of these calamities on myself, but I always felt that my offended benefactor thought I did.

"Oh, yes, no doubt," put in a listener. "I've been through exactly the same sort of thing. I once went to a picnic, after all the events of the day had combined to prevent my preparation of lunch. I tried to make cream-cakes, and put in soda instead of salt; I made a sheet of cake, and it fell flat as an old newspaper joke.

"By the time I had discovered this second failure it was twelve o'clock, and I was tired, so I made up my mind to go to the picnic empty-handed, contributing only the story of my woes.

"I did fourth very boldly, obligingly laughed over my misfortunes, but I afterwards heard one neighbor confide to another the fact that 'Jane Towers was always master high, but it she didn't mean to bring anything to the picnic, she needn't have made up such a long story to get out of it.'"

FISK AND BROOKS.

The Prohibitionists Nominate Their Candidates for President and Vice President.

Woman Suffrage Wins an Overwhelming Victory in the Convention.

Text of the Platform—Convention Proceedings—Enthusiasm and Sentiment.

Nearly two hours before the time set for the opening of the National Prohibition Convention at Indianapolis on Wednesday, May 30, delegates began to assemble in Tomlinson Hall. There were a number of farmers among the delegates, and their habits of early rising made the delegates, so they got together in the rear of the hall, and made speeches and cheered to their hearts' content. The galleries were crowded with visitors long before the convention was called to order. Many were unable to get even standing room. The decorators busied themselves with striking fondness for decorating themselves with badges, many wearing several light and flaring ones of bright colors, while nearly all of which medallions of Gen. Fisk were appended. The hall was admirably adapted for a great gathering like the convention, well lighted, and with the opposite platform and the speaker's stand hung gaily with bunting, and a number of large Prohibition mottoes decorated the front of the gallery. Among the sentiments the following: "No Rum; No Slavery; Distinction in Politics; No Sex in Citizenship," "The Prohibition Party is the True Anti-Slavery Party." At a little before 10 o'clock the Marshals of the convention, who had been busy marshaling the delegates into place, were seen with the canes of St. John and Daniel embellished upon it. It was hearty applause, but the great outburst came when the New Jersey Young Men's Prohibitory Club came in, marching by a large banner in yellow, on which was inscribed, "Our Mothers, Wives and Sisters, and how dare we do evil that they may do good." The cheering was tremendous when the well-known face of Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, of Boston, Mass., appeared. She was the real lion of the occasion, and the cheering seemed to a set beside the Chairman, and how dare follow a speech of such notable enthusiasm. Chairman Dickie called the convention to order at 10:30 o'clock, and Mr. Stewart, the nominee of the party in 1876, offered the prayer. Secretary Cook read the call for and when the venerable figure of General Neal Dow, of Maine, came up on the stage he received a cheer greater than one could think that the enthusiasm had reached its height, but it was not long before it was plain that the cheers for St. John where a tremendous burst of applause followed, which lasted for a minute or two, but it had its effect.

The audience then sang "Praise God from whom All Blessings Flow," Rev. Mark Hopkins Dickie announced that the Rev. R. L. Dashiell, of Indiana, had been appointed Temporary Chairman, and the choice was unanimously ratified by the convention. An address of welcome was then delivered by Governor Porter, an Indianapolis attorney. Many of his references to the Prohibition party, and to the Rev. John Pierce, "if you do not like yet, you will yet," were heartily welcomed by Indians.

perfectly red and puff up, showing inflammation upon it.

A ball which was formerly used considerably, and which is yet used occasionally, is the raise-ball, as it is called. Thus:

THE RAISE BALL.

It consists merely in starting the ball from close to the ground and forcing it to rise gradually until after it passes the plate. It is easily produced, but is very hard to command, and hence is not particularly effective. It was formerly used with wonderful effect by Tom Bond, of the old Hartfords team. Its chief exponent now is McCormick, of the Pittsburgh club, who continues to use it with effect. He has wonderful command of it, and has speed combined, which renders it unusually effective.

Many people who watched one of last season's pitchers marveled at his effectiveness, and wondered how he succeeded in fooling the batters with what seemed to them a straight ball. The close observer would notice that the batters almost invariably struck under the ball. This was owing to the fact that he was master of what is called the jump ball, which, owing to the fact that few men have mastered it, remains as probably the most effective ball pitched. It comes up to the plate, apparently, perfectly straight, and then takes a quick jump. This is one of the phenomena which scientists have yet to explain satisfactorily. It is produced by holding a ball well in the palm of the hand, with the tips of the fingers closely pressed to it, the first and second fingers having almost

BLAINE SAYS NO.

In a Letter to Whitelaw Reid the Maine Man Positively Withdraws.

Ohio Prohibitionists Nominate a State Ticket—Other Political News.

[New York dispatch.]

The Tribune, of this city, publishes the following letter from James G. Blaine:

PARIS, May 17.

Whitelaw Reid, Esq., Editor New York Tribune:

MY DEAR SIR—Your cable dispatch of Tuesday, received the 9th, has been followed by another to the same effect, which I did not, before leaven that my name may not be presented to the national convention by a delegate from Maine, instructed to support the Republican party. A single phrase of my letter of Jan 31, from Florence (which was dispatched from Paris) has been taken literally and literally, and the organization of the Prohibition party is imperatively demanded in State and Nation.

"2. That any form of license tax or regulation of the liquor traffic is contrary to the principles of any party which supports regulation by license; or tax enters into an alliance with such traffic and becomes the actual foe of the state's welfare, and that we arraign the Republican party for its recent action in the most abject attitude in favor of the licensed liquor traffic whereby they oppose the demand of the people for prohibition and through open complicity with the liquor cause defeat the enforcement of law.

"3. That we recognize in the use of intoxicating liquors a common enemy of the State and Government, to defeating support from our greatest antagonist.

"4. Texas an adequate public revenue being necessary, it is our purpose to which we pledge our lives, but equal duties should be so adjusted that no class of citizens, whether the Roman Catholic or the Protestant, shall be unjustly burdened to prevent from food, clothing, and other comforts and necessaries of life, and imposed upon such articles of import as will give protection both to the manufacturer and to the laboring man, thereby giving the competition of the world.

"5. That civil-service appointments for all civil offices, either elected in their duties, should be based upon moral, intellectual, and physical qualifications, and not upon party ties or party necessities.

"6. That the right of suffrage rests on no more circumstances of race, color, sex, or nationality, and that where, from any cause, it has been held from citizens who are of suitable age and mentally and morally qualified for the exercise of an intelligent ballot, it should be restored to the people through the legislature of the several states or the amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and we pledge our lives, the establishment of uniform laws governing marriage and divorce.

"7. For prohibiting all combinations of capital and labor to the injury of the people, and we pledge our lives to the enforcement of such laws.

"8. For the preservation and defense of the rights of the laboring man, without any regard to any one religiously observe the same on Sunday, and we pledge our lives to the enforcement of such laws.

"9. For the abolition of the Chinese, and a common method of settling national differences, and we pledge our lives to the enforcement of legislation be applied to the settlement of disputes between large bodies of employes and employers, and that the laws of the states would remove the burdens, moral, physical, pecuniary, occasioned by the liquor traffic, and that it of its earnings, and would grove to be the wise and beneficent agent of the laboring man, and we invite labor and capital to unite with us for the accomplishment of this end.

"10. Recognizing the prospects of which promise greater every day, can be imperfect only by the ballot in the hands of the women, we pledge our lives to the enforcement of such laws.

"11. That the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of intoxicating liquors shall be made public crimes and prohibited and punished as such.

"12. That the Prohibition party is obedient to the commands of our Lord and Saviour, and that no potent shall have the power to make a law in direct violation of the Ten Commandments, and that no potent shall have the power to make a law in direct violation of the Ten Commandments, and that no potent shall have the power to make a law in direct violation of the Ten Commandments

FARM AND GARDEN.

EVERY DAY MOTTOES THAT NOW CALL FOR ATTENTION.

A Plan by Which Pastures May Be Constantly Cropped by Sheep Without Danger of Injury to the Grass Described and Illustrated.

The accompanying illustration shows how an Englishman feeds his sheep on pasture by the use of hurdles, and furnishes suggestions some of our readers may be glad to act upon. Southern Cultivator gives the following description of these hurdles.

The hurdles are twelve feet long, and are made with a stout pole bored with two series of holes twelve inches apart; stakes six feet long are put into these holes so they project from them three feet on each side of the pole. One series of holes is bored in a direction at right angles to that of the other, and when the stakes are all properly placed they form a hurdle, the end of which looks like the letter X

ENGLISH METHOD OF HURDLING SHEEP.

The above engraving shows how these hurdles are used in the method of using them. A row of these hurdles is placed across the field. The field in which they are used consists of six acres. A strip of ten feet wide is thus set off, upon which the sheep feed. They eat up all the grass upon this strip and that which they can reach by putting their heads through the hurdles. The hurdles are then turned over, exposing another strip rather more than four feet wide at each turn. When this is fed off, the hurdles are again turned over. The sharp points presented by the hurdles prevent any trespassing on the other side of them, and by using two rows of hurdles the sheep are kept in the narrow strip between them. Their droppings are very evenly spread over the field, and it is richly fertilized by them. At night the sheep are taken off. The growth of the grass continues under this treatment, and when the field has been fed over, the sheep are brought back again to the starting point and commence once more eating their way along.

How to Pack and Ship Small Fruits.

For shipping straw berries long distances or for eastern markets the gift crate is advised, a thirty-two quart ventilated crate (quart baskets) such as Florida growers use.

Blackberries are not good shippers, so better avoid sending to distant markets. The strawberry case is the most suitable package. Gather this fruit as soon as fairly colored—while yet firm.

There is a good demand for the black as well as the red raspberries from the canning and preserving establishments, but for immediate consumption the red varieties take the precedence and are most largely shipped to market. Pint boxes, in most, but three gallon cases, are a proper package for this fruit, which will not stand long shipment.

It is advised that gooseberries be shipped only in drawers or strawberry cases—twenty-four quarts—as, while good shippers, they are liable to heat in barrels. Ship them full grown, before the fruit turns brown. For currants use the same packages as are advised for gooseberries. Raspberries are not good.

Whenever practicable ship the fruit at night. Saturday is a bad day on which to make shipments. Friday is considered the best day of the week. Avoid if possible getting goods into market Sunday morning. Sunday night shipments usually strike a good market.

Treatment of Young Trees.

Professor Goessman, of Amherst, Mass., calls attention to the importance of the after care of trees newly transplanted. He says:

It often happens that trees received in good condition and very carefully planted, fail to grow, from want of after care. This, for the first season, consists in seeing that a sufficient supply of moisture is present about the roots.

In the time of drought watering may be avoided by covering the ground for several feet about the tree with mulch, five or six inches deep, or by stirring the surface soil once or twice each week. Trees planted in turf are especially liable from the moisture being taken up by the surrounding grass roots. This can only be prevented by covering the ground with a mulch of any waste material, like corn stover, old hay, tan or shavings, sawdust, or fine brush, other pomace, meadow mud or peat.

The same result may be obtained by packing the loose stones often found about the tree. Mulching material of any kind should not be in contact with the trunk of the trees from Nov. 1 to May 1, unless they are protected by banking up by a tin or tar paper band about them to protect from injury by mice.

Where it Pays to Apply Ashes.

Those of very old wood do not contain so much potash as that of younger growth. Ashes generally pay well on all ordinary crops, but are specially adapted to the wants of fruit trees, grapevines and all kinds of vines, clover and peas. Perhaps the very best use that can be made of them is to apply them to sweet and Irish potatoes, also specially good for peanuts. But they are also good for both cotton and corn, especially in old and sandy soils, and may be applied in the drill as any other fertilizer, or dropped in the side of the cotton or corn at first plowing. We can suggest no reason for your apparent failure to derive any benefit from the application to corn. Do not mix them with acid phosphate, as the potash and lime in the ashes would cause the phosphate acid to revert as soon as moistened.—Southern Cultivator.

POULTRY IN RESTRICTED RUNS.

The Ground Necessary to Keep Fowl Healthy—Fencing.

When fowls must be kept within certain limits the question arises "How much ground is required to keep the grass fresh?" for grass is beautiful only when fresh and clean. Half an acre to every fifty full grown fowls is the rule, and this is hardly enough for the heavier breeds

POULTRY FENCE.

A very good plan when the runs are restricted is to have gravel runs to the houses of moderate capacity for each fifty birds, and a large field in grass, where they can go in turns during the day.

When fencing is necessary the best material is wire netting, which, if galvanized, lasts a long time. That with two inch mesh is fine enough. An admirable fence is shown in the cut. The bottom half is of galvanized iron and the upper half of wire, thus forming a complete division between runs and, being at the same time a shelter against rain, wind and sun. Movable fences are a good invention, as these prevent a frequent shifting of runs.

Bones for Fertilizing.

Bones may be reduced by dissolving with sulphuric acid or boiling them in lye, also, in a slower way, by mixing them up when broken in a heating compost of horse manure, earth, ashes, etc., and to be kept moist with drainage from the stable. Bones in burning lose the nitrogen they contain, but as they are chiefly valued for their phosphoric acid, which is mostly retained in the ash, this is the easiest way of making a small amount of them available. When burned in a wood fire they will add largely to the value of the ashes as manure. Ten per cent of potash is contained in the ashes of hard woods.

Aid to Fence Building.

The fence laying device shown in the illustration is from Ohio Farmer, and is described as follows:

A is an upright piece to set in line with other stakes in the line for a fence, which may be 6 or 7 feet in length, sharp at the bottom end and with 2 holes mortised in it squarely. One is 8 inches from the bottom to receive the tail piece B, which should be 8 feet 8 inches in length; the other about 12 inches from the bottom to receive the cross piece C, which is 4 feet in length and projects 2 feet on each side of the stake A. It will be seen by the illustration that the cross piece C is at right angles with the tail piece B. These pieces are made of material 4 inch thick by 2 inches wide. The tail piece B should have a block or stake fastened on the end of it 5 or 6 inches in length, sharpened on the end so as to stick into the ground. Now place the sharpened stake in the ground at the starting point, with the upright piece A in line with the stakes along the line of fence, the cross piece C will show you where to lay your corner stone or block. Then go on and put the stake on the tail piece B into the same hole from which the upright piece A came out, and so on. With 11 feet rails this will give a fence with 16½ feet panels and straight as a line. This will be found a valuable and expeditious aid in laying a fence.

FENCE LAYING DEVICE.

Things Worth Knowing.

Celery is often grown as a second crop among the onions, five rows of the onions being sown twelve or fourteen inches apart, and the sixth row being left vacant for the later sowing of celery seed or the setting of celery plants.

Lice on young chickens can be prevented by making sure that hens are not lousy when set. Good Persian insect powder, well sprinkled through the feathers, is a quick and convenient cure.

The great points to be observed in grafting are the making of smooth, clean cuts; the placing in perfect contact the inner barks of scion and stock; then the whole cut surface and every portion of the scion to be perfectly covered with the grafting wax and the exclusion of air and water.

Dealers and manufacturers call the longest wools combing wool, the next Delaine or medium, and the shorter staples are clothing wools, and they are graded as superfine, fine, medium and coarse.

Manure should never be placed in contact with the roots when setting out a tree, but used for a mulch or top dressing.

Discussing the Food Question.

The relative value of various vegetables as an article of food was once under discussion among a party of East End villagers, when one of the number imparted this valuable piece of information "I don't think much of turnips. There isn't much sustenance in 'em, as they're more'n seven-fifths water." Another one of the number freely, if not intelligently expressed his opinion regarding the adulteration of food. He said "It's awful to think of the fearful extent to which our food products are being adulterated. Nothing seems to be free from the wicked practice. Here are all the stores selling what they call genuine New Orleans molasses, and yet I have been told by a custom house official of my acquaintance that there hasn't any of the stuff come through the custom house in years. It's a pitiful thing the way we are continually cheated in this way."—New York Sun.

A Happy Family.

Circle is the greatest blessing of our circles. Dyspepsia, of the most important matters to be attended to, is that the Liver and Kidneys are in a healthy condition. More trouble arises from derangement of these organs than any other cause, often resulting in Diabetes, Bright's Disease, and other difficulties that are generally counted incurable. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will prevent and cure all these difficulties with great certainty. Large bottles $1. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she wildeoed its' severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of "'s King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept quietly, and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at Crouter's Drug store. 2

Cholera.

And the milder forms of bowel difficulty, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, &c., all come from a disordered digestion attended with pain in the Stomach, Cramps, Colic, &c. The best remedy for all these attacks by taking Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure, which is a most wonderful remedy. Never known to fail to give immediate relief. As an outward application it is unsurpassed for Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprains, Strains, Lame Back and Side it can't be beaten. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

The Vercics Unanimous.

W. h. Salt, druggist, Hopkinsville, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters, as they never fail to satisfy those who use them, and in the case of Rheumatism of 20 years standing, Electric Bitters have wrought a complete cure. Mrs. Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony for the world to know that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Stomach. Only 50 cents a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Toothache.

Did you ever have a cracking, jumping, snapping, roaring, bothersome, toothache, that kept the whole family in an uproar until 3 o'clock in the morning? Many have it, but all have not heard of the wonderful cures made by Hamilton's Toothache Drops which are warranted to cure in one minute. Safe yet effective. Price only 25 cts. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Got to Stand It!

Mr. A. bought his wife one bottle of Parmelee's Blood Purifier, and now she thinks he has got himself into business for she derived so much benefit from it that she must have another bottle or two and be permanently cured. There is no Purifier known so efficient as the working as this. Only $1.00 per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Backien's Arnica Salve.

The best Salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage made by Charles Hoag and Ann Hoag, his wife, to Fred W. Mayne, dated the 16th day of March, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on August 26th, 1884, in Liber 4 of mortgages, on page 96, and assigned by said Fred W. Mayne to Jas. Van Wali, by deed dated on page 98, of said Liber 4 of mortgages, on the 26th day of August, 1884, said Van Wali assigned said mortgage to the Charlevoix Savings Bank (a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the state of Michigan) of Charlevoix, Michigan. Said assignment was recorded in said office in said Register of Deeds' office in said county, in Liber 4 of mortgages on page 97, and re-recorded in said office in Liber 2 of mortgages on page 36, on March 16, 1886, on which mortgage there is now claimed to be due and unpaid the entire principal of said mortgage, viz: Four hundred Dollars, principal, and interest on one hundred Dollars since 7th. The said mortgage is now owned by the aforesaid Charlevoix Savings Bank, and no proceedings having been instituted either in law or equity to collect the same, and the undersigned, the owner of said mortgage, by virtue of the power of sale therein contained, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, or so much as may be necessary to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, with interest and costs, including an attorney fee of twenty dollars, stipulated for in said mortgage (an attorney and counselor at law being entitled to foreclose the same, as provided by statute, on Tuesday, the 19th day and at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Circuit Court room, in the village of Boyne City, in said county, the place where the last circuit court was held, at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Lewis Block (said being the building in which the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is held), in the village of Boyne City, in said County, State of Michigan, in which said county the premises covered by said mortgage are situated, to satisfy said mortgage, as described as follows: Lots five (5) and ten (10) of block two (2) of Mason's addition to the village of Charlevoix, and lot one (1) of section six (6) thirty-three (33) north, of range six (6) west, in Charlevoix County, Michigan.

THE OLD FIGHT AGAIN.

AND ALL THE ELEMENTS IN FAVOR OF CLEVELAND'S RE-ELECTION.

Two Weighty Facts—A United Democracy. Enthusiasm for Cleveland—Blaine's Down Game and How It Disgusts the "Favorite Son"—Historical Precedents.

Here are two little facts for "our friends, the enemy," to remain with. No president renominated has ever been defeated unless a commercial revulsion had come in the meantime, and the united Democracy has only been beaten twice since the constitution was adopted. These are only precedents, they may say, and precedents may be overthrown. Well, let us take a few more facts. In the first place, it is now evident that Mr. Cleveland will enter the campaign with the hearty and enthusiastic indorsement of his party, while if Mr. Blaine runs he will enter it only at the end of a mauve sewer which many Republicans have already denounced as a disreputable trick, with a certainty of leaving the supporters of some other gentleman in a very ugly temper.

How could it be otherwise? Mr. Blaine issued his Junes letter, which was understood by every honest reader to be an official notice to the "favorite sons" that they could take the field, and take it they did with a grand rush. Now the Blaine sons propose to put the laugh on them, to announce in the true Big Tim Winkle style, that "we don't count that swear of us, time." And then Mr. Blaine only will drew in a Pickwickian sense to give the other candidates room to slay each other? So Mr. Blaine is to be credited with having told a nice little political fib, and the other fellows are to be laughed at for having believed him. A man can take defeat and smile; but to be defeated and laughed at—ah, that is what will hurt!

"But we won't nominate Mr. Blaine," you say. Won't you, though, with nearly three-fourths of the delegates already chosen from the controlling states known to be for him? True, many southern delegates are for Sherman; but what does a southern delegation amount to in a Republican convention? Flanagan, of Texas, will be there, perhaps, and Mahone, of Virginia, and a few other reformed rebels' like Longstreet, Mosby & Co.; and Flanagan will repeat his humorous query, "What are we here for if not for the offices?" and when the New York delegation points out, as it will be able to do, that New York money can be had for Blaine and Blaine only in the campaign, we all know how the southern delegation will turn. If you really think Blaine will not be nominated, just ponder this question. Can you name a single convention, state or congressional, in which there has been a tussle between Blaine and anti-Blaine, that the Blaine faction has not completely downed the other fellows, wiped the floor with them? Even in Virginia the ones all powerful Mahone could not create a respectable diversion in favor of Blaine's senatorial rival. The convention will nominate Mr. Blaine, and in that act will fix upon him the stigma of dishonesty; they will say, in effect, our man was only playing one of his Mulligan tricks when he wrote that Florence letter, and we knew him too well to believe him.

We have now one nice Thoroughbred BULL CALF, six months old. He is a dandy. Also, several Grade Calves, of both sexes. Come and see them. It will do anyone good to look over our Stock. ☞MILK, BUTTER, AND VEGETABLES FOR SALE.

J. S. & J. R. DIXON, Terrace Farm, Charlevoix.

A PARTY OF VIOLENCE.

A Stirring, Simple and Truthful Editorial from the Courier-Journal.

The attitude of the Republican party on the threshold of another presidential campaign is conclusive proof of its obsolete character it looks backward, not forward. It does not see the whole of its country, but only half of it. It is or re concerned to make a point upon the internal affairs of Louisiana, and to divert the whole pressure of the nation to this, than to consider what is really done to be done about it. It seeks to inflame, not to allay, the passions and prejudices of the people. It is a war party, not a peace party.

The protest on which it keeps up its hostility to the south—that the negro vote is suppressed—is not sincere because it does not aim to cure the evil of which it complains, but to organize the solid north by every manner of appeal to sectional ignorance and belligerent feeling. That the negroes of the far south are a different species from the negroes of the north and the middle and border states, and wholly unfit to vote and unable to protect their vote, and therefore bound inevitably to be the prey of what ever force is applied to make them vote, or to prevent their voting, is not allowed to enter into the account, or accepted as an argument. Nevertheless these are the simple facts, and until they are recognized we can hope for no sectional reform.

For ten years the repression of the white race tried, and such scenes of corruption and carnage as make the heart sick to recall. We have had ten years of normal conditions; and they have been years of development and progress. We have had no more of the government. No one claims that the millennium has been reached, in the south, as in the north, ignorance is at a discount, whereas, during the reconstruction period which the Republicans seek to restore, it was at a premium. There is in southern elections, as in northern elections, the customary amount of fraud; but there is no longer the violence which prevailed whilst the Republicans were forcing the white people to submit to the black people by arbitrary acts of congress and military power. In a word, we have peace and law where we had bloodshed and tyrannies, and if one negro is no longer the equal of two white men, he is at least protected in his rights of person and property, which is more than the Republicans were able to insure him.

The thorough emancipation of the black man can be wrought only by time, and, even by time, only through conditions of complete repose from race agitations. The foolish theories of fanaticism urged in his behalf, and the wicked schemes of party interest advanced by the Republican leaders for their own benefit, can work nothing but mischief to him, no matter what cries they may do. The whites of the south have no motive to oppress and every motive to befriend him individually. He constitutes our labor system. Nor is he politically dangerous except when organized on race lines against the white race, the majority of the Blaine leaders for delving into the dead past.—St. Paul Globe.

The Blaine Hatred.

Our Washington dispatches indicate that the Blaine hatred has extended to nearly all of the prominent Republican male leaders of the party. This is not surprising. Blaine's delirium is apt to conjure up all sorts of horrible shapes, and the Blaine specter, for obvious reasons, is chief among them. It was he who made the man Blaine, despite his letters of declination, his most formidable competitor. Each accordingly hates him with a cordiality which is unknown and would do his interests no harm out of the way. Naturally, too, the most prominent and conspicuous figure in part of Candidate Sherman. The memory of man goes not back to the time when Sherman was not a candidate, and to see his hopes frustrated and deprived of his world. Or he could continue to run for the office of President, and yet, again the Blaine specter rises to confront him. Hence his rage, in which the others seem to take part—a rage the fruitful of which, should Mr. Blaine definitely decide not to be a candidate, is only too evident. It is a fine spectacle of the disloyalty, the subordination of party fealty to personal ambition, the utter demoralization prevailing in the Republican party, which this Blaineiadem with which the Republican leaders are afflicted presents. But in passing it may be added that it is a fear which the Democratic party does not share. It defeated Mr. Blaine once. It is in even a better position to do it the second time. The presentation of his name would cause it no forebioding whatever. As to the smaller fry—Sherman, Allison, et al.—it would view the success of any of them by securing the nomination with as much indifference as it now does their beseiling efforts to secure an empty honor. —St. Paul Globe.

No Reason for Lying.

The underlying principle of the Republican party is its sentiment of war, the purpose of its being, sectional supremacy, and these eliminated, there can remain no other reason for the existence, and it will disappear as the old Federal party, which was the old Whig party, successively disappeared, before the more liberal aspirations of popular freedom and the larger needs of national progress.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Farm Produce Then and Now.

These western congressmen who advocate a continuance of the war tariff give as some fabricated figures on the improvement in the condition of western farmers since James Buchanan's time, but they carefully omit the fact that the prices of farm products were a great deal higher in New York years than now. Whatever improvement there has been (and the farmers have to look earnestly to see it) has been in cheaper transportation. The lowest price of wheat in New York in 1858 was $1.30, and the highest $2.17, more than twice the present price.

Still In the Ring.

Blaine's candidacy for the nomination is but thinly concealed by the explosion of the Maine Republicans over the results of the recent elections in that state, and it is apparent that Maine believes that her favorite son is still in the ring.—Chicago Herald.

BLAINE'S DILEMMA.

He is between the devil and the deep sea.

Cry of the "Infant" Industries.

Is it not time to attend to matters that concern all races? But here a nightmare has settled down upon Republican leaders. The oppressive tariff, the medicine for the war, has become the daily food of the convalescent nation. The cry is: More of it! More of it! Our farmers are taught that but for protection they must kill their sheep; that they cannot raise wheat, or potatoes, or cabbage without protection, that, indeed, they are the most helpless people in the world. All this is done to recondile the farmer to dear clothing, food and tools. The word protection has a soothing sound. Thousands repeat it, quite unaware that it means a monopoly. It is that there hid beneath it a corroding canker, all the more deadly in that it is unseen.

Like the bat of Indian lakes,
Whose pinions fan the wearied air asleep,
And, sucking thus the dreamer's pain,
Drinks out the life blood from his vein.

The bugbear of free trade alarms no sensible man, for no sensible man will shock business. Revenue reformers stand where Webster and Clay, and latterly Garfield, stood. In the language of the last, they favor that protection that ends in free trade, they favor that policy which, in the words of Lincoln applied to another subject, will place protection "in the course of ultimate extinction." They demonstrate that protection which builds up "trusts."

It is not a shame to see Republican leaders advocating free whisky and dear food and clothing enriching the $120,000,000 whisky and tobacco yield without oppression to any one and positive benefit to every one? In the general darkness The Chicago Tribune is a beacon light. It may yet save the party.—Judge Dickson, of Cincinnati, in Chicago Tribune.

Extortion and Betrayal.

The Herald has not failed to keep some main national facts before the people. The surplus of $175,000,000, the surplus income of the last year, the surplus in a day and the annual levy of nearly $400,000,000, fourth largest in all the universe, and yet these have served as the base line of all The Herald surveys the present government. The war found us with a debt of $50,000,000, or 60 cents per capita; it leaves us with twenty years of taxation at the rate of $6.33 per capita per annum. The average man feels that this per annum ought to be closed as soon as possible, and that the nation should be relieved to the financial blessings it enjoyed before the war. The robbery in the interest of protection demands that the poll tax of $6.33 is none too high, and that means must be invented to be definitely piloring the levy and definitely bleed the nation.

The Democratic party, in its leader, the president, has taken a firm ground on the side of the people, and duty to the people. He has addressed a return to the ways of peace. He has recommended the reduction of this $6.33 more than four times as much money as is needed for the public business is "protected" by these high taxes. Protection was invented to be definitely priming the levy and definitely bleed the nation.

Protection Is Cutting.

The progress of reform during the past twelve months has been marvelous and demonstrates the value of courage and conviction in politics. The Republicans insisted at the time of the defeat of the Morrison bill that the Democrats would not dare to force the fighting on the tariff issue at the beginning of a presidential election. They have lived to do this very thing. They have formulated the recommendations of the president in the Mills bill, and they are using all the force of party organization to make that bill a law.

A DAY IN THE HOUSE.

THE House of Representatives, on the 9th inst., voted appropriations for handsome public buildings at Jackson, Mich., and Ottumwa, Iowa. The tariff discussion was resumed. A spirited discussion arose on fast Mr. Hiscock spoke favoring the placing of tax on the free list of articles of foreign manufacture. Mr. Hiscock said that manufactories are rapidly springing up in the United States that trade which put a stop to all such industries.

GEN. SHERIDAN.

The Physicians Find the Patient's Heart is Not So Badly Diseased as to Preclude All Hope of Recovery.

A thorough examination of Gen. Sheridan was made by the physicians on Sunday. It was found that there was extensive trouble of the mitral valves of the heart, and that owing to a change in their structure they did not fully close the aperture, and thus allowed blood to be forced back into the heart. This trouble was ascertained positively, and the rushing of the blood back into the heart could be distinctly heard. It was thought that the aortic orifice might also be diseased, but the General's breathing was still too heavy to allow this to be definitely determined. It is said, however, that the disease of the heart is not such as to entirely preclude hope of the General's recovery. The liver was found to be of larger size than was feared. Albumen and casteli were found in the kidneys, but as they have been acting quite freely it was not thought that they are seriously affected. On the whole it can be said that the consultation was of an encouraging nature. The case is, however, a desperate and critical though not altogether a hopeless one. On Monday the General was resting comfortably, and his chances for recovery were regarded as better than at any previous time.

COL. KING-HARMON DEAD.

He Passes Away at His Estate in Ireland.

Col. E. King-Harmon, member of Parliament for East Ennis of Thanet and Parliamentary Secretary for Ireland, died, aged forty-seven years. The death of Col. King-Harmon was very unexpected. He had been suffering from diabetes for several months, and a short time ago took a trip to the Cape of Good Hope, in the belief that he would derive benefit from the voyage. He was much better while on shipboard, but sustained a relapse within a few days after his return to London and became prostrated. His physicians ordered his immediate removal to his estate at Rockingham, County Roscommon, Ireland.

DRAGGED OUT TO DIE.

James Foster, a Negro, Taken from a Kentucky Jail by a Mob.

At Henderson, Ky., twelve miles below Evansville, Ind., James Foster, accused, was taken from jail by a mob and hanged. Foster was arrested at the instance of John Howard, charged with outraging the latter's little 8-year-old daughter a few miles from Henderson. Foster, on being arrested, strenuously denied his guilt, but the evidence was convincing. He was taken to the woods and strung up.

Knights of Labor.

The National Convention of the Knights of Labor iron-workers which was in session at Pittsburg last week, adopted resolutions indorsing General Master Workman Powderly for re-election, and pledging Robert D. Layton the support of the furnacemen for Secretary. This latter action may bring about a serious internal conflict in the General Assembly.

Lives Lost in a Death-Trap.

A tenement house was burned at Lowell, Mass., Sunday night, and it was found after the fire that three of the inmates had perished in the flames. The dead are: Eugenia Vallerand, aged 18; Peter Vallerand, aged 8; Delia Vallerand, aged 5. Mother of the family and another occupant named Roisivert were fatally hurt. The house was a death-trap.

Decrease in Wheat Acreage.

The Department of Agriculture reports that the approximate reduction of wheat acreage as compared with last year is about 1-750,000. The percentage of reduction for the winter-wheat region is placed at 12. The acreage of barley is nearly the same as last year. Rye is practically the same as last year. The area of cotton appears increased in every State except Florida.

Death at an Old Lady.

Mrs. Mary Mossmer died at Findlay, Ohio, aged 101 years 5 months and 5 days. She was born in Virginia Jan. 1, 1786, and went to Ohio in 1833, first settling near Marietta, and in 1840 removing near Findlay. At her death she was the oldest woman in Northwestern Ohio, if not the oldest in the State. She was the mother of ten children, three of whom survive her.

Miss Rives to Be Married.

The sensation of the hour in fashionable circles in Richmond, Va., is the reported marriage next fall of Miss Amelia Rives, Virginia's gifted authoress, to Mr. John Armstrong Chanler. The train stopped since his boss talked about for the past few days, the announcement having taken everybody by surprise.

OHIO TRAIN ROBBERS FOILED.

A "Big Four" Baggagemaster Shot Three Times and Fatally Injured.

A daring attempt was made to rob the "Big Four" train, which left Indianapolis nearly the other evening. The train stopped at Delphi, a small station about eight miles from Cincinnati, and when about a mile further on its way, and moving quite slowly, five men jumped on board. Three of them boarded the baggage car and two entered the cab of the locomotive. The baggagemaster, Joseph Ketcham, tried to eject them. The three men jumped upon him, but he fought to save the valuables in the car. Suddenly there were five shots, and Ketcham fell to the floor of the car. In the cab of the engine the two other robbers were meantime battling with the engineer, James Boyd, and his fireman, who were trying to compel them to jump off. There was a pitched battle, in which the robbers were beaten off the engine. Conductor William Lofer was also attacked by the ruffians. The train crew were preparing to ride the car. There was another fight, in which the robbers were put off the train without securing any booty. Ketcham will die. Meanwhile parties are scouring the country, and the capture of the desperados is not improbable.

LIQUOR WINS A BIG VICTORY.

The Supreme Court of Michigan Kills Part of the Law as Void.

The liquor law adopted by the last Michigan Legislature has received another blow from the State Supreme Court, says a Lansing dispatch.

The decision this time invalidates the provision which declares that brewers and saloonkeepers shall not become responsible for damages, and is the result of a test case brought by Frederick Schwaner, a brewer, against Peter Dey, of Ionia County. Schwaner's brewery was burned by lawless men, a claim was made against the township under the provisions of the law, and Schwaner, in the sale of liquor (was becoming sureties on the bond of the saloon-keeper, Dey, and he became involved in difficulties with the provision of the State Constitution which provides that "no person shall be deprived of his liberty or property without due process of law," and also in conflict with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deny to any person within its jurisdiction equal protection of the laws. The court concurs with both of these objections, and holds that the section of the liquor provisions of the act in question, by establishing of sureties and facilities for collecting judgment from them, and are reasonable restrictions upon the right to carry on the business. The provision prohibiting a person from engaging in business in which he is engaged from enforcing a claim against the township, which are equal to all other persons would be a violation of the constitutional principle. The right to make such contracts is included in the right to liberty, and it is also a right of property. The court holds that the law does not give a right to property as either title or possession, thus practically leaves the regulation of the traffic where it was before the new law was made, except that the tax is higher.

T. H. GARRETT DROWNED.

The Baltimore Millionaire Perishes in a Collision at Sea.

T. Harrison Garrett, a brother of Robert Garrett, and manager of the banking firm of Robert Garrett & Sons, of Baltimore, was drowned in the Patapsco River. His yacht, the Gleam, in which he and a party of friends were going to Baltimore from Annapolis, was run down by the steamer Joppa, and sunk, being struck amidships and almost cut in two. All hands on the Gleam were rescued except Mr. Garrett, who was seen by a passenger on the Joppa to fall overboard. Mr. Garrett was manager of the firm of Robert Garrett & Sons, which was founded by Robert Garrett, his grandfather. He leaves a fortune of several millions of dollars.

JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE DEAD.

The Great Divine Expires After a Short Illness—Sketch of His Life.

The Rev. James Freeman Clarke, the well-known Unitarian divine, died at his residence in Jamaica Plain, near Boston, aged 78 years. Although he had been in poor health for two years or more his condition was not considered dangerous until within a few weeks. His death resulted from a complication of diseases. James Freeman Clarke was one of the best-known clergymen and reformers in the United States. He was a native of New Hampshire. In 1850 he started the church of his view—the Church of the Disciples—to which he ministered up to his death.

BURNED IN THEIR BEDS.

Eleven Persons Lose Their Lives in a Burning Hotel.

Rockdale, Texas, has been stricken with a death-dealing fire. It originated in a brick building occupied by the Mandine Hotel. Of the thirteen persons in the hotel eleven perished. Those known to have been lost are Mrs. W. A. Brooks, wife of the proprietor of the hotel; her four sons, aged 4, 6, 9, and 15 years; J. T. Briscoes, wife, and two children; Isaac Crown and a traveling salesman, supposed to be named Pemberton Pierce, representing George Zigler, of Philadelphia. D. M. Oldham, representing F. Connor & Co., of Galveston, escaped uninjured, and W. A. Brooks, proprietor of the hotel, was pulled out of the room occupied by his family.

FEARFUL WINDSTORM IN CANADA.

Houses Blown Down While the Inmates Narrowly Escape with Their Lives.

The several wind and tornado storm known for many years passed over Montreal, Que., and district, doing much damage, particularly in the country districts, where much valuable timber was destroyed and many houses were blown down. At Coteau-du-lac the house of O. Perrault was demolished and Perrault's wife and five young children were instantly killed. Several other disasters are reported from various points, and it is feared the loss of life will be heavy. Two wooden houses in St. Jean Baptiste, north of the village were blown down, but the occupants escaped. It is feared the storm did much damage to vessels on the river and lower lakes.

DEATH OF GEN. STOUGHTON.

A Prominent Warrior, Statesman, and Politician Passes Away.

Major General W. L. Stoughton, warrior, statesman, and politician, died at his residence in Sturgis, Mich., recently. He went to the war as Lieutenant Colonel of the Eleventh Michigan, having resigned his office of United States District Attorney to help save the Union. He was promoted to Colonel and Brigadier General for gallant and meritorious services, and afterward brevetted Major General. He lost a leg at Stone River. After the war he was Attorney General of Michigan two terms and member of the Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses. He was buried with military honors.

A LAKE VESSEL MISSING.

The Schooner Blanche with Her Crew Believed to Have Been Sunk.

A Toronto telegram says the schooner Blanche, of Lakeport, has without doubt sunk with all hands. She left Oswego May 26, with a cargo of coal for Brighton, Ontario, and has not been heard of since. Another schooner which left Oswego on the same day struck by a heavy squall, accompanied by a thick fog, which lasted three hours, and it is supposed that the Blanche went down in this squall. She belonged to A. Campbell, of Lakeport, and her crew consisted of Captain John Henderson, Mate William Leeds, two sailors, and Anne Smith, cook, all belonging to Lakeport.

AN ACTRESS' GOOD LUCK.

Marion Hartranft, a Variety Star, Left a Fortune by a Chicago Lady.

Miss Marion Hartranft, a member of the Lily Clay Gaiety Company, playing at the London Theatre, in New York, has resigned her position, and proposes to retire from the variety stage. A telegram received some valued news which prompted her to take this step. She has fallen heir to an estate valued at $50,000. The circumstances of the information is that an eccentric old lady, living on Peoria street in Chicago, had died and bequeathed her entire estate to the actress. Miss Hartranft is the descendant of an old Pennsylvania family. She is 22 years old, and went on the stage through necessity. She is a niece of ex-Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania.

KILLED BY A BURSTING ENGINE.

A Sad Fatal Explosion, Resulting in Three Deaths and Serious Injury to Four.

Three men were killed and twelve injured by the explosion of a portable engine on the outskirts of the wholesale district at St. Louis, Mo. The killed are: J. H. Duffey, foreman, Kohn's company; Thomas Kennedy, of Kohn's company, and a traveling salesman, supposed to be named Pemberton. Fatally scalded: Pat Walker, intoxicated, and W. A. Brooks, proprietor of the hotel, was pulled out of the room occupied by his family.

A MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

At Wheeler, a Discharged St. Louis Waiter, Hits a Man with a Bottle and Cuts Two Inflicting Fatal Injuries.

The Hotel Rozier, at St. Louis, was the scene of a treacherous assault which is likely to result in murder. The parties to the affair were the head waiter, Thomas Gordyce, a white man, and his assailant Al Wheeler, one of the colored waiters, who, the police say, was compelled to leave the place, where he attempted to kill a waiter in his employ. Gordyce was stabbed in the head with a bottle filled with water. Wheeler escaped.

DILL GE-HAY.

The First Indian Prisoner Ever Admitted to the Ohio Penitentiary.

The first Indian prisoner ever received at Ohio Penitentiary arrived at Columbus from Arizona and was registered as Dill Ge-Hay. The prisoner is sentenced for ten years for having killed another Indian on the reservation. Dill Ge-Hay was accompanied by two other United States prisoners, both mail robbers. "Dook" Smart is on a life sentence for robbing the mail and placing the agent's life in peril; and George Mills, the other robber, gets five years of Buckeye discipline.

TEN YEARS FOR PETE MCARTNEY.

The Aged Counterfeiter Can Soon Compare Louisiana and Illinois Penitentiaries.

Pete McArtney, the noted counterfeiter, has been sentenced at New Orleans. McCartney was convicted of passing counterfeit bills and raising $1 bills to $10 and $50. When he was arraigned he said a few words in behalf of himself and claimed that the evidence in the case was not sufficient to convict him. Considering the age of the prisoner, the sentence is the most severe in the law, which is fifteen years. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $5,000 and suffer imprisonment at hard labor in the Illinois State Penitentiary for the term of ten years.

SHOUT IN HIS ACCOUNTS.

The Treasurer of Merrick County, Neb., Found to Be an Embezzler.

Colonel W. H. Townsend, Treasurer of Merrick County, Neb., has been found to be an embezzler, his shortage amounting to about $35,000. A committee of experts appointed by the County Commissioners to examine his books have finished their investigation and reported.

ASSIGNED TO THE GALLOWS.

July 13 Fixed for the Hanging of Brooks, Alias Maxwell, Who Butchered Preller.

In the Supreme Court in session at Jefferson City, Mo., Chief Justice Norton fixed the day for the execution of Hugh M. Brooks, alias Maxwell, the murderer of C. Arthur Preller, at the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, on the 13th of July. At this time last year the execution was fixed for the 3d of last August, but the case was carried to the United States Supreme Court. There is no further appeal for the case, and executive clemency is all that can be hoped for by Brooks' friends.

A COLORADO DEATH.

"Commodore" Stephen Decatur, Brother of Gov. Hunt of Chicago, Dies in Colorado.

"Commodore" Stephen Decatur, one of the mysteries of the West, died at Rosita, Col., a small mining camp in the Sangre de Cristo mountains and in a wooden shack. Decatur's real name was Stephen Decatur Hunt, and he was born in Seneca County, New York. His older brother is ex-Lieut.-Gov. Bross, of Illinois, President of the Chicago Tribune Company.

SHOT BY MOONSHINERS.

Witnesses Against Illicit Distillers Attacked by a Party of Ambushed Men.

Officers report a desperate state of affairs in Clay County, Ala. A few days ago an attempt was made to murder Alex Hughes, who had been a witness in several cases against moonshiners. He lived in Clay County, and was first on the ground by an unknown party ambush. He was struck by seven buckshot in his arm and body. The revenue officers report that the moonshiners are killing or intimidating witnesses, so that they can have a big run in the illicit distillery business.

A TERRIBLE DISASTER.

Eighteen Persons Killed and Forty-one Injured by a Train in Mexico Crashing Through a Bridge.

A railway accident occurred just outside of Tampico, Mexico, in which many lives were lost. A construction train was passing near a bridge by a cow and a donkey which were on the track. The train crashed through the bridge, and went down an embankment. The dead and injured were taken to the City of Mexico. So far as known, 18 were killed and 41 injured.

BOODLER M'GARIGLE.

He Is Having a Fine Time—Has Been in Chicago.

McGarigle, the ex-Chicagoan, is at Banff Hot Springs, near Demaid, B. C., spending his ill-gotten gains in a very reckless way. He says he was in Chicago since his escape, but that he only remained one night, and drove out the next morning in a covered carriage. He has been living a pretty fast life in the mountains, and says he will stay there all summer. He is going to China by way of Victoria, B. C.

THIRD 250TH ANNIVERSARY.

Interesting Celebration of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Boston.

The Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Boston has celebrated the 250th anniversary of its organization. There was a parade, a review by the Governor, divine services, a banquet, and a dream-night section. Among the guests were a deputation from the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of London, and General Middleton of Canada.

THEY STRUCK AN AVERAGE.

Governor Porter's Son Robert Killed—His Brother Shoots a Man Seriously.

Dudley Porter, a son of ex-Governor James D. Porter, was shot and killed by Alexander B. White, cashier of the Commercial National Bank. Porter had accosted White and made a motion as if to draw a pistol. Armoody Porter, another son of the ex-Governor, assaulted Bill Edmunds and shot him three times. Edmunds had shot Porter some days ago.

GRASSHOPPERS.

Otter Tail County, Minn., Hatching Them Out in Myriads.

A dispatch from St. Paul says that Prof. Luger, entomologist of the State University, just returned from Otter Tail County, reports myriads of grasshoppers, of the Rocky Mountain variety hatching out. The danger to the Northwest is imminent. Gov. Moreill has sent four carloads of material for the destruction of the pests. Grave apprehensions of the spread of the scourge are felt.

A Missing Hoosier.

Joseph Ridgeway, son of David B. Ridgeway, a prominent citizen of Indiana, has not been seen since he left home to go to Wabash. He was dressed in green and carried his home life pleasant, no explanation can be given for his disappearance. The Young Ridgeway leaves a wife and two children.

Trade Looking Up.

Bradstreet's, in its review of the week, says: "Special telegrams state that general improvement in the trade situation throughout the country has stimulated the retail and jobbing trade, principally grceeries, dry goods, and boots and shoes, to a moderate extent."

THE PLATFORM.

Declarations of the Democratic Party on the Issues of the Coming Campaign.

Text of the Resolutions Adopted by the National Convention at St. Louis.

The Democratic party of the United States, in National convention assembled, declares:

Reaffirmation of the principles of the Democratic platform of 1884 is the greatest duty and highest privilege of the party, and the most fitting means of celebrating the return of a Democratic President and a Democratic majority to the National Legislature after a long period of Republican misrule, and of the enactment of a tariff for revenue only, in accordance with the pledges of the party, we deem it unnecessary to make any other declarations of principles than those contained in the platform adopted by the Democratic National Convention in the memorable year of Democratic victory, but we do reiterate the conviction that the proper, honest, and economical administration of the government, in the interest of the people, is the best guarantee of the perpetuity of the Union, and we recall the fact that the last Democratic National Convention in a time of profound political tranquillity, and when no party was in power to be affected, or office to be gained, by the adoption of a wise and statesmanlike course, boldly and successfully met the issues growing out of the prosperity of the people.

We do now, in the spirit of conciliation and mutual concession which then prevailed, and which gave to the Union its greatest good, and which, if continued, would have prevented the present necessity for this declaration, and would have saved the country from the dangers and evils which have resulted from the violation of the principles of the Democratic party, and from the refusal of the Republican party to adopt and carry into effect the principles and policy of the Democratic party, hereby submit to the judgment of the people the following as the principles and policy which should be adopted and carried into effect, in the interest of the people, for the relief of the people from the burdens and dangers which have been imposed upon them by the Republican party, and for the restoration of the government established by our fathers, and for the preservation of the Union and the perpetuity of our institutions:

1. We believe that the Democratic party will continue, with all its energy, to oppose the Republican policy of taxation, which, by the imposition of duties upon the necessaries of life, has been made to yield a revenue far in excess of the needs of the government, and has been so adjusted as to fall most heavily upon the poor, and to yield the greatest profit to the wealthiest class of our people. Judged by Democratic principles, the present tariff law is indefensible, on account of the inequalities and injustice of its operation, which, through unnecessary taxation, drains and condensation, from the laborer, the farmer, and the producer, the means of comfort and happiness, and transfers them, in the form of enormous profits, to the hands of a few, who, under the fostering care of the Republican party, have become the beneficiaries of the partial and unjust system of taxation.

Judged by Democratic principles, the present tariff law is indefensible, on account of the inequalities and injustice of its operation, which, through unnecessary taxation, drains and condensation, from the laborer, the farmer, and the producer, the means of comfort and happiness, and transfers them, in the form of enormous profits, to the hands of a few, who, under the fostering care of the Republican party, have become the beneficiaries of the partial and unjust system of taxation.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

For President of the United States—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President of the United States—
ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in the Detroit Opera House, at Detroit,

ON THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1888,

At 11 o'clock a. m., to nominate candidates for state officers and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention

L. M. WESTON, Chairman.
WM. J. McGEE, Assistant Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix County is entitled to four delegates.

The campaign slander against the family of President Cleveland has already begun. In a few weeks the republican papers will be full of it.

Mrs. John A. Logan is reported as a conspicuous figure in the Chicago convention, using her influence in aid of the settlement of certain old political scores.

You can buy the Oliver Chilled Plow, made at South Bend, Ind., in Canada for $8, but you have to pay $17 for it in the United States. Oh, Protection is not added to the cost of plows. Oh no!—Cheboygan Democrat.

J. W. Fitzmaurice of Cheboygan denies the truth of Mrs. Obenauer's statement that young girls are detained in dens of infamy in the lumber regions against their will. While many disgraceful things do occur, the girls are there of their own choice.

The republicans are in favor of tariff reform—some other year. They want to reduce taxes—whenever they, and they alone, can secure the credit for it. They want to strengthen the coast defenses of the country—when they return to power. They are the boldest champions of civil service reform—when they are out of power. —Governor Hill's speech.

Boyne.

Boyne, June 18.—The thermometer stood 92 degrees in the shade today for some time.

Miss Dell Hill and brother Ervin will start for Phoenix, Arizona, on Wednesday, June 20.

G. W. Jones who has been sojourning at Newberry and the Soo, returned the other day and reports dull times, and says Boyne suits him to live in vastly better than any place he saw in the north.

Every two or three days J. C. Schaub ships another hundred cords of wood to the Pine Lake Iron Co. at Ironton.

R. L. Corbett, W. J. Lewis, S. B. Thatcher and E. F. Allen have gone to Chicago to attend the convention that meets there this week to nominate a candidate to walk in the triumph of democracy next November.

D. Halliday was up from Manton the other day and while here sold his house and lot on Main street to Geo. Persons for $900. Mr. Persons is one of the heroes who faced the cohorts of Stonewall Jackson on the night that doughty warrior fell. And he has cause to remember it for it was his nineteenth birthday, and he received a bullet through his leg which eventually rendered its amputation necessary; another through his right forearm smashing the bone to atoms, and still another through his left wrist.

Eveline.

Hot weather the past week.

Strawberries and cream will soon be plentiful.

The Pine Lake Iron Co. lost a valuable horse last Saturday by falling from a tramway.

A new coat of paint on the roof of the Congregational church makes quite an improvement in its appearance.

R. Miller has gone to Kalamazoo this week on business.

D. N. Gregory has planted 40 bu. of potatoes this spring.

Potatoes corn and all kinds of crops are looking splendid.

A big fight in Ironton last week caused by to much bad whiskey from East Jordan. Ironton is not a very enterprising place but the people are proud to know that they have no saloons to disturb their neighbors with and it seems as though some of our sister villages might have the same thing to be proud of if they would.

June 19th.—Beautiful weather of late.

Grass is looking splendid.

J. S. Smithson gave a very interesting address to a large congregation in the grove Sunday.

Corn is looking well.

Mrs. Oudekerk is visiting her brothers John and Rodney Bogart this week.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL.

Graduating Exercises of the Class of 1888.

On Tuesday evening, June 19th, occurred the exercises of the first graduating class of the Charlevoix high school.

Promptly at 8.00 o'clock all the seats were filled and the exercises commenced by a chorus of nearly fifty voices. Rev. W. H. McCartney then read an appropriate selection of scripture, and offered prayer.

Miss Luna E. Washburn read the class history as follows:

"For the structures that we raise,
Time is with materials filled.
Our to-days and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build."

In the beginning of the school year 1886-7 the first class was composed of but three members—Maggie Enos, Jennie Stover, and Luna Washburn. A consultation was called by the principal, the class meeting in the old recitation room of the village hall building. As the first class was only six months in advance of the second, it was thought best to unite them, thus organizing the graduating class of 1888. After this union the class numbered nine. Our motto, "We Rise by the Trifles Beneath Our Feet," was selected and put up in the school room. Within a few weeks Sadie Miller withdrew because of ill health. Soon after Adella Patten joined the class, keeping the number nine until the fall term of 1887 when she concluded to "wield the rod" and teach young urchins how to climb the "hill of science." The next to sever connection was Florence Smith, who preferred to make "pi" in the Sentinel office. And now, when we have so nearly reached the goal toward which we have been looking all these years past, another classmate falls out of the race. It is Blanche Bartholomew, who was compelled through sickness to leave when her time was but ninty. The class now numbers but six. [Miss Washburn here gave an interesting biographical sketch of each member of the class, stating the date and place of birth, and some of the principal events of their early school days, which we have condensed considerably.]

Maggie Enos was born June 30, 1870, in Ovid, Mich., at which place she spent the first two years of her school life. Her parents removed to Cadillac, where she continued for six years, completing some of the high school studies. Coming to Charlevoix in 1883, she finished her high school course here, and was chosen by the class to pronounce the valedictory address.

Jennie Stover was born in Norwich, Ont., Nov. 25, 1869. Three years later her parents removed to Charlevoix, and her entire school life has been spent here. Has successfully taught two terms of school, and is the happy possessor of a second grade certificate. Being a hard-working and careful student, we selected her as the one best fitted to write on our class motto.

Josie Litzan was born in Traverse City, Dec. 16, 1869. Attended the public schools of that city until four years ago, when she entered the Charlevoix schools. Has taught two terms of school with success. Tonight she will give us her ideas on the subject: "An education: what is it?"

Phila Wood was born at Norwood Feb. 23, 1872. Her entire school life has been spent in Charlevoix. Like the oracles of old, she will unfold to us this evening the mysteries of our future.

Edith Hawkins was born in Hastings, Mich., March 19, 1872. A part of her school life was spent in Grand Rapids, until her parents removed to Charlevoix. For a parting injunction she reminds us of our mission.

Luna Washburn was born Aug. 16, 1869, in Charlevoix. The only member of the class who is a native of the village. Therefore was chosen class biographer.

Of the six graduates, three have laid the foundations of their future greatness here.

At the conclusion of Miss Washburne's essay, Rev. W. G. Clark gave an address on the relation of the schools to society, and answered in a very interesting manner the questions: What Shall the School demand of Society? and What Shall Society demand of the Schools?

W. A. Smith and Miss Florence M. Smith then favored the audience with a pleasing vocal duet.

JennieStover's subject was the class motto: "We Rise by the Trifles Beneath Our Feet."

In the lower level, which men occupy by nature, they are alike. It is in their looking toward something higher that they differ. Suppose a man to be educated only physically, and not mentally and morally. His supreme happiness is in gratifying the desires of the flesh, or those sensual enjoyments alone which lift him above the animal only as they manifest a higher degree of animal life. But let his mental and moral faculties be developed, and he is capable of filling with honor any station in life. This culture is not reached in a single bound. We separate from each other, some rising, and some falling behind, in the pursuit of that which is good, by almost imperceptible degrees. If there is anything great or good in store for you, it will not come down to your level, nor can it be reached by pursuing your own ease and comfort.

"The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

We must have a worthy aim; then a determination to reach that at which we aim. Following this must be persistent efforts to reach practically what we mentally conceived. To these add firmness and courage, so that when we take a step in any direction, we may be able to maintain it regardless of consequences.

In this age an education is deemed essential to the realization of a truly high aim. But what constitutes the superiority of educated persons? Knowledge is that, indeed, which, next to virtue, raises one man above another. Yet knowledge, however vast its stores may be, is not sufficient to make the man rise. It is but the material with which wisdom builds. The mind has to shape, to square, and to polish it. Nothing is so essential for the production of good as a highly cultivated intellect. Birth, wealth, and official station, may and do secure to their possessors an outside superficial courtesy, but they never can command the reverence of the heart. It is only to the man of large and noble soul, to him who blends an upright heart with a cultivated intellect, that men yield the tribute of deep and genuine respect. On the moral side a strong mental discernment marks him as capable of the highest station. Every person has this principle of excellence which can be developed by a wise course of training and discipline. There must be a culture of the heart as well as the intellectual and moral natures, to insure the balance of all the faculties which wins admiration, respect, and affection. But we must put away all dreams of superiority, unless we are determined to lift ourselves by untiring labor to the level to which we aspire. It is only by persevering efforts and patience to wait for satisfactory results, that it can be reached. It was labor that built the pyramids, and labor is essential to the happiness and success of all. We are liable to look at the difficulties in our way in the aggregate, and be discouraged by them. In like manner we are inclined to see the little opportunities for learning, wealth, or character as single units of little value, and to underestimate them. But fortune favors few with great and good things. If a man were raised suddenly to the realization of some high ambition, there is danger that he could not long enjoy it, because he has had no foundation. "Life is history, not poetry; it consists mainly of little things, rarely illuminated by flashes of great heroism, rarely broken by great dangers, or requiring great exertions." We must be content with the little things, for be few in number, yet the aggregate of them depends on this earth, is from little things combined. A single star in the night seems nothing; but a myriad of scattered stars break up the night and make it beautiful. The sapling grows by nature tall and straight; but let it by some little fault be bruised or twisted, it grows gnarled and contorted, and makes the hollow oak. The dangerous bar at the harbor's mouth is only grains of sand.

In all the activities of human life, men seldom rise by great strokes of fortune. The morning values even the smallest fraction, and counts his gains and grows rich by pennies, or he goes into bankruptcy by little losses that for a day or a year would be unnoticed. The farmer, the mechanic, and the common laborer gain by slow accumulations the experience which makes them independent. The sculptor will work for weeks moulding the face. Even a few grains taken off or left on in the wrong place would ruin the whole expression.

"Trifles make perfection, but perfection is no trifle." In our school studies, letters and words are little things. Yet combinations of these make words, and all our language, with its animated power of expression, is made up of letters rightly placed. These are all improvements on the place, laborious ways of which the savages conveyed their ideas. If at times we fail in our lessons, is it any reason we should be discouraged? Should we rather not try to do better in the future, bearing in mind that every new thought is something toward the many things to be attained? For this world is made up of little things.

Thus our characters are indicated by little things.—the result of little things. Man is said to be a bundle of habits. His character is made up of habits gained by victories over little difficulties and temptations, which seem to offer but small reward for mastering. We are strongr as we have the habit of mastering, or weak with the opposite habit of yielding. Planets do not govern the souls and destinies of men, but trifles light as straws are the levers in building the human character.

Josie M. Litzan answered the question, "An Education; What is it?" with the following interesting paragraph:

The proverb of Solomon that "knowledge is better than riches" is universally admitted as true, though not always accepted as such in practice. An education, if it give such knowledge as the wise man meant, is certainly worth all the expense involved in its acquisition. But sometimes from a wrong view of what constitutes an education that is truly valuable, much time, money and labor are wasted. It is therefore necessary to understand of what an education consists.

It is not merely the accumulation of knowledge, or the quantity of facts stored in the mind. It is a mistaken idea that when the mind is filled with a great mass of definitions and principles of science, or rules and formulas of mathematics, an education has been secured. A person may be thoroughly master one branch of study and if it did not help him in the practical affairs of life, it could not in the truest sense of the term be called an education.

An education consists more in the power to apply our knowledge to the affairs of life, to promote health of body, temporal success and happiness of mind and soul, than in the knowledge itself. We may be well-versed in the learning of books but if we cannot use our knowledge in a way that will benefit mankind, we lack the true education. While the knowledge to be gained by a college course should be secured, if possible, the common school education should not be neglected nor despised, for it is that which is needed daily. Milton says:

"Not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom."

In order to use our knowledge wisely, good judgment is needed. This is gained only by experience. He who has been kept from boyhood to manhood in within the narrow circumference of his schoolroom, although he may have mastered all the arts and sciences, is deficient in that knowledge of the world and its activities, necessary to prepare him for his life work. But he who has been accustomed to think and act for himself has acquired the power to receive, investigate, and arrange all ideas presented to the mind, forming for himself a standard of duty and conscience. Sound judgment will regulate and direct the other faculties, restraining them, when necessary, and preventing them wandering into unprofitable efforts.

An education embraces also the exercise and training of the intellectual faculties: the direction and growth of the mind. By the exercise of the mind in a course of study, studious habits are acquired and the mental powers strengthened. With power developed, the mind loves to deal with the further development of its faculties and the tendency grows with exercise. By judiciously exercising our mental powers, we experience a satisfaction by which we know we are fulfilling one of the great objects of our life. We find a delight in it which no existence circumscribed by the narrow limits of outward sense and more consciousness can afford. If the mind is not thus strengthened and established in habits of exercise leading to the growth and development of the individual's highest nature, another direction, less noble than a studious life, will be taken. Our mind is like a fire, until quenched, it must feed upon something—upon the pure spirit of knowledge, or the foul dregs of passion.

But an education consists of more than the development of merely the intellectual faculties. Daniel Webster said: "Knowledge does not comprise all that is contained in the large term of education. The feelings are to be disciplined, the passions are to be restrained; true and worthy motives are to be inspired; a profound religious feeling is to be instilled, and pure morality inculcated under all circumstances. All this is contained in education." It is, in brief, the development and training of the mind until its action is in the highest sphere, come forth spontaneously. It is the unconscious result of all the powers of intellect and heart and soul, with which man has been endowed, giving effective power to his energies, thus making them available for good to the individual and to the world. Not, though, in having reached a certain height, but with whatever he may have gained, the power and the disposition to use this as a vantage-ground from which to go on to higher attainments and greater successes in the pursuit of true wisdom.

Will this value of an education is found chiefly in the happiness which it brings to its possessor. An educated man is a source of many rational enjoyments from the outward senses, but those moments when he is wrapped in the sublime realities are among the happiest of his life. He who possesses a good education has secured that which no reverse of fortune can take away, but which will cling to him during all his life. An education will open to him boundless avenues of thought. It will make his motives, laudable his energizing powers, strong; his resources, illimitable; it will make him more powerful than his uneducated companions and lift him above them in all relations in life.

"The Mission of the Girl Graduate" was shown in an admirable twenty-minute essay, by Edith M. Hawkins.

In olden times woman was thought incapable of receiving an education equal to that of man. At first she was merely a slave, needing no knowledge but that of the management of domestic concerns, with perhaps a little reading and writing. In intermediate times she was considered, when she was thought of only as regarded her ability to grace some home, and obey some lord and master of creation. Girls were fitted for none but domestic employment; popular prejudice was everywhere against the mental superiority of man, decreed that to do so would be out of harmony with the design for which she was created. * * * Women were formally taught according to their station or rank. Those of the lower classes being nothing but drudges, while ladies of nobility were treated as playthings or ornaments, their accomplishments were considered in nothing;—in fact, they were supposed to have no minds of their own, to say nothing of opinions.

With the march of time everything has progressed. Men are beginning to think that perhaps they may be benefited by an education after all. Step by step prejudices of the olden times have been conquered. Girls schools and female seminaries at first offered her a means of education; then the common schools embodied the idea of universal education; finally colleges opened their doors, giving her the opportunity to complete what is begun in the lower schools. Many of these places of learning are maintained by the state, and they are constantly multiplying. In most of them no distinction of sex is made. Boys and girls alike pursue the same course of study, and, with equal success, finish it, and the girls graduate with honors equal to their stronger companions. * * * In this nineteenth century there is scarcely an employment followed by men, that is not also engaged in by women. Some of the best writers are women, but it was not until this century that they were recognized as authors. Everyone will concede that for reporters no man can equal a woman. In some newspaper offices, where women are employed the publishers acknowledge that their papers are much more spicy and readable than when men only were employed. As physicians, women have also distinguished themselves. No man may engage successfully in any occupation she chooses, and in any field there she proves herself to be, her influence is almost unlimited. Without departing from what has been recognized as her proper sphere, she can exert this influence, and almost unconsciously mould public opinion at her will. What revolutions might not be wrought by women, even young women, guided by cultivated tastes, and with clear views of life and its truest aims, which an education should give. With these opportunities opening and multiplying, with her aid demanded in almost all fields of labor, the duty is upon her of better education, and this she avails herself of, with perhaps a few eagerly striving to secure. As education increases her power and broadens her influence, her duties will also be increased, but she will be better able to perform them. * * * The "girl graduate" is called upon, by her superior privileges, to take a leading position in the work of improvement, both from the power derived from her educational advantages, and also because these advantages place her under greater obligations to society. Woman's course is plain. Let us improve our opportunities, and reap for ourselves the golden harvest which lies before us.

Mrs. Kane and Miss Cochran favored the audience with an instrumental duet.

How Miss Phila Wood could crowd so much interesting matter into a fourteen-minute essay, can only be explained by the fact that she is a rapid, distinct reader, and interested her hearers with every word uttered. We regret the necessity of giving only a brief outline of her "Class Prophecy."

All of us, old as well as young, have a natural tendency to look into the future. Acting upon this impulse of human nature, our class have anticipated each their graduate life, and one to foretell what is in store for them in the years to come. I cannot say to what extent my efforts may meet with their expectations, but they kind of necessity said for the future, leaving shreds of time to unfold the truth or falsity of my predictions.

Jennie Stover will fit herself for a school teacher, and an excellent one she will make too. Commencing in an "out-of-the-way" county school, she will have a great deal to contend with, and will have undergone the usual vastages of poor boarding places, worse school houses, and long distances to walk in all kinds of weather. The scholars will be few in number, and she will observe a great scarcity of brain tissue. Patience and perseverence will overcome all discouragements, and the success of that term will give her a chance to decline a second term. As a teacher she will progress until she becomes a teacher of mathematics, devoting about seven years to that work. Becoming tired of teaching, she will take a complete course of study of law, and graduate a full-fledged lawyer, in which profession she will succeed by doing well whatever she undertakes.

Luna Washburne will go to Ann Arbor and take the high school course which will fit her for college, perhaps Vassar, and will distinguish herself for learning. After she has finished school she will become interested in the question of "woman suffrage," and will do effective work for the cause of temperance. In recognition of her superior merits she will be nominated for president, but will be defeated by the man who has such handsome black eyes and lovely head.

Marguerite Enos is going to choose her entire time to music, at the Conservatory of Music, Cincinnati. She will take the complete course, and afterward become one of the leading teachers of the institution. After years of sight years she will buy a home ranch in Texas and be lost to the musical world. In later years a passenger on a disabled train will seek rest and shelter at her house, and they will recognize each other as old friends and class-mates. She will become very wealthy, and will enjoy her romantic life.

Josie Litzan will probably teach school a short time, but will not be contented with that profession. She will be impressed with the necessity of preaching the gospel, and will grow in her work from the country school house to some of the larger churches, leading many to live better lives. As a missionary she will remain five years on a distant island, doing a noble work. Her piousness rather attracts all with whom she comes in contact, and her friends are numerous and firm.

Edith Hawkins will go to Chicago, will prospect for a time, and finally settle in the suburbs of that city. To occupy her time she will start a small monthly magazine, which will grow in size and influence to rank with the best in the land. She will write several novels which will become very popular, and her magazine will continue to increase in size and value by reason of her own work. She will have to support an invalid husband who was once a promising young editor of a rural paper, but who disposed of his business and added his name to the already countless invalid list.

The last on the roll is Phila Wood. But as prophets are unable to tell their own future, I will leave my future to you, to picture as may suit your fancy. One thing I might say, however; I am a vile of different times tempted to share labors and fortunes of some of my classmates. Whether I shall be in the missionary field of our devoted Josie, the ups and downs of political agitation with our class historian, the law office of Luna, the trials and vexations of authorship and editorial duties with our young est classmate, or the wild freedom of the Texas ranch with the valedictorian, I cannot easily settle in my mind. Just now I feel like finding a safe retreat in some far off wilderness, and am tempted to try the ranch.

To the valedictory M. Marguerite Enos discussed the practical future of the class in a pleasing manner in closing high and noble conceptions of life. Her manuscript having been promised in advance to the Sentinel, and Mr. Smith declining to consent that it should come to the Journal first we are unable to give even a brief abstract of it, not having made any notes during its delivery.

Mrs. Mayme and Mr. Hines rendered a pleasing vocal duet, after which Prof. Enos conferred the diplomas. In his address he reviewed the work of the class recalling many of its pleasant features and pointed out some of the duties sure to fall to the lot of the graduates.
